No man who has ever shared the honors of its flag is willing to exchange them for the honors of any other flag that floats on sea or land. So that there is no disposition on the part of Americans to emigrate. But this country is filling up annually with from six hundred thousand to a million of new acquisitions of population from other countries. That is keeping on and on. Every man who comes here requires that much more of currency created by law in this country in order to transact his business. If we had as many people in the United States to-day as there are in China, which has not much over two-thirds of the area of territory that we possess, the amount of money that we have here of all kinds and descriptions, gold, silver, paper money, national-bank notes, and Treasury certificates, would not be one-third of what would be requisite for carrying on the business of the country, and paralysis would take place in all classes of industry almost instantaneously.

As the country expands and as it grows without expansion it is the duty of the Government of the United States to increase the volume of sound money, just such sound money as is provided for in the seventh section of this bill. I can not assume in justice to the honorable Senator from Ohio that in the seventh section of this bill he proposes to pay to the Puerto Ricans any unsound money for the Spanish pesos and pesetas. He takes a Spanish peso and he prices it at 60 cents, and pays for it with silver coin. You are not giving that man unsound money; you are not tricking him out of his little earnings and sending to him silver money which is unsound. That would not do; that would be immoral; that would be, Mr. President, scarcely less than petit larceny by an act of Congress.

So it is sound money that we are giving to those people, and it is sound money that I propose to issue dollar for dollar, gold and silver in company, so that no silver dollar shall issue without its accompanying dollar of gold. That is sound money, and if gold is the redeemer, it needs no other atonement. It is that much sounder than the silver would be by itself if the Republican doctrine is true. I accept the situation for the sake of the argument, not because it is true. Out goes the silver dollar, attended by its escort and redeemer, the gold dollar; one can not go without the other. In doing that we are filling up the substratum, the real foundation, the basis of currency in this country, to meet the many exigencies that are arising, exigencies created by immigration to this country, exigencies created by the expansion of our territorial domain; exigencies created, Mr. President, by the command of the Almighty that we shall make good use of all the materials we have in our possession that He has bestowed upon us. We can not ignore that duty without doing ourselves a serious and an unchristian wrong.

I have now, I think, explained this matter so far as it is necessary to go with it at the present time. If anyone else wishes to discuss this subject, I shall be very glad to hear some objections that can be urged against this measure; I shall be very glad to have pointed out to me some disadvantage it can possibly be to the people of the United States or the people of Puerto Rico.

My purpose in bringing the question forward, Mr. President, is not the mere idea of a party man trying to gain a political advantage. I present this subject at the first opportune moment, which has been furnished in the seventh section of this bill, and upon exactly the parallel principles that are found in the seventh section, for the purpose of inviting the attention of the Senate of the United States and the Congress and the people of the United States to the fact that we still have open to us under the gold law an opportunity to enlarge the specie basis of this country, to improve the value of our mines, and, Mr. President, above all, to hold them in the control of the Government of the United States.

If we pass this proposition that I present now to the Senate of the United States, it will not be one year until every dollar that can be taken out of the silver mines of the United States will be coined as it is taken out. Men will easily find the gold bullion to carry in company with their silver in order to get the right of joint deposit and to get the money that will result therefrom. This will cause the mints to increase their output of money with great rapidity, and it will bring into the coinage every dollar of silver that we can produce from our mines. Is that going to flood the country with iniquity and wrong and disaster and crime?

Has it ever been heard of, or will it ever be heard of, that it is an unjust thing or a dangerous thing to open the mines of this country and send out the silver and gold in equal quantities? Mr. President, that would destroy this competition between gold and silver, which means the competition between the capitalist and the ordinary toiler in the fields. Neither of them would have any advantage; but the toiler would have the right to produce, if he were a miner, at the point of his pick, when the sun went down upon his daily labor, the bullion which he can mint into money and circulate in the payment of his debts and the purchase of what he wants, without asking the consent of any banker that lives; and until we get into that condition we will not realize, as we did for seventy-three years in this Government, the true, real, actual, individual liberties of the citizen.

It is a part of my liberty, sir, that I have the right to have gold coin. That is secured to me by law. Why is it secured to me by law that I can take gold bullion and go to the mint in Philadelphia or to the Treasury here in Washington and demand its coinage, instead of keeping it in bullion in my pocket? Because that is secured to me by the Constitution of my country and by the law of my country. Why can I not take silver, if I hold that in bullion, and have that coined? It was a right that existed under the Constitution and under the laws of the United States and under the laws of England for two centuries before the Constitution of the United States was adopted.

I had that right, which a political party, for the purpose of setting up the national banks in supreme control of the financial affairs of this country, have taken away from me. That is all of it. I am a man robbed of his rights as an American citizen by an act that I consider, Mr. President, unconstitutional and excessively cruel and very unjust to the whole country; and I think it is a shameful defiance of the laws of God—that is my view about the silver question—a shameful defiance of the laws of God.

Now, sir, when I offer to do this, when I present the proposition to the Senator from Ohio, following the principles of the proposition he himself has offered in this bill, not departing from them one iota, it can not be said of me that I am attempting to work some political purpose; it can not be said of me that I am bringing up a subject of irritation for the purpose of delaying the Puerto Rican government, which I am very anxious should be established by this bill.

I do it, Mr. President, for the purpose of addressing myself to this question at a moment and under circumstances where I have the precedent and the rule laid down in section 7 of this bill. I follow it strictly, closely, and do not depart from it; and I insist that I have the right, under the logic of the seventh section, to extend this free-coinage privilege that is given to the Puerto Rican citizen, so as to recover back my right to have silver coined if I can produce gold to accompany it, and to let the two metals accompany each other.

The voting down of this amendment, Mr. President, will be the final declaration on the part of the Senate of the United States that no more silver dollars in this country shall ever be coined so long as the Republican party has the power to prevent it. Now, I am willing to meet them on that issue, politically speaking. If they have the judgment which I suppose they are possessed of, they will hesitate a long time before they raise a question of that kind in the campaign to be determined in November next; for when the people of the United States see that this gold law means that there is to be no more silver coined forever so long as the Republican party is in power, they will make way for putting that party out of power very suddenly.

There is nothing demanded here that is not right, that is not constitutional, that is not just and equitable, that is not safe. If any Senator wants to discuss this question after I take my seat, I hope he will address himself to any possible danger that might arise out of the adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I only want to say before a vote is taken that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama is in the nature of general legislation, while the legislation under consideration has reference only to Puerto Rico and to affairs and questions concerning Puerto Rico.

The provision the Senator finds in section 7 is not a provision, as I understood him to characterize it, providing for the free coinage of silver bullion, but it is a provision for the exchange and redemption of Puerto Rican coins in the manner provided in that section, in order that the people of Puerto Rico may have for the transaction of their business only one kind of coin, and that American coin. The whole purpose of the provision is to meet a necessity which is existing in that island, and which, according to present conditions, is working very great hardship in the way of a handicap, as it were, upon all kinds of business transactions.

It does not seem to be necessary, Mr. President, to answer the Senator further than to simply make this general statement. I think the statement of the Senator that the provision is in the nature of a provision for free coinage generally is entirely unwarranted and that his amendment is out of harmony with this bill. We are not in favor of the free coinage of silver, even when tendered with such compliments as the Senator saw fit to bestow upon the author of the section in question.

It is always a delight, Mr. President, to hear the Senator from Alabama. He is so able and so fertile; he is so kind; he is so agreeable that I hope the day is far distant when he will not belong in this Chamber. He is a delight to every member of this body, and he enjoys the unqualified respect and esteem of all who are in political opposition to him. That is well known to all here, but that is not enough to induce us to accept this amendment.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator will understand that we are not showing any lack of appreciation for the proposition he has made in dismissing the matter without discussing it at length and in the serious way in which he has presented it to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this proposition can not be passed over and will not be passed over by the people of the United States in any light way.

The Senator makes a distinction, or attempts to do so, between the redemption of a peseta or peso of the Puerto Rican coinage and the coinage of American bullion. Suppose I should change the phraseology of my amendment, and say that when $100 of gold and $100 of silver, the product of an American mine, is presented at a mint, it shall be redeemed in the coin of the United States, of gold or silver, at the rate of 371¼ grains of pure silver or 23.25 grains of pure gold, would there be any difference between the two propositions? There would be only a difference in words.

When I have the right to deposit gold and silver at the mints and demand for it the coinage of the United States to be handed back to me, whether that coinage shall consist of the same metal or some other metal, it makes no difference—that is the redemption, if you please to call it such, of the bullion in the coin; it is a conversion, to use the proper term; and while the Senator has used the word "redemption" here, it is only a conversion; it is a change of the Spanish peseta into the American dollar or the Spanish peso into the American dollar or other American coin; for the bill provides that when this coin is deposited by the holder in his own right in a mint of the United States it shall be coined into the silver money of the United States. It is redeemed; it is converted; it is changed; it is coined.

The idea and the principle is precisely the same, and there is no refinement of language or argumentation that can get away from the main fact that we give to the Puerto Ricans here the right to come or to anybody who owns those pesetas or pesos the right to come to the mint, to deposit them, and have them coined, and to receive for them the silver coins of the United States. That is all I claim for the people of the United States.

The Senator spoke as if the people of Puerto Rico were not to be citizens of the United States; that it was a favor given to some foreign people, some people in some peculiar situation. Well, that only makes the argument stronger in my favor, for we ought to do for our own citizens what we are not compelled to do for citizens of other countries, if the argument is that they are not citizens. But they are citizens. The treaty of Paris makes them citizens. It puts it in the power of the Government of the United States to use them in its armies, to do anything else with them, to force their obedience to our laws, and they are subject to our power. If in that light they are not citizens of the United States, then we have no citizens. I do not know what their powers may be as provided by act of Congress, and I have not looked at that subject as it is presented in this bill; but I do claim that they are citizens of the United States in respect to this particular function and power which is given to them in the seventh section of this bill.

No, sir; this matter can not pass off lightly; it can not pass off without notice; it is a serious proposition; it is not out of order; it is no departure from the principle or the plan of the bill; it is directly in line with it; it is the subject of legitimate legislation, just as much so as when the seventh section gives the right of coinage or the right of redemption or the right of exchange in favor of the owner of Spanish money—just the same.

It may be, Mr. President, that the country have not caught upon the idea, it may be that they have not yet appreciated the situation in regard to the gold law. That is very true. Our people are as dead as if they were frozen in an Alaskan glacier on the subject of gold and silver at this moment; but as soon as the people have discovered the work that has been done against them you will see, Mr. President, that the reaction will be volcanic. The people will rise in their majesty, and they will throw off the men and the powers that have enchained them in that gold law. I am furnishing the Senators now an opportunity to pacify the people; an opportunity to do them justice; an opportunity to show that the Republican party of the United States are not for ever and ever compelled by their present committals against the restoration of silver money to the people of this country.

Is silver dead absolutely? Is the silver dollar gone out of the coinage, gone out of existence, except something that remains to be redeemed? Has it now become so thoroughly demonetized that it requires the action of the Congress of the United States to bring it back to life? That seems to be the situation. It has been destroyed. There is no doubt about that, Mr. President. Silver money is in nothing like so favorable a condition to-day as it was when the John Sherman Act of 1873 was passed. The act of this Congress in passing the gold bill has placed silver money in a far worse condition than it was placed in 1873; and yet the people seem to be sadly looking on. They are dazed. They have not yet comprehended what has happened to them.

Some of us understand it and have been trying to inform them as to the great outrage which has been perpetrated upon them in that bill; and now when I come forward with a measure which will give the people very great relief, they say that because they like me they do not wish to treat the subject very harshly; they do not wish to debate it because they are pleased with me and my presence in this Chamber. I warn Senators that they must not think the crow will drop the grapes from his mouth because the fox at the foot of the tree is trying to beguile him.

This movement which is going on here before the Senate, where 90 per cent of the seats are vacant, when the Senators are off amusing themselves or attending to other matters of business, will strike to the very bottom of the political situation of this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Alabama to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MORGAN. I did not. The people of the United States will call this debate in question. They will examine into what is being said. They will examine into the merits of this amendment. They will hold the Republican party of this country responsible for what the Senator from Ohio has said here this evening—that the subject is hardly worthy of consideration.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, Mr. President, I did not say the subject was not worthy of consideration. The Senator entirely misunderstood my remarks if he thought I said any such thing. I think it is a very important subject; but I said the amendment of the Senator is in the nature of general legislation, and therefore we did not feel disposed to take it into serious consideration in connection with this bill, which is special, simply providing a civil government for Puerto Rico and dealing only with Puerto Rican affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose it is in the nature of general legislation. Where is legislation more general than that found in this bill? It is the first effort we are making to control these Spanish possessions. There is wrapped up in the provisions of this bill more general legislation than I ever saw in one bill. There are more general provisions, each one extremely important, found in the body of this bill than in any other bill which has been reported to the Senate since I have been in the body. It is a new movement on the part of the United States. It includes every interest of everybody, not only in the Spanish islands but in the entire country. It includes the most profound discussions and considerations of the Constitution of the United States in all of its bearings and in regard to all of its departments, legislative, executive, and judicial.

This is, sir, a general bill, as much a general bill as any that was ever offered at that desk; and general legislation, providing for the people of the United States, is as much at home upon this bill as it would have been upon the gold bill. It is not only at home, but it is here by invitation, for the gentlemen, finding that they could not get along without providing silver money for Puerto Rico, have come back to the general proposition that it is their duty to do it, and they are proposing to supply that money by what they call an act of exchange or redemption of Puerto Rican money into American coin.

What obligations are we under to redeem Puerto Rican money? Put it upon that ground—that this money shall be redeemed at the Treasury. Are we under an obligation to those people that their money shall be as good as gold? If we have come under any obligations at all, that is the effect—that their money, which was as good as gold in Puerto Rico and circulated freely as legal tender, shall be as good as gold in the United States. But instead of complying with that obligation, we price it at 60 cents on the dollar, put our own price on it, and compel them to do it or else banish it from the island. That is the legislation we are indulging in here, legislation of the most general character.

A man anywhere who owns one of these pieces of money can go and demand its redemption at 60 cents on the dollar at any mint in the United States. A citizen of the United States or of Spain (whether he resides in one of these States or Territories or in Puerto Rico makes no difference under this bill) has the general, universal right to go and demand redemption. Is not that general legislation? Is not that legislation that affects everybody in the United States?

How can the Senator content himself with answering the argument that has been made here this afternoon, and others very much stronger that could be made by abler men, by saying that this appears to be a departure; that this is specific legislation for Puerto Rico and not general legislation. Sir, we are always engaged in general legislation when we are dealing with the principles of this Government, and especially those that are based upon the Constitution of the United States. We can not escape it. Senators need not suppose that there is any possibility of escaping the full measure of responsibility to the people of the United States for the rejection of this amendment. It is an important subject. It is a proper subject.

The view I present in this amendment is a just view. If it is unjust toward any person in the world, it is toward those who own silver bullion, the product of American mines. I repeat that we have limited the right to the citizens of the United States and to bullion produced in American mines that has never been mined or wrought into articles of commerce, and we have priced it upon exactly the basis that obtains to-day between gold and silver coins in this country; that is to say, the basis of 16 to 1. That obtains here now. Nobody has ever attempted to change it until we come to this bill, when the basis is changed to a different rate and 30 per cent is knocked off the value of a silver peso, nine-tenths fine, standard silver. Thirty per cent is knocked off in order to give those people down there the money.

How much money are we going to make out of this and at what rate are you going to coin this bullion when you get it into the Treasury of the United States? Four hundred and twelve and a half grains make a dollar, and we buy that much money from these Puerto Ricans, by compulsion, at 60 cents. That is what this bill provides for. We compel them to go without money or take it at 60 cents on the dollar.

What kind of justice is that to them, if you please? Why not say to them, "You shall bring your money into the Treasury of the United States, to the mints of the United States, and have it coined in any of the mints at the rate of 16 grains of pure gold for 371¼ grains of pure silver?" Why not say that to them? Why do we not place their silver money upon exactly the same basis that other silver money occupies in this country to-day? For it can not be denied that a legal-tender silver dollar, if there is any such existing in the United States now, does contain 412½ grains of silver, nine-tenths fine. That can not be disputed.

When we are dealing with this subject we ought not to act arbitrarily. We ought to deal with it on principles of exact justice. The Government of the United States will make money, large money, out of the seventh section of the bill and out of the poor Puerto Ricans. It is bound to do it, for a peso containing as much silver as there is in an American dollar is brought here under the compulsion of this law and "redeemed" at 60 cents.

There is a margin of 30 cents on the dollar that we are making as a Government for giving them the privilege of using our coin; exchanging it, as they call it; redemption, they call it, when we are under no obligation to redeem; when there is no promise outstanding for redemption. There is no redemption about it, because there is no promise to be redeemed. There is no obligation to be lifted. Under this specious and improper word "redemption" we are forcing these people to deliver up their coins at the mints of the United States in exchange for American coin at 60 cents on the dollar. We call it redemption.

No, sir; it is free coinage. It gives them the privilege of doing it or not doing it. They can take this money and go to Spain with it, where it is at par, and use it there. The result of the bill that we are passing now, in its seventh section, unattended with the section I propose, will be to drive the Spanish money out of Puerto Rico and leave those people poorer and worse off than they could possibly be in any other way.

The bill provides that after its passage nothing shall circulate there as legal tender except the money of the United States. What then becomes of all these pesos and pesetas, all the silver money in Puerto Rico, and what will become of it in the other islands, where about 13,000,000 people are in daily use of it? It will all be swept out and carried back to Spain. These islands will be denuded of silver currency until we can supply the place of it, and our laws do not provide any means of supplying the place of it except under a measure like that which passed here yesterday for the purchase of silver bullion to be coined into subsidiary coin of the United States.

There is no power in the United States to-day to coin a legal-tender silver dollar. There is no possibility of it, and a legal-tender silver dollar could not go into Cuba or Puerto Rico or the Philippine Islands or any of the late Spanish possessions unless we take it there through our Governmental agencies and pay it to the people out of the money already coined into silver dollars. The fate of the silver dollars was sealed by the gold bill. No other silver dollars ever will be or can be coined while that bill is the law of the United States. Here comes the island of Puerto Rico, with a million inhabitants, knocking at the doors of the consciences of the Senate, finding a ready response in the heart of the honorable Senator from Ohio, who proposes to them "if you will take 60 cents on the dollar for your peseta that is worth a hundred cents we will let you have American coin for it."

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, does he not know that this peso in Puerto Rico is now worth in our money really only about 45 or 48 cents?

Mr. MORGAN. I think so.

Mr. FORAKER. And that we are proposing to give them 60 cents, as the Senator said a while ago, in gold, I believe, or the equivalent of gold at any rate.

Mr. MORGAN. This is a very munificent thing. We are rich and can afford to do that. Why not give them a dollar?

Mr. FORAKER. What I wanted to call to the attention of the Senator is the fact that we are not seeking to deprive them of any value, but we are paying them far in excess of the real value, which is all they can realize there.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question right here?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask if it is not true that the peso of which he speaks contains an ounce of silver, and if we take it and redeem it in silver or gold, American money, and coin it, will we not really coin it into a dollar and will we not get a dollar for it? It contains the same amount of silver, I understand, that our silver dollars contain.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know into what it will be coined, but I know it is worth only what I have indicated. We are proposing to pay them more for it than it is worth. If it be only bullion, as the Senator from Alabama stated, they are selling it at a good price, one advantageous to them. We are not compelling them to turn in their coins and to have them redeemed and to take other coins in exchange.

We are simply giving them that opportunity, in order that there may be only one kind of money in Puerto Rico. If they prefer to take their money to Spain or to send it there, where the Senator says it will have greater value, that is their privilege. They are not denied that. The Puerto Ricans, so far as I am aware, are not making any complaint, but they are very greatly pleased with the proposition. We are under no obligation to make their Puerto Rican coins legal tender there or elsewhere. We take the situation as we find it.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not true that we get from them the same amount of silver that we put into our silver dollars? If that is so, will we not really get a dollar's worth of silver from them and pay them 60 cents for it, and recoin it, and place it in circulation for a dollar?

Mr. FORAKER. It is true that we are paying them 60 cents for what we might buy elsewhere for less money. We can do with it as we like after we get it, I presume. The United States is not buying it with the idea of coining it into money and increasing the silver coinage of the country or of making any profit. If we were, we could buy all the silver we could coin for years to come for a much less price, as I understand it.

Mr. MORGAN. I called attention in the opening of my remarks on this subject to the fact that the seventh section of the bill requires this money to be coined into coins of the United States; whether it is dollars or half dollars or quarter dollars makes no difference. It is coin of the United States at the rate of 412½ grains of silver nine-tenths fine. The ounce of silver that is contained in a peso, as the Senator from Georgia very properly suggests, is worth a dollar in our coinage.

We go to the people whom we have brought within the influence of our sovereign power, who are entirely helpless, and we find them in possession of a coinage of silver without which they can not live, the only money in Puerto Rico they ever used in their business at all, and we say to them: "You are citizens of the United States; you are liable to serve in our armies; we can tax you; this bill taxes you; this bill imposes a government upon you that is very expensive, and all that; you have money here that rates at only 45 cents on the dollar, and we propose to raise it from 45 up to 60;" and the Senator from Ohio says that is a great benefaction to the people of Puerto Rico, and that the people down there are greatly pleased with it. Suppose we found a Territory in the American Union here within the body of our old organization that was in the same condition.

Would we ever think of taking up the money of the people of that territory at 60 cents on the dollar, as they have always used it, and paying them for it in coins of the United States at that rate? We do make 30 cents on every dollar, for the reason that the bill requires that the money shall be coined, and when we coin it the Spanish peso produces in value in gold 100 cents, and we pay for it 60 cents to the poor, miserable Puerto Ricans. That is what this bill does.

I did not intend to object to the bill on that account if I could get the privilege in favor of American citizens of doing what the Puerto Rican can do, come here and have his bullion coined. We say to the Puerto Rican, "You can bring it here to the mint and you shall have it coined. We will price it at 60 cents on the dollar." I say in the amendment to the American silver miner and the man who owns bullion in this country, "Bring your silver here; bring along with it its redeemer, gold; put them both to work at the same time, so that one shall have no advantage over the other, so that there shall be no inundation of either kind of metal, and we will give you the right to have your silver coined along with the gold. We will restore to you that personal privilege, and put it into your hands, so that you can go to the mint with your silver bullion, just as you can now go with the gold bullion, and demand the coinage of it as a right." That is what I want. That is the free coinage of silver.

People usually do not properly estimate the meaning of that phrase—"free coinage of silver." It does not mean that silver shall be coined without some payment for the manufacture of it from bullion into coin. It does not mean that you must go and melt up the spoons and dishes in the country to make silver money of them, though sometimes that would be very useful, especially in time of war. I have seen times, Mr. President [Mr. ALLEN in the chair], and you have, when that expedient would have been very valuable to both sides whom we were representing at that time. It does not mean that. The free coinage of silver means the right of the individual man who owns the bullion to take it to the mint, as he does when he owns gold, and demand the coinage of it.

It is the right of the free man to do with his property what the Constitution of the United States provided and what God intended when he made it. That is all. That is the free coinage of silver. The law fixes the rate. It fixes the rate between every silver dollar existing in the United States and every gold dollar—16 to 1. In this bill it is fixed at 60 cents on the dollar, which is a wrong and injustice to the Puerto Ricans, and it is one that we can not remedy in any other way so as to give those people silver money, except by giving them this privilege when they are American citizens, to bring the silver or allow somebody else to do it and have it coined without getting the consent of a certain class of people in the United States.

Mr. President, we are not on an equality with each other about these things. There is a certain very valuable class of property in the United States that the Almighty has never condemned, the experience of mankind has never condemned, a class of money that to-day your Government lives upon, for if you could take these silver dollars that exist in the United States to-day and melt them back into bullion your Government would go to ruin in twenty-four hours. It would go into bankrupty. Your banks would fail. Your business would stop. All the operations of commerce would cease. If we were to strike out of existence as coin and return it into existence as bullion the 800,000,000 silver dollars that we have coined since 1877 this Government would go to bankruptcy in twenty-four hours.

This Government is now living upon the silver that we have coined in this country through many trials and labors and tribulations in the last thirty years. That silver has a legal relation to gold at 16 to 1, and it will stay there. But there will not be a dollar added to it. It makes no difference what the growth of the country may be, what its necessities may be in time of famine or war or pestilence, the inexorable law of the gold bill that we passed here the other day forbids the coinage of another dollar of silver.

My heart, sir, leaped with joy when I found the honorable Senator from Ohio, a Republican, coming into this Chamber with a free-coinage proposition for silver. I propose to avail myself of it. I propose to improve upon it as I did once before, twenty-three years ago, when the honorable Stanley Matthews brought forward his celebrated resolutions. Upon that foundation all the work we have done since has been built.

I am glad that the Senator from Ohio has been forced by circumstances which were irresistible and which he tries now to smile away as if he were under no compulsion and under no pressure—I rejoice, sir, that the conditions of this country have forced him to bring this question to the front and have compelled him to put a free-coinage section in his bill. This is not to be laughed down. It is not to be passed by at an idle moment as an amusing episode in legislation. What is being said here now, not by me, but in the language of this amendment and this bill, will reach down to the hearts and consciences of the American people, and they will enact it at the expense of the Republican party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY]. He not being present, I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] and will vote. I vote "nay.'

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is absent on account of family affliction. I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the negative). Inadvertently I voted in the absence of the Senator with whom I am paired, and I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that we exchange pairs, which will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. PETTUS. Very well, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PETTUS. I vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. He not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES. Suppose we transfer our pairs.

Mr. TURLEY. Very well. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], which will enable the junior Senator from Wisconsin and me to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WETMORE. My colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is unavoidably absent. On this question a pair has been arranged between him and the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES. By the arrangement which has been made I can now vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently on the roll call. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If agreeable, I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. If he were here, I would vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (after Mr. ALLEN had voted in the affirmative). The junior Senator from Nebraska being paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent, he withdraws his vote.

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], but I voted, believing that that Senator is in accord with me upon this proposition. Yet I do not know but that I ought to withdraw my vote, because I am not positive. Therefore I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], I understand, and with his permission we will transfer our pairs so that we can both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], and I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that we exchange pairs so that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] will stand paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. MORGAN. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. MCBRIDE. I vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. WETMORE (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Georgia has not voted.

Mr. WETMORE. Then I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. HANNA. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Montana (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who is not here, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Bate,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Stewart,
Berry,	Martin,	Pettus,	Turley.
Clay,

NAYS—25.

Bard,	Foster,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Chandler,	Frye,	Lodge,	Ross,
Clark, Wyo.	Hale,	McBride,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Hanna,	McComas,	Wellington.
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,
Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Perkins,
Foraker,	Kean,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—53.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	McLaurin,	Spooner,
Allen,	Davis,	McMillan,	Sullivan,
Allison,	Depew,	Mallory,	Taliaferro,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Mason,	Teller,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Money,	Thurston,
Beveridge,	Gear,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Burrows,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Turner,
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Platt, Conn.	Vest,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Platt, N. Y.	Warren,
Carter,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,	Wetmore,
Chilton,	Kenney,	Rawlins,	Wolcott.
Clark, Mont.	Lindsay,	Scott,
Cockrell,	McCumber,	Sewell,
Culberson,	McEnery,	Simon,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum being present and voting, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 28, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 27, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. JOY indefinitely, on account of important business.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that general debate may run until 4 o'clock this afternoon, the time to be equally divided between this side and the other side of the Chamber, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the other half by myself.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, that is satisfactory to our side.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate on the military appropriation bill be concluded at 4 o'clock to-day, after which it will be considered under the five-minute rule, the time for general debate to be divided between the two sides, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I understood there should be coupled with that a further request that the gentlemen who speak on the bill should have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HULL. It was understood that if general debate was agreed to be closed at 4 o'clock, then there would be a request that all parties who spoke on the bill should be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. I will ask unanimous consent before going into committee that all members speaking on the bill may have ten days to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the gentleman from Iowa asks that unanimous consent be given to all gentlemen who speak on the bill to extend their remarks in the RECORD for ten days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LENTZ. That privilege is for ten days?

The SPEAKER. For ten days. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair, for consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of an appropriation bill the title to which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8562) making appropriation for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no one on this side that wants to speak now.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Charirman, we are face to face with an age of reckless and enormous appropriations, and especially large is the appropriation for the military arm of the country, and, Mr. Chairman, within the limited time allowed me I can not hope to go into any general discussion of this bill. It is a bill carrying a tremendous appropriation, somewhere in the neighborhood of $125,000,000, but it does seem to me that while there appears to be no particular objection to this bill upon general principles, it is a useless waste of time for members on both sides to be standing up here indulging in crimination and recrimination against each other instead of pointing out different items in the bill which it might appear ought to be eliminated as unnecessary. If they desire to economize and have an idea of economy, they might go to work and lop off some of the extravagance here and some of the extravagance there as it appears all along through the bill as reported to the House.

Now, while I do not propose to make any objections to any of these appropriations in a specific manner, for I have not the time,

I say that we are running into a channel of tremendous extravagance in making appropriations to defray the expenses of this great Government of ours, not only for the Army and Navy but in other departments. I took occasion some time ago to call the attention of the House to the fact that in view of these things we might begin to curtail expenses by looking over the pension rolls of this country and at least revising the plan of giving so much time to special legislation for the granting of pensions, and to call a halt at least long enough to reflect a moment or so in reference to such reckless expenditures in this Department.

And it seems to me that it would be a good idea, if it could be done, and it can be, to have published a list of those persons drawing a pension from the Government at the present time, stating the amount being drawn, how first obtained, and the general condition of the pensioner. These facts given to the public, I think, would make some very interesting reading indeed, especially at this time.

And, Mr. Chairman, right here, in view of the fact that I have been severely criticised by some parties and some papers for making that move, which I made with a view of economizing some of the expenses of this Government, by criticising special pension legislation, I want to send to the desk and have read in my time a letter that appeared in the Sunday Post of this city on the 11th of this month—a letter which will explain itself and will go for what it is worth. It will show that at least one gallant, brave, and courageous old Union soldier is not afraid to speak his mind, and before the letter is read and in order to emphasize my views upon certain questions and measures I want to say that I am opposed to imperialism, I am opposed to this Republican expansion, I am opposed to the enormous extravagance that is being indulged in at the present time by this Government, and I ask the Clerk please to read this letter, which gives me somewhat of a vindication, at least, for attempting to lop off some of the expenses of the Government in the way of private special pension legislation as well as in other directions.

That letter was written by a brave Federal soldier from New York, to whom a medal was voted for bravery upon the battlefield. It shows that he coincided with me, although ridiculing me a little in a humorous way.

The gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON and Mr. DALZELL] in their speeches the other evening exonerated every Democrat but myself from a desire to curtail expenses in pensions and placed the blame entirely upon me, saying in the discussion of the special rule brought in on this question that I alone was responsible for its enactment.

If that be true, and no Democrat dissented at the time or opened his mouth, I want to say that I glory in that distinction, if I am the only Democrat with manhood enough to raise my voice against that kind of extravagance. It seems that my brother Democrats believe in denouncing extravagance upon the floor; but when it comes to opposing and voting against extravagant pension claims, they fail to come up to the scratch. I denounce it and then vote against it.

Now, then, I want to say that that letter was written by a brave Federal soldier, as I said before, and a soldier, too, who is not drawing a pension, while one, the gentleman who so severely criticised me a few evenings ago and threatened even to try to throw me out of the House, if I am not mistaken from his looks, and if I am not misinformed, he must himself be drawing a pension from this great and liberal Government. He can answer for himself. I do not want to do him injustice or misrepresent him. I ask the Clerk please to read now the letter as it appeared in the Post on the 11th March last.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read. The Chair hears none.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not asking unanimous consent, but am demanding my rights.

The Clerk read as follows:

House night school—Refractory pupils brought to book by Professor Talbert—Compulsory-attendance issue—Number of members who "play hookey" has been growing, session after session, and the South Carolinian now insists that there must be a reform—There will be no school at night hereafter unless a quorum is present. [Copyright, 1900, by Amos J. Cummings.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LACEY. For the purpose of making an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, certainly; I always yield to my friend, and I do not object to being questioned. I suppose he wants to object, as did the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] the other day.

Mr. LACEY. I observe that this article has been copyrighted. I understand the Public Printer has been annoyed somewhat by litigation growing out of the publication of copyrighted articles in the RECORD.

Mr. TALBERT. I have the consent of the gentleman who copyrighted this article that it may be printed in the RECORD. I have consulted him on several occasions.

Mr. LACEY. I do not see the gentleman present [Mr. CUMMINGS] who has that valuable copyright. I should like to be sure and to have it a matter of record that the gentleman consents to this publication.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to say to the gentleman that I have his consent to publish the letter, and I have stated this fact to the gentleman from Iowa and I hope he does not question my veracity.

Mr. LACEY. No; I do not doubt the gentleman's veracity, but under the statute of frauds I think the gentleman's verbal statement is not a sufficient waiver. I think we ought to have the statement of the holder of the copyright made in the open House. I make the point of order that we can not print a copyrighted article without the consent of the party holding the copyright.

Mr. TALBERT. Is the gentleman drawing a pension himself? Will the article hurt him, or is he afraid it will come out that some other member will be hurt?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. I am not drawing a pension. I have never either received or applied for a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. I understand that there are a number of gentlemen on this floor drawing pensions, whether it be the gentleman from Iowa or not, and I want to say that some time in the future it will be brought to light, and if they have sufficient manhood they ought to get up and say that they do not need them any longer, for a man who is getting $5,000 a year from the Government has no right to come and draw a pension in addition from the Government unless he has lost a leg or an arm or something of that sort. And unless he has been disabled otherwise to the extent of a loss of a limb, a man who is physically sound has no right to a pension.

Mr. LACEY. I will relieve the mind of the gentleman by saying, so far as I am concerned, that I not only am not drawing any pension, but I have no reason for drawing one. I am in good health.

Mr. TALBERT. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, and I hope soon to hear other gentlemen rise and explain——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to make a point of order?

Mr. LACEY. I make the point of order that the article is copyrighted and therefore can not be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without the consent of the gentleman holding the copyright.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not pass upon the question of the copyright. The Chair can put to the committee the question whether or not they desire to hear the paper read under the rule.

Mr. LACEY. The article itself shows that it is copyrighted.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not asking any privilege. I am demanding this as my right, in my own time, to have that letter read, and I will contend for my rights upon this floor, and I appeal to the Chairman to protect me in my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not pass upon the question of copyrights.

Mr. TALBERT. And I hope, Mr. Chairman, this will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not pass upon the question whether or not a copyrighted article can be read here. He simply can act under the rules of the House, and if anybody makes objection to having the article read, he will ask the committee to decide whether or not they desire to have it read.

Mr. MAHON. It is a good article, and there is a lot of fun in it.

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be more friendly to me now than a few evenings ago.

Mr. LACEY. The point is this——

Mr. TALBERT. I refuse to yield any further.

The CHAIRMAN. Ah, but the gentleman is discussing a point of order on which the Chair desires to hear him. This will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. TALBERT. All right, then, "let her roll."

Mr. LACEY. The Public Printer has been——

Mr. TALBERT. I hope this will not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. This will not come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I have no objection.

Mr. LACEY. The Public Printer has been harassed by litigation growing out of the publication of copyrighted articles. Now, seriously, sir, it seems to me that an article which, upon its face, appears to be properly copyrighted ought not to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and thrown broadcast all over the country without the consent of the party holding the copyright. I am told by the gentleman from South Carolina that he has some consent from the holder of the copyright, who is a member of this House, and who no doubt could speak for himself.

Mr. TALBERT. Let me interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman has no right to waive the copyright of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TALBERT. I stated to the gentleman that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] had consented that I might print this. I hope my friend does not doubt my veracity.

Mr. LACEY. I am not questioning the gentleman's veracity.

Mr. TALBERT. I am glad the gentleman disclaims any reflection upon my veracity. I misunderstood what he said. I know the gentleman's sense of justice would not allow him to do me any such injustice.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Upon the question of order, I only wish to be heard a moment. I did not agree that the point of order is well taken. It may be unlawful to publish a copyrighted article in the RECORD, and that is all which can be claimed; but everything that is unlawful is not unparliamentary, and the Chair can only look to the question of parliamentary law in the matter. Even if it were conceded that the article was copyrighted and that the gentleman had no right to use it in his speech, the question of order would not be good, because it is not unparliamentary.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, it is always unparliamentary to violate the law.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the law is violated, that is one question.

Mr. LACEY. It is always unparliamentary to violate the law. The Ten Commandments say, "Thou shalt not steal." A copyrighted article published by any publishing house becomes the subject of litigation. The holder of the copyright is entitled to protection in this House as much as anywhere else. Suppose the gentleman, instead of publishing this article, had introduced a novel that could be read within his time, a novel which was copyrighted. Would it be contended that that might go into the RECORD?

Mr. TALBERT. The gentleman is dealing in supposition. Suppose the gentleman had no nose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not addressing myself to the illegality of the thing. The only question is whether it is parliamentary. Whether it is obnoxious to our rule is the only question here, and there is no rule which would prevent the publication of an article because it is copyrighted. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that we very often read from copyrighted books. Indeed, all books, or nearly all, are copyrighted, and if the point of order is well taken we could not insert extracts from copyrighted books without the consent of the author if the point was made.

Now, I say that the most that can be said in this case would be that the gentleman who undertakes to publish this would do so at his own risk; but as to violating or infracting any rule of the House, I do not think there is any ground in the contention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is perfectly clear on the subject. This is a question which the House must settle, and not the Chair. The Chair must therefore overrule the point of order. If the House prefers not to hear the article, not to have it published in the RECORD, that is for the House to determine, not for the Chair. The Clerk will proceed.

Mr. TALBERT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I demand the reading of the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House has at last opened its night school for Congressmen. Aristophanes would not have termed it a thinkers' school and Socrates would have agreed with him. Alcibiades might have called it a gabbing school. The Hon. W. JASPER TALBERT, of South Carolina, has taken charge of it for the session. He favors a compulsory system of education. The qualifications for admission are not astringent, although United States Senators are debarred. Mr. TALBERT'S equanimity, however, has been temporarily upset by an unruly scholar. He comes from Iowa, and his name is WILLIAM P. HEPBURN.

Night schools have been held under the Reed and other rules for many years. They occur once a week, Friday nights being set apart for them. These are what are called pension nights. The school hours are from 8 p. m. to 10.30 p. m., with no general recesses. The two and a half hours are allotted by the House for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. They also occasionally take in measures for the removal of charges of desertion. Professor TALBERT has been a close student of these schools ever since he first entered Congress. He has no affection for deserters, bounty jumpers, and coffee coolers.

In previous Congresses he has distinguished himself by bitter opposition to all their demands. In many cases he was successful, but occasionally a deserter slipped through the lines despite his efforts. He made no opposition to bills he considered meritorious, and preferred the claims of private soldiers to those of the field and staff. In the last Congress he frequently crossed blades with GEORGE W. RAY, who, as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, had charge of such bills. In the present Congress his saber will be uplifted against the claymore of the Hon. CYRUS A. SULLOWAY, of New Hampshire, who succeeds Mr. RAY.

A FIGHTING PROFESSOR.

TALBERT is a wonderful fighter. He uses his sword manfully, and there is no trickery about him. A veritable Hotspur in discussion, he talks fluently, and at times with great energy. No man questions the sincerity of his convictions. Every fiber of his body attests it. He roars like a lion when thoroughly aroused, and pounds his desk like a trip hammer. He has no trouble in securing the attention of the House. It is always willing to listen to what he says. A word in return has a similar effect to a spark thrown into gunpowder. It forces a volcanic eruption.

Expletive sentences flow from him like molten lava, and usually some neophyte is caught in the fiery stream. At times, however, there are indignant protests. In the Fifty-fourth Congress the lava inundated the feet of William E. Barrett, of Massachusetts. As the smell of burning leather began to pervade the Chamber, Barrett showed his apprehension. He moved a resolution of censure. It led to a short but acrid debate. The Carolinian at last made an extremely graceful apology, and the man with the burnt feet oiled his blisters and retired.

The first night school of the present session was held on February 2, with 246 scholars of the 354 absent. Professor TALBERT was present. Wrangler J. F. LACEY, Speaker pro tempore, called the school to order. The rule under which it was opened was read, when the monitor from South Carolina seized a hickory gad and made himself manifest. He asked for ten minutes in which to address the pupils. Mr. LACEY politely replied that he should recognize the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, Mr. SULLOWAY. CYRUS arose on the Republican side of the House, like a cedar in a stubble-field, and gave way to Professor TALBERT.

The South Carolinian read a newspaper extract saying that the Grand Army of the Republic wanted Order 164 reestablished in the Pension Bureau. No. 164 was in operation only three years, but the newspapers stated that in that time it fastened $50,000,000 every year upon the Government. If reestablished, the pension appropriation would be increased from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 a year. Tutor TALBERT then read an extract from the Philadelphia Press, edited, he said, by Postmaster-General Charles Emory Smith. It referred to the Cullom bill making deserters pensionable, as well as all militia organizations who served sixty days in the Army and Navy of the United States.

HE SAID IT AND HE MEANT IT.

"I now give timely notice," said Professor TALBERT, cutting the air with his switch, "and I mean it, that so long as I may be able to drag myself to the Capitol, no pension bill—and there is no qualification to this ultimatum—shall pass this House unless a quorum of the members are present. The responsibility must rest upon those who will not come out to see that justice is done to the old soldier."

At this Mr. SULLOWAY moved to go into Committee of the Whole to consider bills on the Private Calendar. Eighty-six smart schoolboys voted in the affirmative and none in the negative. This was 92 votes less than a quorum. A call of the House showed little change. In vain did Mr. DE GRAFFENREID, a post-graduate from Texas, and Mr. MIERS, not yet matriculated, from Indiana, appeal to the gentleman with the hickory gad. The pedagogue shook the switch all the more fiercely. Bedlam ensued, and at 10.30 o'clock Mr. SULLOWAY withdrew from the stubble and school was dismissed.

The second session of the night school was held on February 9. The schoolmaster from Parkville, Edgefield County, was again on hand with a big rawhide. Speaker HENDERSON was in the chair when the resolution for going into committee was presented. There was a division of the vote. Only 86 of the 354 scholars were present. TALBERT again snapped his whip by shouting, "No quorum!"

The yeas and nays were demanded. One hundred and sixty-nine scholars responded. Mr. HENDERSON counted 15 present who had not voted, and announced a quorum. The House, therefore, went into committee, with Scholar WILLIAM P. HEPBURN in the chair. In Committee of the Whole only 100 votes are required for a quorum. The first bill taken up provided for a pension of $17 per month to James H. Kercheval. Committee amendments were read, and agreed to, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House favorably.

All this time Monitor TALBERT vainly clamored for recognition. He undoubtedly wanted to demand a division, with a view of ascertaining whether there was a quorum still present. The Chair utterly ignored him. The tutor rushed up and down the main aisle, snapping his whip and demanding his rights, while a score or more of abecedarians were hissing and shouting.

DEMANDED HIS RIGHTS.

"I submit, Mr. Chairman," he shouted, "that I have rights and I am here to demand them. It is an unheard of thing when a member gets up to address the Chair, and when the Chair sees him, for the Chair to deliberately refuse to listen to him."

"The gentleman from South Carolina is out of order and will take his seat," the refractory scholar in the chair responded.

"The Chair is out of order," returned the indignant preceptor. "It has acted in an arbitrary and tyrannical manner. I resent it, and I will stand by what I say. I will take my seat when I get ready."

Under a strict construction of the rules, the monitor was undoubtedly out of order, as he had no right to the floor while the committee was dividing. The unruly learner from the Hawkeye Commonwealth recognized him after the amendments to the bill were agreed to.

TALBERT declared that his action was not governed by the slightest feeling against the men who fought on the Northern side in the war between the North and the South, and he insisted that a quorum should be present. His opposition was to the loose, reckless, unconstitutional method of passing bills at Friday night sessions. He again insisted upon the presence of a quorum when school was open.

Thirty-six pension bills were then passed in committee before the school was dismissed. Mr. TALBERT himself advocated the passage of one because the soldier was old and blind and he believed that he should have a pension.

At the close of the afternoon session on February 16 Mr. SULLOWAY, the good boy from the good old Granite State, asked that the night school be postponed until the evening of Monday, February 19. A fierce snowstorm was raging at the time, and it was evident that there would not be a quorum of the House present if the school was opened at the usual hour on Friday night. The House agreed to Mr. SULLOWAY'S proposition.

The third night school was therefore opened at 8 o'clock on Monday night. The preceptor from the Palmetto State was again on hand, ready to administer hickory consolation. Mr. SULLOWAY being sick, Philologist HENRY R. GIBSON, of Tennessee, took his place. The roll call showed that only 64 scholars out of 354 were present. Thus 290 were off on a lark, playing "hookey." Professor TALBERT again shouted "no quorum." Unruly scholar WILLIAM P. HEPBURN, who was acting as Speaker, allowed that it was evident that no quorum was present.

Thereupon the philologist from East Tennessee arose smiling, with the face of a man about to tickle a frog, and turning to Mr. TALBERT, asked if there was not some way whereby they could arrive at some agreement. "Anything you may propose," said Mr. GIBSON, "we will agree to."

Unlike Mark Twain's frog, the South Carolina batrachian was not loaded with shot. He jumped as though he had been touched by a wire attached to a galvanic battery.

"I have nothing to propose, Mr. Speaker," he shouted, "except to bring a quorum here to transact business, legally, lawfully, and constitutionally."

CONFUSION IN THE SCHOOL.

Sophomore JAMES A. NORTON, of Ohio, who is always at fever heat where the interests of old soldiers are at stake, promptly demanded a call of the House. For an hour or more the school was in utter confusion. The doors were closed, and the boys present were denied leave of absence. This was peculiarly unfortunate for a modest but earnest and faithful devotee of night schools, GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, of Chicago. Two weeks before this he had made an engagement to address the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington on this evening.

Over 300 of these good young men were at this time seated in their hall awaiting the appearance of Mr. Foss, who is a member of the association. A sympathizing Christian from New York, aware of Mr. Foss's dilemma, stated these facts to the House and asked that Mr. Foss be excused. The unruly scholars laughed in derision. They evidently had no sympathy for the diffusion of Christianity, for they refused the request. This disgraceful action, however, does not appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Some unknown Government censor struck it out.

Professor TALBERT, however, with a due regard for missionary work, promptly moved that the House adjourn. This would have given Mr. Foss an opportunity to fill his engagement. The irreverent juveniles refused to adjourn, and Foss remained in purgatory. At 10 o'clock Philologist GIBSON renewed the motion to adjourn. A viva voce vote was taken and Refractory Scholar HEPBURN declared it carried. Sophomore NORTON indignantly demanded a division, but the unruly boy from Iowa declared the school dismissed, threw down the gavel, and disappeared.

Professor TALBERT's fight on behalf of a system of compulsory education will undoubtedly commend itself to the country. It is a sincere effort to confine legislation within its legitimate channels—to conduct public business, not upon the formal, but the real expression of the House. The purse strings of the nation, it would seem, should be unloosed by the House itself, and not by a fragment of the House. Either TALBERT is right or the Constitution is wrong, and no one will apparently recognize this fact quicker than the old soldier himself. The people will issue diplomas to the graduates of this night school next fall.

AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

Mr. TALBERT. Then this letter speaks for itself; and I want to say that this pension matter can not be ridiculed out of court, and Congress must take notice of the enormity of this abuse. And now, Mr. Chairman, as I said at the outset, this Congress seems to be going ahead making extravagant appropriations for various ways in every Department of this Government without stopping to think that every dollar of it must come out of the pockets of the people, amounting to millions and billions of dollars. They do not stop to think that the Government has not a single dollar with which to pay these enormous sums except as they first get it from the people.

I am absolutely opposed to the imperialistic tendencies of this Republican Administration. I am absolutely opposed to the Republican idea of expansion. I am absolutely opposed to standing armies in times of peace. I am opposed to all these things because all of them will only increase the burden of taxation upon an already downtrodden and tax-ridden people. This policy leads toward militarism and large standing armies, entailing countless thousands of dollars more upon the people to pay.

And I want to say to the Republican members of this House that you are responsible for the present unholy and unjust war in the Philippines; and if you would only declare a liberal, humane policy toward these people, the war would end in two weeks and peace abound all over the land.

Then, I say, if you will continue to carry on the war and call for these enormous appropriations, why is it that you do not levy an income tax upon the tremendous incomes of the rich in order to make them bear an equal portion of their burdens? Why not tax the enormous wealth of the millionaires and billionaires of this country to help pay the expenses? You take the young men of our country from their homes to defend the flag, and yet you refuse to go into the coffers of the rich and take a single dollar to help pay the expense. Tax their ill-gotten gains and make them do their duty to the country. As said by the gentleman from Kansas, "the demand for these things only comes from organized capital and officers who are to be benefited."

The gentleman from Illinois in his eloquent address on yesterday brought to light the fact that Army and Navy officers are being appointed to a position one day and retired the next, thus establishing a tremendous civil pension list, and in the end building up and establishing an official aristocracy in this free country of ours. In addition to this there are measures proposed here to pension all the civil employees of this Government in every governmental Department, and members here stand ready to support them.

In conclusion, let me say that I stand here to commence by unearthing and wiping out the immense frauds that exist in the Pension Bureau in its various ramifications and workings, and this pernicious habit of granting private pensions by private bills to undeserving persons, and so long as I may be able to stand up here I shall raise my voice and cast my vote against all such abuses. Let us stop this carping about abuses and set to work to correct them by voting against every fraud, every extravagant appropriation, and by giving to our people an economical and just administration of the Government. [Applause.] Let us stand by the teachings of our forefathers—the Monroe doctrine—and a government of, in, by, and for the people. [Applause.]

Before the reading of the foregoing article was concluded,

The CHAIRMAN said: The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask leave to print the remainder of the article, with my remarks, in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. General leave has already been extended.

Mr. SULZER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, on last Saturday in the House I read and commented on a matter published in the Evening Star of this city, which has stirred up considerable excitement, and I think it but just and right, both to that paper and to the gentleman who wrote the article or gave an account of the interview detailed in the Star, that I should, so far as I can, put in the RECORD the answer of the Star to the charges which have been made and the alleged falsity of that interview.

Now, the Star, which we all know to be an orthodox Republican paper, one which has always been high-toned and honorable in all its dealings in the past, so far as my knowledge goes—fair as to both measures and men—has never intentionally misrepresented nor wronged any one, neither in its editorial department nor through the agency of those gentlemen who represent it as reporters. It has been honorable, honest, and fair in all its dealings. I now read from the Star:

THE SUGAR TRUST—OXNARD IS AND ALWAYS HAS BEEN SERVING IT—WHY THE SUGAR TRUST IS OPPOSED TO THE PUERTO RICO TARIFF.

The assertion by Mr. PAYNE, of New York, in his speech in the House Saturday, that the sugar trust interests were not served by the Puerto Rican tariff, and that if the trust were putting up boodle it would be on the other side, does not accord with the understanding of the matter in Congress for many years, nor with the history of tariff legislation. Mr. Oxnard, being a beet-sugar producer, has for years, whenever the tariff was under consideration in any way, appeared in the sugar interests persistently as a beet-sugar producer, and has endeavored to maintain that he was not a representative of the sugar trust.

But the interests of the sugar trust have been served through his persistence for tariff protection to the sugar interests, and there has not been in the history of tariff legislation of recent years a conflict between his representations and the interests of the sugar trust.

ASSOCIATED WITH THE SCANDAL.

The sugar-trust scandals during the consideration of the recent tariff bill were associated with him, and his recommendations as to sugar duties have been influential to secure legislation which was the basis in the recent bill under consideration of sugar speculations which were investigated in Congress.

Both Mr. Oxnard and Mr. Myrick, representing agricultural journals, were active in securing the adoption by the committee and the passage of the Puerto Rican tariff bill, and in hearings before the Congressional committees were insistent upon the tariff provision. Mr. Oxnard disavows any connection with the sugar trust, but this disavowal is regarded as technical, and it is reported that he has agreements and contracts with the sugar trust which make his interests as a beet-sugar producer and those of the sugar trust coincide.

The assertion of Mr. PAYNE that the sugar-trust interests were in conflict with the tariff in Puerto Rico is negatived by another statement in his speech. His reference to the Puerto Ricans, where he said "who receive," referring to Puerto Ricans, "this small price for their sugar, less the tariff, when they sold it to the American Sugar Refining Company."

SYSTEM OF BUYING RAW SUGAR.

This reference to the sugar price less the tariff is in accordance with what is understood to be the system of the sugar trust in buying raw sugar, which is to make the producers from whom it purchases bear the tariff by deducting it from the price paid. Mr. PAYNE was asked this morning what he meant by that reference, and he said that the sugar refiners paid the tariff and deducted the amount from the market price in New York. That was what he meant.

Under this system it is quite obvious that the sugar trust could have no special interest in free trade, and as a matter of fact the sugar trust has insisted during all the tariff legislation upon a protection according to a schedule of its own making.

BENEFITED BY THE TARIFF.

The facts in the case appear to be that the sugar trust, instead of having, as Mr. PAYNE declares, an interest in free trade, is benefited by the tariff to an enormous extent and has fought for it at all times, not being opposed to even the tariff on the raw material, the burden of which does not fall on it.

In this instance its particular interest extends not only to Puerto Rico, but to all the islands, including Cuba, lest rival refineries should be established on these islands to compete with it.

I put this matter before the House and publish it in the RECORD in justice to the Star and in reply to criticisms which have been made not only on this floor by Mr. PAYNE, of New York, but by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. HANNA, the chairman of the Republican national committee, whose language, uttered in the Senate yesterday, I desire to read as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. HANNA said the interview was one supposed to have been given to a reporter for the newspaper in question.

"I do not believe," said Mr. HANNA, "that any Republican member of the House of Representatives ever made the statement attributed to him."

He said the statement carried on its face evidence that it was false.

"I hope measures will be taken to investigate this statement. I brand it as a malicious lie."

In answer to that I will publish what the Star has to say in reply, and if gentlemen want this matter investigated, it will be observed that the Star challenges you to do it. Introduce your resolution of investigation, if you please, and let this whole matter be inquired into. Now let us see if any gentleman on that side will accept the challenge of the Star.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman think that the Republican member who is charged with having made that statement is somewhat challenged?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I did not catch the gentleman's remark.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the gentleman think the challenge is thrown down to the member alleged to have made that statement, when Mr. HANNA says that he was a miserable liar, rather than what the paper had said about the matter? If any Republican member has said what is alleged, the inference is that he lied, and I think he has.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. It is a challenge to the Republican member of the House and to that side that the member who says that your party and your leaders were influenced by what that member has stated as reported in the Star for the purpose of securing a campaign fund from those interests [applause on the Democratic side], and it is a reflection upon those in control of this House. If he or your side wants an investigation, he can get it. Now let me give you what the Star says in reference to it:

The interview was had, as reported in the Star Friday, with a Republican member of the House who supported the Puerto Rican tariff bill with his vote. It was written a very short time after the conversation between the Representative and the Star reporter closed. This fact can be supported by the oath of the man who wrote the interview, who is perfectly willing to take oath to it.

Now, then——

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Would you believe the man who made that statement on oath?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Would I believe him? I do not believe that any man who occupies a position upon the Star would deliberately and maliciously misrepresent any gentleman on this floor.

Mr. STEELE. I do. If such a statement was made, as charged, by a Republican member, would you believe that member under oath? I mean——

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I can only answer the gentleman as to that from the facts as they are.

Mr. STEELE. If it embarrasses you, you need not answer it.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. It does not embarrass me. It looks to me as if the statements are true. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEELE. You only believe that the man said it.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Take the evidence before the committee in the Senate upon this question, and that before the House committee, and this interview is in accord with the evidence given before these committees, explaining the miraculous change of gentlemen on that side from "plain-duty" free trade with the Puerto Ricans to 15 per cent protection. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. If he believes the statement, I want him to point out how it could be true, directly or indirectly, that a campaign fund could be raised out of the legislation proposed on our side.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I do it by the fact that these corporations who favor this legislation "and their next of kin," the great national banks, etc., contributed millions of dollars to the Republican campaign fund in 1896 to elect President McKinley [applause on the Democratic side], and that the vice-president of the National City Bank of New York, the bank of the Standard Oil Company, had the audacity to write the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, and jog his memory of the fact that he and his associates had contributed largely to the Republican campaign fund in 1896, and ask financial favors from him in his official capacity, and that Mr. Gage dared not rebuke him for the insult. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

THE HEPBURN LETTER.

THE NATIONAL CITY BANK OF NEW YORK,
New York, June 5, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. GAGE: The National City Bank of this city, of which I recently became vice-president, through the consolidation of the business of the Third National with it, is one of the banks designated as a United States depository, and I write to request that any changes which may be made under the Administration we may not be disturbed in this respect. We should like to remain a United States depository as at present. Of course, the bank is very strong, and if you will take the pains to look at our list of directors you will see that we also have very great political claims, in view of what was done during the canvass last year.

Yours, very truly,

A. B. HEPBURN.

Hon. LYMAN J. GAGE,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEELE. Out of the Puerto Rican bill, who is competent to pay money but the sugar trust, which is on your side of the question?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. The Star says not. That is good Republican authority. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The Secretary of the Treasury dare not resent the insult given, and what else may we not expect from that side? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, then, it is for you gentlemen to investigate the charge, as Senator HANNA says you should. Are you going to investigate it? You have the right under the rules of the House, and you can do it. Now, then, I have here the testimony before the Senate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, the gentleman seems to be anxious that there should be an investigation of this matter, and that it should be inaugurated.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I am not anxious; but I think the investigation should come from that side. We on this side are not the accused.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does not the gentleman know that, in all human probability, if the editor of that paper is brought here and interrogated as to who wrote that article he would refuse to answer? Now I want to ask the gentleman the question, if that should be so, would the gentleman and his friends on that side unite with this side in punishing him for his contumacious refusal?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I never cross a bridge until I get to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ah!

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Wait until you can find him guilty. I believe he told the truth. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to print in my remarks, in part, an editorial in the Chicago Times-Herald, the greatest Republican newspaper in the Northwest, and some of the testimony on the Puerto Rican matter before the Senate committee.

PARTY POLITICS AND PUERTO RICO.

The Times-Herald has been besieged by requests "for fuller and definite information concerning the origin of the present folly which has been foisted upon the party by its 'leaders' in the House of Representatives," to use the words of "a lifelong Republican," who writes from Earlville, this State. "If the President has solid base for his change," writes the pastor of a Methodist Church in Lake Linden, Mich., "he is in duty bound to make it known to the country." From various sources come queries of the same tenor, all expressing wonder, amazement, regret, and indignation that the Republican party should have been placed in an utterly untenable position by its leaders in Washington, and all with one voice repudiating the action of those leaders.

The Times-Herald frankly confesses that the reversal of the policy of the leaders of the Republican party in Congress is as inexplicable to-day as it was when the Committee on Ways and Means reported the 25 per cent tariff measure. In both the House and Senate the Puerto Rico bills went in free-trade lambs and came out tariff wolves.

There is nothing in the testimony before the Senate Committee on Puerto Rico reported February 5 that can in any way explain or justify the departure of that committee from its original bill, which gave free trade to Puerto Rico. True, Henry T. Oxnard, of Oxnard, Cal., the representative of the beet-sugar industry, and Herbert Myrick, of Springfield, Mass., chairman of the League of Domestic Producers, and claiming to represent the beet-sugar, cane-sugar, tobacco, wool, cotton, fruit, vegetable, rice, and nut producers, appeared before the committee. The latter demanded the defeat "of pending treaties of reciprocity with the British West Indies, whereby sugar and other products are to be admitted into the United States at a reduction in tariff rates, and of the admission to this market of Puerto Rican products duty free."

This Mr. Myrick fairly threatened the committee with the loss of 500,000 votes to the Republican party if it fulfilled the pledge of the President to give free trade to Puerto Rico. Some idea of what transpired in the committee may be learned from the following question asked by Senator PERKINS (Republican), of California:

"You speak of 500,000 of your subscribers through your publications every week. The question is troubling me. This committee has before it a bill for the government of Puerto Rico. It belongs to the United States to-day—is as much a part of the United States as territory as the Hawaiian Islands or Alaska. How can we in justice to this people and to the honor of our country have a different law for the people of Puerto Rico than for those of Hawaii? I see the force of your argument, and I shall be very glad if you can show us a way out."

Mr. Myrick ducked, confessing that he was not posted "in the matters of social economy," his forte being "doctrines of agriculture." Senator DEPEW tried his hand on Mr. Myrick with this question:

"Could any government sustain itself in having one kind of policy in the relations of Alaska to the United States and Hawaii to the United States and another kind in the relations of Puerto Rico to the United States, those all being purchase places?"

Again, Mr. Myrick appreciated "the magnitude and the delicacy of the questions," but excused himself from illuminating the problem. The examination was turned to the "expediency and justice and fair play" of treating Puerto Rico differently from Hawaii and Alaska, and the following colloquy occurred between Senator NELSON and the witness:

"Senator NELSON. Are you opposed to free trade in any form with Puerto Rico?

"Mr. MYRICK. Yes, sir.

"Senator NELSON. Then you are in favor of Puerto Rico placing a tariff on our wheat and flour and meats exported from this country?

"Mr. MYRICK. Yes, sir; as they always have.

"Senator NELSON. You want them to put a tariff on it?

"Mr. MYRICK. Yes, sir.

"Senator NELSON. And that is the way you represent the Northwestern farmers?"

The chairman of the committee, Senator FORAKER, asked Mr. Myrick this pointed question, which went to the very root of the matter: "Leaving out constitutional questions, would you treat it (Puerto Rico) as a foreign country or as belonging to the United States?" What Mr. Myrick would do is enveloped in that dumbness which comes to every man who is cornered between "I dare not and I would."

In these questions and replies the reader has got as near as he is likely to get to the mysterious influence that has pushed the Republican party to the verge of a precipice, over which lie dishonor, injustice, and disaster. The hollow threat made by Mr. Myrick of what he could and would do with his 500,000 subscribers and his associated producers, coupled with the wild talk of cigar makers, stampeded the committees of both Houses of Congress.

We ask the careful perusal of the questions put by Senators PERKINS, DEPEW, NELSON, and FORAKER, as demonstrating that up to January 20 no Republican leader in the Senate dreamed that it was either constitutionally or morally possible or expedient to treat Puerto Rico differently from any other territory belonging to the United States.

Now, then, what else do we find? I noticed, as reported in the morning Post, that your position has changed again. In the Senate the steering committee has changed again and altered their measure. As the Post remarks, you started down the hill three weeks ago and reached the bottom, and now you are starting back again. That is the position you are in. Who knows where your President stands? He is first one way and then another.

I will quote from this morning's Post an interview with a distinguished Republican from Vermont [Mr. POWERS]. He changed front after making a powerful constitutional and "plain duty" speech in favor of free trade with Puerto Rico, and then, to the surprise of this side of the House, in whose time he had spoken, he turned a somersault and voted for the tariff bill. The gentleman has just returned from a visit home, and he takes us into his confidence and tells us why he "somersaulted."

[Interview in Washington Post, March 27, 1900.]

VERMONT AFLAME FOR FREE TRADE.

Representative H. H. POWERS, who has returned from a week's trip to his home in Vermont, said yesterday that he was surprised at the sentiment for free trade prevailing in the Green Mountain State. "I heard talk in favor of free trade and in condemnation of the tariff everywhere I went," said he. "The Vermonters are ridiculing the idea of Puerto Rico not being a part of this country and under our Constitution. Many of the voters illustrate the absurdity of such a doctrine with quaint illustrations quite to the point."

"On what do they base their objections to a tariff?" he was asked.

"Oh, they call up the proclamation made by General Miles," replied Judge POWERS. "They tell one that the islands came under our rule without resistance, and that it is a breach of faith for us now to set up a barrier and tell them that they are not a part of the United States. I do not suppose they care so much for the legal arguments of the case; they look at the matter from the standpoint of squareness and fair dealing."

"But it is generally believed that the people of New England are paying little attention to the Puerto Rican question, and care little whether there be tariff or free trade."

RESPECT FOR M'KINLEY'S POLICY.

"Well, as far as political support of their members of Congress is concerned," answered Judge POWERS, "the voters may not waver in their loyalty. I told my people that I was for free trade; they knew I had made a speech in favor of free trade. I explained that I voted for the tariff bill after it had been modified, and that I did so at the request of the President."

Now, my friend from Vermont is here, and if this reported interview is wrong, now is the time for him to deny it and say that President McKinley has not been continually changing front so that even that side does not know where he "is at." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The papers say that your leaders have told Mr. HANNA that it will not do to amend your bill and let it come back here, for if it does there is danger of its defeat. You remind me of a fellow I knew in Benton County, now in my friend SIMS's district.

We had a law in Tennessee after the war, passed by a carpetbag legislature, making horse stealing a capital offense, with the right of the jury to commute to not less than ten nor more than twenty-one years. This fellow had been tried and convicted of horse stealing, and the jury commuted his sentence to twenty-one years in the penitentiary. The judge ordered the defendant to stand up to receive sentence, and wanted to know if he had any reason to give why sentence should not be passed upon him. He said he had; that as to the judge and the prosecuting attorney, he did not have anything to say, but that he was tried by the damnedest infernal set of horse-stealing jurors that any man was ever tried before. [Laughter.]

One of the jurors who had just gone out and sold his jury ticket and bought a quarter section of ginger cake and a quart of hard cider and got on the outside of them, and was in the court and heard what the defendant said, arose and addressed the court: "Jedge, let us set on him agin, and we'll send him up for ninety-nine years." [Laughter and applause.]

Gentlemen, from the mutterings of discontent we have heard coming from that side, I believe there are many of you who, if the Senate will give you another chance "to set on the bill," will send it up for ninety-nine years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Gentlemen, you are in the middle of a bad fix—Hanna, the trusts, and visions of a campaign fund on one side; the people, "plain duty," and humanity on the other; you know not which way to go; "you will be damned if you do, and you will be damned if you don't." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if he can not use some of his time?

Mr. HULL. I know of no one on this side that desires to speak now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa does not care to consume any time at present.

Mr. HULL. I do not know that we want much time anyway. I have no idea that we shall take much time—certainly not if the debate runs as it does now. I am perfectly willing to suspend the general debate now and proceed under the five-minute rule if the gentleman from New York will agree.

Mr. SULZER. If the gentleman from Iowa does not want to use his time, will he yield it to me?

Mr. HULL. No; not now.

Mr. SULZER. If the gentleman has no use for his two hours, he might yield it to me——

Mr. HULL. I am not yielding at this time.

Mr. SULZER (continuing). I am having trouble over here to get time enough.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SULZER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to take advantage of the time given me to insert a few things in the RECORD from distinguished men and equally distinguished newspapers of this country, some of them Democratic and some of them Republican, upon the Puerto Rican question generally, the inconsistencies and self-stultifications of the Republican party upon that question, and the cavity in which it has deposited itself on account of these inconsistencies. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I will quote first from the Cincinnati Enquirer. It says:

Had the Republican management confessed that it was intended to rifle a land distant 10,000 miles from our shores, lay waste cities and populous districts, and kill and have killed under the science of war tens of thousands of people whose crime consisted of love of home and country and the enjoyment of liberty as they sought best to enjoy it, William McKinley would not have polled a single vote in the electoral college. Had the Republican leaders in the canvass of 1896 scouted our Declaration of Independence, in which our forefathers in 1776 appealed to mankind for approval; had they scoffed the Constitution of the United States and mocked the teachings of the fathers of the Republic, such a political organization as the Republican party would not be to-day in existence. Public opinion would have scorned the party to death. Yet the Administration of William McKinley has done all these things.

It has done something more than "these things," Mr. Chairman. It has contended that certain parts of the earth are neither in the United States nor outside of the United States, and then has contended in the next breath that these certain parts of the world are both within the United States and outside of the United States. You have taken the curious position that Congress, the creature of the Constitution, has powers beyond the Constitution. Then, again, some of you have said: "No; that is false, but something else is true—unless and until Congress legislates the President," another creature of the Constitution, "has powers beyond the Constitution; but we do not think that Congress has powers beyond the Constitution."

Here are some truths tersely put by a couple of great men who are members of the Republican party. I refer to the speeches of Judge Harman and Judge Taft at the farewell banquet to the latter as he was taking his departure to go as one of the appointees of the President as commissioner to the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman how long it has been since Judge Harman joined the Republican party?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have understood that both these gentlemen are Republicans. If one of them is a Democrat, all the more respectable is his testimony. He is then much more apt to be a good judge of the Constitution and sound public policy.

Mr. SHATTUC. Judge Harman is a Democrat out and out, and Judge Taft is an extra refined Republican.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is a rather rare sort of a Republican bird—rara avis in terris with our Republican friends.

Here are some of these epigrams of Judge Harman:

Our history and principles are a perpetual promise to peoples struggling for freedom and independence.

We now hear the usual plea of doers of doubtful things. "The deed is done; it is too late to discuss it." It is never too late to retrace a misstep, to right a wrong.

Again, I read from Judge Harman:

If the people shall decide—

And this is what they have decided hitherto in our history, and it is to be hoped that they will decide it again—

If the people shall decide that no nation is good enough to rule another nation without that nation's consent; if they shall conclude that this country can not long exist part vassal and part free, then there will be no difficulty in doing what we ought to have done in the beginning—leave the Filipinos to manage their own affairs and serve notice to the world that they are under our protection.

The Philippine question, as it involves right and wrong, will never be settled until it is settled right.

Judge Taft says, and remember Judge Taft is a Republican, and, moreover, is the Republican appointee of a Republican President as a Philippine Island commissioner:

I have always hoped that the jurisdiction of our nation would not extend beyond territory between the two oceans.

Again Judge Taft says:

We have not solved all the problems of popular government so perfectly as to justify our voluntarily seeking more difficult ones abroad.

And how much more difficult, Mr. Chairman, is the problem when the question is not the government of a homogeneous people with common aspirations and common traditions whence those aspirations flow, but the government of a people alien to us in race, in religion, in institutions, in law, in aspirations, in traditions, in environment, in everything, and inferior to us in every respect.

Here is something which I find quoted from Gen. Lew Wallace. I do not know whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. I have always understood that he was a Republican and an original McKinley man. Perhaps he is super "extra refined;" I do not know:

When the President recommended free trade with Puerto Rico, that was William McKinley speaking from his heart. When he urged Congressmen to cast their utterances and vote for a duty on the industries of the island going and coming, that was MARK HANNA, the great Ohio suspect. Either the Puerto Ricans are fellow-countrymen or people in relation to us not yet defined. If fellow-countrymen, free trade should govern in all our dealings with them, and their institutions should be Americanized, something impossible under military control. If they are in relation unknown and undefined and poor and helpless, then charity, the essence of Christianity, should have had the molding of our policies.

It is idle to talk about the island being outside of the Constitution. Is Congress the creature of the Constitution or the Constitution a device of Congress? It is unfortunate that none of the men invited to see him and come away converted has told us of a word dropped by the President in explanation of his own conversion. It is not pleasant to think of the President exerting himself to control the action of an independent branch of the Government. What shall stop him next from interfering with the judges of the Supreme Court?

That I find attributed to Gen. Lew Wallace, ex-minister by Republican appointment to Constantinople and the author of Ben Hur.

The following I take from a Mississippi paper. It strikes me as very good doctrine:

An Associated Press dispatch says Senator SULLIVAN, of Mississippi, offered a resolution that the Philippine Islands are the rightful property, honorably acquired by the United States, and that "while misguided Filipinos continue the present war, brought on by them against the rightful authority of the United States, as long as a single gun in their hands is trained upon our flag, no expression or intention as to the future course of the United States with respect to them should be made by the Senate."

The Vicksburg Dispatch, commenting on that proposed resolution, says:

That leans too much toward imperialism for the Southern people. It is not unworthy a free people like the United States to inform the Filipinos exactly what we propose to do with the islands on which they have lived all their lives, and what treatment we intend to accord them. If we refuse to inform them of our purpose, and leave them to determine their fate by what the Hanna-McKinley Administration is saying and doing, it would be the same as telling them they have no rights at all.

The Senator's resolution is very unpalatable to the citizens of this State and to the people of the South. A brave and just people are always willing to inform those they are fighting what their purpose is. Of course, if we wish to conquer the brave Filipinos, lately our allies, and hold them as vassals, the Senator's resolution would be all right. But the American people are not ready for that yet awhile.

A few more things here, Mr. Chairman, and I will read rapidly. I find this from the St. Paul Pioneer Press, a Republican paper:

SKINNING PUERTO RICO.

This country will not tolerate the idea of skinning Puerto Rico for the supposed benefit of highly protected industries.

And in that connection, why is it that the Republican party upon this floor failed to follow the recommendation of the President when he said that it was "our plain duty" and that it was "evident justice" to allow these people free commercial intercourse with the balance of the United States? Has one of you undertaken to answer it? Will one of you dare do it now? Will one of you give the reasons for your new departure that exist to-day that did not exist when he wrote that message? Will one of you state a single reason cited by him for his own conversion? Will one of you prove that he is converted?

Mr. STEELE rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One moment and I will let the gentleman interrupt. I will tell you what was the matter, and you know what was the matter, too. You know and I know that after that message was written the cigar and tobacco interests of Connecticut became alarmed, the sugar-beet industry became alarmed, the tropical-fruit industry of southern California and Florida became alarmed, the cane-sugar industry became alarmed. Great bodies of American workingmen, threatened with the bodily incorporation of Tagalo and cooly wage competitors, became alarmed.

Industries, organizations, and class interests sent men here to your various committees, and they besought you for what? Not to let those islands alone, which was a very good way and the only constitutional way of getting out of it, but to violate the Constitution of the United States in order that you might at one and the same time do two things—things in law and justice irreconcilable—namely, own, control, govern, and exploit the islands, and still at the same time not admit them to the freedom of traffic and the freedom of travel, which is the innate as well as the constitutional right of every American citizen. You had not the moral courage to recede from a mistaken policy nor the political courage to defy those interests by carrying out your policy to its bitter and bad but only logical conclusion under the Constitution.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman challenged anyone to give any reason.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Any reason that exists now that did not exist then.

Mr. STEELE. That did not exist when the President called our attention to the fact that absolute free trade was necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. In the course of the investigation it was ascertained, among other things, that Mr. Finley, who is at present the British consul, located in Puerto Rico, was very anxious for free trade between this country and Puerto Rico. It was also ascertained that he was the largest producer of sugar on the island and that he has as much sugar there now as any other man; that he has 1,500 acres of land that he says is worth $500 an acre.

It occurred to some of us that there must be something behind his interest in American affairs that made him so anxious to have free trade. An investigation has proven that instead of paying $1.60 a hundred, as he has been paying under the Dingley Act, he was not willing to pay the 40 cents a hundred that he would have to pay if he had come in under the original House bill or the 24 cents a hundred coming in under the present bill. Why did he object? Simply because he could put every farthing in his own pockets and not a single dollar of it go to the poor people of the island.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have now heard the explanation. How long have we not waited for it; and now that it has come, what an explanation! "Montes laborant, nascitur ridiculus mus." "O lame and impotent conclusion!" I am now informed that the Chief Executive of a great nation of 75,000,000 people, that the legislative body of that people, representing the traditions, the history, the aspirations of the greatest Republic upon the surface of this earth, has changed a policy of "plain duty," of "evident justice," for fear that some money might go into the pockets of a man named Finley! A new and revolutionary departure from our Territorial policy, lest Finley should grow rich! [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] Is there any other explanation from that side of the House of any reason existing now that did not exist at the time the President wrote his message.

Mr. STEELE. Let me say further that this man is not paying a cent of taxes on this land.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that. I am taking for granted that this thing would enrich Finley. I am taking it for granted that Finley is a British subject. I am taking it for granted that Finley is the archdevil himself, and yet I can not see that all the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as to uniform taxation between the different parts of the United States and the hitherto traditional policy of the United States, which has been that whenever we added populations to our people we treated them just as we did our other people, should be set aside on his account. Finley may be a great man, a bad man, but I would rather see him a millionaire than to see all that. "Finley, oh, Finley, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should think it would take seven or eight minutes to finish it.

Mr. SULZER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will try to finish it in that time. Here is an article from the Carthage (Ill.) Gazette, Republican in politics:

PART OF THE UNITED STATES.

As Puerto Rico is a part of the United States, we believe it and its inhabitants are entitled to all the rights and privileges enjoyed by any of its Territories or the people thereof.

And we have in all our history held that in regard to other Territories. But Finley was not made profert of in the other cases. Perhaps if Finley had been there it would have been different. Here is something from the Peoria (Ill.) Journal, which, I believe, is a Republican paper:

APPEAL SHOULD BE HEEDED.

The appeal of the Puerto Ricans for the privilege of free trade with the balance of the United States is not one that should be rejected. The party that neglects to heed this appeal will suffer for it.

Here is something from the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, Republican:

A REPROACH TO THE FLAG.

Puerto Rico suffers because of Congressional tardiness. And in her sufferings is the flag reproached and the nation discredited. This is a condition that discounts American statesmanship.

Here is something from the Chicago Times-Herald. It is Republican, undoubtedly.

A COWARDLY PARTY.

The truth is that the consistency and honor of the Republican party were sacrificed for cheap and cowardly political reasons, and the moral sense of the party was outraged at the bidding of the smallest fly that ever buzzed around the hub of progress.

Here is something from the Racine (Wis.) Times, Republican again. I especially recommend this to those of you who say you are taxing the Puerto Ricans "outside of the Constitution" for their own good:

INDEPENDENCE DESTROYED.

It is not by making beggars and paupers of our new charges that we will make good citizens of them. The very first lesson we should have attempted to instill into the minds of a people who have been held in subjection to a monarchy is the necessity of independence and self-help.

Not satisfied, the Chicago Times-Herald continues in another issue in this original manner:

BEFOGGED WITH TOBACCO SMOKE.

Is it not about time for the advocates of the Puerto Rico tariff bill to select some apology for that amazing political blunder upon which they can stand over night? In the six weeks that have elapsed since the Ways and Means Committee cut its safe moorings to the dock of duty and ventured forth on the stormy sea of broken faith and temporary shifts each week has seen the invention of a new explanation to replace an exploded excuse. Take them in the order in which they were invented and abandoned, the Government will not fulfill the pledges of Miles, the "necessity" of Davis, the "justice" of Root, the "plain duty" of the President.

"It is not by making beggars and paupers of our new charges that we will make good citizens of them."

I commend that to you for sound common sense. Grant them their rights. That is what they demand and are entitled to. Do not first treat them as aliens and men without rights by your exercise of the taxing power, and then treat them as paupers and beggars by your exercise of your appropriation power.

Here is something from the Portland Oregonian, a Republican paper:

AVARICE AND GREED TRIUMPH.

What especially concerns the country is this striking proof that protected avarice and greed have been able to control the House of Representatives and overbear the President against plain duty, manifest justice, and the interests of industry and trade between peoples under the common flag of the United States.

That would have sounded bitter coming from me. What must be the magnitude of your crime to provoke its utterance by a partisan Republican newspaper!

Here is something from the Angola (Ind.) Magnet, Republican. It is headed "People are not fools."

Of course it means "most people:"

Some of the members of Congress tell us that the people do not understand the Puerto Rican tariff bill. Perhaps they do not, but they have a pretty well established belief that the clause in the Constitution which declares that "all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States" means precisely what it says.

Here is something from the Baltimore American, Republican:

THE COUNTRY DEMANDS JUSTICE.

At this time, when General Miles's pledge, the provisions of the peace treaty, the President's "plain duty" message, Secretary Root's unqualified recommendation, and the temper of the Puerto Ricans are all taken into consideration, the country refuses to believe that there can be any right or justice in the latter-day effort to treat the island as an alien.

Here is something from the Philadelphia North American, Republican, that is very good reading. It is headed "Un-American treatment."

No wonder the Puerto Ricans are not satisfied—

I recommend it to you; there is nothing like a dilemma.

No wonder the Puerto Ricans are not satisfied. If they are foreigners, let them ship their goods on foreign vessels if they find that to their advantage, and let them trade with foreign countries without the impediment of the Dingley tariff. If they are Americans, let them be treated like other Americans. They have a right to be considered one thing or the other.

You apply your navigation laws to them, because it is for your benefit. There you are exploiting them as if within the Union for your benefit, and then when it comes to giving them uniformity of traffic and travel, as guaranteed by the Constitution to all parts of the United States, you put them outside of the Union, because you can make more money out of them that way. You exploit them again for your benefit.

In applying your navigation laws you exploit them for the benefit of your merchant marine on the theory that the island is a part of the United States.

In refusing to apply uniform impost and excise taxes, but in contempt thereof "protecting" other "parts of the United States" against their products, you exploit them on the theory that the island is not a part of the United States.

Here is something from the Minneapolis Journal, Republican, from the Republican Northwest. This paper dares to say that you are blind:

CONGRESS IS BLIND.

It begins to look as if the people who lack for information were not in the country among the constituents, but were in Washington in the Ways and Means Committee and in the House meekly following the lead of its blind leadership. It will not hurt the Republican party to abandon this mistake, and the Republicans look with hope to the Senate to save the party from persisting in a dangerous error.

Then the peaceful rest and grassy quiet of the City of Brotherly Love is disturbed by the following plaint, occasioned by your bad faith:

SOLEMN PLEDGES BROKEN.

"Every consideration of justice and good faith," as the Secretary of War declared in his last annual report, demands that Congress shall accept the obligation of "plain duty" as it was announced by President McKinley. Should Congress fail to do that, it will do it not only at the risk of defeating the Republican party in November next, but with the certainty of breaking solemn pledges, of violating the bed-rock principles of the Constitution, of inflicting monstrous wrong and injustice upon a people who came to us cheerfully and welcomed us effusively because of their confidence in the good faith of our Government.—Philadelphia Ledger (Republican).

Now comes a voice from the Hub of the Universe, and the cultured and protected gentlemen who have hitherto voted the Republican ticket in the Athens of America must have their self-contemplative satisfaction disturbed by the following appeal to common sense made by a Republican newspaper:

A STUFFED BOGY.

The stuffed bogy that the admission of Puerto Rican goods into our markets without the payment of duty would be a step toward free trade as a national policy has lost its force, if it ever had any.

We have heard of mother countries, like France and Spain, which force their colonies to buy everything in the motherland. We never heard of any mother country which forced the colonies to sell all their goods outside the motherland. If we insist upon exacting tribute from the suffering island, we shall be acting the motherland very strangely. It will be more like the stepmotherland of the conventional style.—Boston Transcript (Republican).

The Cleveland Leader, Republican in politics, actually accuses the "great party of moral ideas," the "G. O. P.," of being immoral.

Drink of it, dissolute man;
Lave in it if you can.

REPUBLICAN PARTY IMMORAL.

It is long since any policy adopted by the representatives of the Republican party in Congress has been attacked by so great a proportion of the best Republican newspapers in the United States as have resolutely opposed the Puerto Rican tariff bill. The outbreak of dissatisfaction is so wide and intense that it may well alarm the most sanguine leaders of the party.

The reason is that the question is largely a matter of morals. Foremost in the issues raised by this unfortunate bill is the plea of Puerto Rico for kindness and justice. That is what breaks the lines of the Republican party. It is the appeal to the moral sense of the people. Republican policies can not safely or successfully be turned away from the instinct of right and justice involved in the demand for free trade between the United States and the little island which welcomed the American flag with high hopes and every demonstration of joy.

And then the Indianapolis Journal even forgets that it is Republican, and remembers only that it is human and American:

THE PAUPER ARGUMENT.

There is no weaker argument in defense of the Puerto Rican tariff bill than that based on the ignorance and poverty of the people of the island. We are told that when we got the island a large majority of them could not read or write; that thousands of them were never clothed beyond wearing a shirt; that 85 per cent of them went barefoot, and so on.

Much the same might have been said of the Southern plantation negroes at the close of the war, yet we gave the latter unrestricted free trade with the United State and the ballot besides. If ignorance and poverty furnished a justification for discriminating duties or taxes there would be a great deal of class legislation in this country.

The Detroit Tribune comes very near to calling you hypocrites. The idea that a Republican paper should "let that cat," of all cats, "out of the bag!"

CHARITABLE ROBBERY.

The proposition made by some of the Senators to levy a tariff equal to 15 per cent of the Dingley duties upon imports from the United States free is probably the most remarkable compromise ever offered. Certainly nothing more extraordinary has been proposed since duty and destiny established themselves in the seats of the mighty.

The principal argument advanced by the supporters of the House measure is that Puerto Rico needs the revenue. Now, the solemn Senators come along and say, "Let us do the right thing by these helpless people. We will keep their products out of the United States, but we will permit them to buy our products without paying anything extra for the blessed privilege." Humanity and benevolent assimilation can go no further. If the Puerto Ricans are not tickled now, it is hardly worth while trying to please such a fickle and frivolous people.

Then comes the Evangelist, and in the stern tones of a "God-fearing covenanter" announces what one might have known would be its opinion, dictated by the great heart and hard head of Presbyterianism:

COMMERCIAL DEGENERACY.

Some commercial degenerates are said to have used the argument with the President that Puerto Rico sugar and tobacco will compete with the American product. We must protect our own growers. Our own growers! Is not Puerto Rico our own? What kind of absorption is this? What kind of Americanization of our new dependence does it portend? It would leave Puerto Rico worse off than it was under Spain, and it would impose on the people of this generous and justice-loving Republic the harder lot of exchanging places with Spain and coming down from our ideals to the level of that once proud and magnanimous people.

Then to make the sad irony of your fate "sadder yet and yet sadder" comes the voice of commercialism itself. Listen to the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, then cry, "et tu Brute" and die.

ROOMS OF THE NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
MAIL AND EXPRESS BUILDING, 203 BROADWAY,
New York, March 22, 1900.

At a special meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, called for the purpose of considering the Puerto Rican tariff matter and held this day, the board adopted the following resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation the policy of the United States toward the island of Puerto Rico should be definitely and immediately determined upon considerations and conditions which relate to that island alone, and that such policy so decided upon should not in any particular or degree be affected, influenced, or warped by other and different questions, conditions, and considerations which may be involved in the relations of the United States to the island of Cuba and to the Philippines.

Resolved, That the people of Puerto Rico, in the opinion of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, are entitled by every consideration of justice, equity, and honor to the most beneficent treatment by the Government of the United States. We believe that in assuming the existing relation toward Puerto Rico this country accepted obligations which can not honorably be evaded, and that, apart from all other considerations, due regard for pledges given demand the extension to that island of free commercial intercourse with the United States and a civil form of government.

Resolved, That it will be a dishonor to the American flag, which now floats over the island of Puerto Rico, if by reason of any consideration unworthy of this great nation any act of ours shall impose upon the people of that island burdens less tolerant than those from which they have been released, and they shall come thereby to regard our flag as the emblem of avarice and not of liberty and happiness.

Resolved, That while giving expression to the foregoing sentiments, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation renews its expressions of confidence in the wisdom of the Administration and of Congress, and of their desire and purpose to legislate upon the interests of the island of Puerto Rico, in accord with the overwhelming sentiment of the people of the United States, which, in our judgment, favors the keeping of good faith pledged by General Miles and other representatives of this Government.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the president be authorized to appoint a committee of five members of this board, who shall have full power to take such action as they may deem conducive to the carrying out of the views of this board as expressed in the foregoing resolutions.

A true copy.

W. H. PARSONS, President.

Attest:
FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

Are you going to disappoint their expressed, even if not entertained, confidence in your wisdom, so deftly interwoven as it is with their denunciation of your known purpose? You used to ding into the ears of us poor free-silver fellows the constantly recurring refrain:

Oh, listen to the boards of trade!
Oh, hear what the boards have said!

Make your hymn the guide of your own conduct. Surely it has not ceased to be true that the New York Board of Trade is the source of all wisdom?

If so, then perhaps some wisdom may dwell farther west—even in the far land of Buffalo. If so, hear these parts of an editorial in the Buffalo Evening News—a proselyte to Republicanism, and therefore zealous in the faith:

If the tariff wall is to be raised between the United States and Puerto Rico, the Republican party may well look about for another candidate for President, for William McKinley has himself written the epitaph which will be his if that happens. His message to Congress put upon Congress, as a matter of conscience, the duty of opening our markets to the annexed island. If he yields to pressure, and in the end consents to wrong Puerto Rico, the responsibility will be his, and it will be a grave one.

* * * * * * *

The attempted betrayal of Puerto Rico has divided the Republican party in Congress. It will divide it in the nation if the policy is carried out. The responsibility rests mainly with the President. This is a year when, of all years, the Republican party should be united, hopeful, and aggressive. It should not be put on the defensive. The prestige of a successful war and returning industrial prosperity makes it invincible if it will only be true to American ideals.

* * * * * * *

The President should speak out, and should stand by his message in the manly fashion which is his in matters of principle, however he may compromise in matters of policy and detail. The Republican State legislature of Iowa has protested against the betrayal of Puerto Rico. In New York a great mass meeting is to be held Thursday night to voice a similar protest. Soon it will be too late for the Chief Magistrate to break silence with self-respect. For political reasons, for personal reasons, above all for patriotic reasons and for the welfare of the whole country, the President should speak out, and he should speak out now.

Wants the President to "speak out." Poor fellow! So anxious to please everybody! He has "spoken out" so often and so variously that he has spoken himself out of alluring breath and some of you out of Congress. What a predicament you have gotten one another into!

Let the Washington Post, which expresses it well, speak. It calls itself "independent" in politics. It has been, as all will admit, Administrationist. Here is what it says:

THE REPUBLICAN PREDICAMENT.

May we be pardoned for suggesting that the Republican party seems at this moment to be in a highly interesting condition? May we add that, as is usual in such cases, it is the party's own fault? In the absence of objection—and we follow Big Tom Reed's methods in this respect—we declare both motions carried and a quorum present. The Republican party is in an interesting but very unpleasant situation, and the party has itself to blame.

Let us survey the field!

When Congress assembled last December, the President's message was, of course, the first number on the programme. In that message Mr. McKinley declared himself, unreservedly, for free trade with Puerto Rico. By way of supplement to this, the Secretary of War—one of the most eminent and gifted jurists in the country—urged the measure in even more elaborate terms. While the President appealed to "our plain duty," Secretary Root reminded us that "justice and good faith demand," etc. Only the most callous and indurated of Congresses could have resisted such clarion calls, and the Congress to which these illustrious gentlemen addressed themselves was, notoriously, a Congress of unusual sensibility.

No wonder, therefore, that the Ways and Means Committee of the House promptly reported a free-trade bill with reference to Puerto Rico and still less wonder that all the forces of altruism and humanity and beneyolence rallied as one man to praise and to commend the proposition. Right there, however, is where the trouble began and where the Republican party entered upon a course of stultification and moral acrobatics and intellectual hide and seek which has enshrined it permanently in the disrespectful amazement of the country.

Let us be businesslike!

Explanation first. The Republican Congress could not grant free trade to Puerto Rico without committing the party to the principle that "the Constitution follows the flag." (Note: No legislation with reference to Puerto Rico would affect the constitutional question, one way or another, pending a decision by the Supreme Court.)

Explanation second. A tariff on Puerto Rican products was necessary so as to create a fund which could be applied to the necessities of the people. (Note: A bill was passed appropriating $2,000,000 to relieve those necessities, thus giving the Puerto Ricans more relief than would have been afforded in one year by the proposed tariff.)

Explanation third. It was indispensable to uphold the principle of protection. Labor—organized labor—was supposed to demand such a policy. (Note: This principle had already been abandoned in the case of Hawaii, and no evidence could be presented to show that organized labor cared three straws about Puerto Rico.)

Explanation fourth. If we give free trade to Puerto Rico, we must also give it to the Philippines, and perhaps, later, to Cuba. This would establish a dangerous precedent. Moreover, the idea of giving Puerto Rico a representation in Congress was fraught with mischief and alarm. (Note: The precedent had been established in the matter of Hawaii, both as to free trade and representation in Congress. Mr. LODGE says so himself.)

Thus we find that in none of their squirmings and tergiversations have the Republican leaders a shadow of justification in fact. They are in the position of advocating a policy—nay! insisting upon it—which the President and the Secretary of War have with force and eloquence, if by indirection, denounced, and for which they can offer no rational excuse. And to complete the illustration of the party's sad predicament, we need only refer to the remarkable declaration of General GROSVENOR'S Ohio convention Tuesday—the Eleventh Congressional district—which for obscurity, noncommitalism, obfuscation, and general elasticity is without parallel since the days of good Jack Bunsby.

It may be that at some period in the past a great national party has found itself upon the threshold of a campaign in such a humiliating plight. But we do not at this moment recall the incident.

While we are quoting from the press of the Federal city, I will furnish some other choice specimens of what it thinks.

The chief daily papers are the Star, partisan Republican; the Times, partisan Democrat; the Post, Administrationist, but not always or chiefly partisan.

Read these from the Post, and first the following sermon on a text from the lips of the President:

WHAT THE FLAG MEANS.

"Our flag does not mean one thing here and another thing in Cuba or Puerto Rico."—President McKinley to 20,000 Methodists at Ocean Grove on August 25, 1899.

Our flag wherever it flies as an emblem of our sovereignty means constitutional government.

* * * * * * *

There are two kinds of government authorized by the Constitution and sanctioned by the Supreme Court. One rests on the authority of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. In that way New Mexico and California were governed and well governed for years. In that way Puerto Rico has been governed since her people welcomed our invading army as deliverers from oppression. It would have been lawful for the President to continue to govern Puerto Rico for some years without invoking aid from the legislative department.

The President might have been able to discharge "our plain duty" toward the loyal people of that little island by giving them free trade with the United States. That would have been such an indication of the meaning of our flag as would have commended it to warmer affection for its starry folds than can be felt by wards of the nation subjected to an oppressive and impoverishing discrimination.

But although a circuitous route may be taken to bring to the Puerto Ricans a full realization of the meaning of our flag, they are sure to get it. Congress can not govern any island or any part of any continent outside of the Constitution. There is a power higher than Congresses or Presidents in determining what may or may not be done in the name of the Constitution. That power, following its own precedents, will decide that "our plain duty" must be discharged.

If Congress, in face of the thunderous protest of the people, attempts to impose a tariff tax on Puerto Rican products, the tribunal which interprets law to Congresses and Presidents will declare that our flag can not mean one thing here and another in that island. But it would be better for all concerned and immeasurably better for the Republican party to get back without needless delay to the text of the President's message; better to discharge "our plain duty" directly than to do it grudgingly under compulsion of a Supreme Court decision.

And if there are Senators and Representatives who doubt this, let them put their ears to the ground.

Read this pathetic appeal to "stand by the President:"

STAND BY THE PRESIDENT.

A Republican who is neither a statesman nor a philosopher, but merely one of "the plain people" of the great Northwest, asks the Post to oblige him by frankly stating whether or not there is truth in the reports that the President has changed his mind respecting "our plain duty" toward the inhabitants of Puerto Rico.

"Is it not," inquires our correspondent, "our best policy to assume, in the absence of any contrary statement by the President, that he stands just where he stood when he made that declaration and convinced the country that he was right?" Our correspondent asserts that it would be impossible for the Republican leaders in the Northwest, however arduously they might exert themselves in that direction, to carry the people with them in support of the pending tariff measure. "Standing with the President on his message to Congress," he says, "we can carry the Northwest in this year's campaign."

Having no doubt that this inquirer correctly represents the situation, knowing from the press of the Northwest that he utters the general thought of "the plain people," we feel that in addressing him we are speaking to the masses of that section. As to the reports respecting a change of mind, the Post has no hesitancy in saying that the best Republican policy is to ignore them altogether. What this or that Senator or Representative may have said as regards the President's opinion need have no weight against the latest public and official declaration of the President himself.

Let the Republican masses stand with the Republican press and the President on and by and for the promise made by General Miles: "Puerto Rico under the American flag will enjoy the same privileges and the same immunities as the citizens of the United States and Territories of the Union." Repudiation of that pledge should be impossible. "The plain people" of this nation are honest. Therefore they stand with the President and not with the House of Representatives.

The same mistake that was made by the Republicans of Fairfax County, Va., in their convention last Monday—the blunder of charging the President with having receded from his position—has been perpetrated in other quarters. For example, President Hyde, of Bowdoin College, one of the great institutions of learning of which New England is justly proud, a college among whose graduates have been Presidents, Chief Justices, Senators, governors, and men of fame in every honorable calling, has preferred to credit rumor rather than stick to the only official evidence in the case.

The Lewiston Journal, the leading Republican paper in Maine with which the late Governor Dingley was so long identified, prints in its issue of the 19th instant a special telegram from Brunswick, dated the 18th, under a highly sensational display head, which reads as follows:

"President Hyde's talk in chapel this afternoon widely differed from his usual short Sunday afternoon sermons, and has caused much comment among the students.

"The Scripture lesson read was the story of Balaam, and the talk which followed had 'inconsistency' as its text, but consisted almost entirely of a criticism of Governor Roosevelt for his removal of Dr. Backus, and of President McKinley for his action regarding Puerto Rico.

"'Roosevelt,' said President Hyde, 'has had such a good previous record that this mistake of his may be forgotten, but McKinley has shown his fatal characteristic; is becoming distrusted by the people, and if not strongly intrenched in his party could not be reelected next November.'

"Continuing, he compared McKinley to Gladstone, saying, 'Gladstone changed his mind; McKinley has allowed his mind to be changed for him.'

"In concluding, President Hyde said: 'No man who so acts can command the respect and confidence of the American people. Remember the relapse of Roosevelt; remember the downfall of McKinley.'"

The Post's advice to Dr. Hyde and his friends, should they happen to ask for sober counsel, would be the same that has been given in this article to a Western correspondent. Stand with the President. He is not responsible for the House or the Senate. The world knows where he stood three and a half months ago. And he has not said a word to the people of the United States since that time indicative of a change of mind. If the Republican masses continue to stand for "our plain duty," Congress will not long hesitate to align itself with them.

No measure has ever passed both Houses of Congress against such opposition as the Puerto Rican tariff bill has evoked. No party is or ever will be strong enough to bear unharmed the strain of the passage of a measure thus opposed.

Later, when that seemed unavailing, this despairing appeal was made to the President to stand by himself. I still read from the Washington Post:

MR. M'KINLEY'S OPPORTUNITY.

So far as the country now knows—so far as the Post knows—so far as any authentic utterance warrants the humblest citizen in believing—the President still stands upon the declaration contained in his message, and advocates free trade for Puerto Rico. He made that declaration so deliberately, and based it upon such a solemn and persuasive array of facts, the whole country responded to his overture with fervor and sincerity. If he has changed his mind since then—if any of this agitation in Congress for a tariff against Puerto Rico has his encouragement and sanction—the American people do not know it, and have no reason to believe it.

That something has occurred; that some pressure has been brought to bear to launch Congress upon a course which, three months ago, it would not have dreamed of taking; must be evident to the most careless observer of public events. As a matter of fact, we see the President's closest and most enthusiastic supporters urging this tariff bill. We are aware—we could not ignore it if we would—that they are using every possible influence to obtain support for a measure which Mr. McKinley in his message denounced by implication as an injustice and a breach of faith.

The spectacle presented to the country is baffling and confusing and mysterious beyond measure. The masses wish to stand by Mr. McKinley, who has won their entire respect and confidence, and yet they are confronted by a situation which involves his notorious champions and spokesmen in an organized hostility to what they had supposed—on the strength of his own deliberate announcement—to be his personal desire and conviction.

What are Mr. McKinley's supporters, the loyal Republican masses of the nation, to infer? Are they to take his word as he proclaimed it last December, or are they to assume that Mr. LODGE and Mr. Smith, the Postmaster-General, are authorized to represent him as having changed his mind? It is perfectly evident that members of the House have voted for the tariff bill against their wishes and convictions. It is notorious that the House, if permitted to reconsider its former action, free from all compulsion and duress, would defeat the tariff by an overwhelming majority.

Everybody knows that Senate Republicans, having heard from home meanwhile, are strongly disposed and frankly anxious to bestow free trade on Puerto Rico. What, then, is the meaning of this extraordinary complication? How is it that the country can not understand the seeming incongruity, and why does not the President at once relieve his friends and satisfy the people by giving out, upon his own responsibility, a statement that will set all doubts at rest?

He enjoys the affection and the confidence of the country. If he has changed his mind about Puerto Rico and will give the reasons for that recantation, his fellow-citizens will still believe in his sincerity and cherish him in their affections. If he has amended his views; if, after demanding free trade for Puerto Rico, he now insists upon a tariff, he has only to make candid acknowledgment of the fact and thereby retain the respect and confidence of the country. He owes this to himself, to his supporters, and to the American people. He can lose nothing by paying the debt.

Afterwards the President thought to get out of the imbroglio by giving back with one hand what he proposed unlawfully to continue to take with the other. Then the Post thus exposes it all:

[Editorial, Washington Post, March 3, 1900.]

TINKERING WITH PUERTO RICO.

In response to a special recommendation by the President the House of Representatives yesterday passed a bill providing that all moneys collected as a result of the tariff on Puerto Rico products shall be applied to the development and improvement of the island.

Discussion was suppressed, and the measure put through practically without investigation. It sounds well. It bears the earmarks of a cheap but worthy altruism. We fancy that this noble outburst would figure powerfully in a sophomore address at a female seminary commencement, or make so crushing a peroration in a Washington High School debate as to wreathe Superintendent Powell's speaking features in honest ecstasy. The question, however, is whether it clarifies or still further muddles and obscures the situation.

Frankly, we think it does the latter thing. If the moneys collected from the tariff on Puerto Rican products are to be returned to the island; if the United States Government relinquishes all idea of profit; if our purpose be truly benevolent and humane, as we profess, why set up this complicated machinery, involving large clerical expense and a painful multiplication of official equipment? Why not consider the preferences of the Puerto Rican producers, and save money at both ends?

It is sufficiently evident that the representatives of industry in the island want free trade, and the opportunity of applying their resources in such fashion as their judgment may dictate. They are the people to consider. They can be trusted to know what is best for them. If we are legislating for the material interests of Puerto Rico, surely we should think first of the classes who represent those interests. Not to beat about the bush, we make bold to say, without further palaver, that the President's new attitude is more mysterious and distasteful than the situation it affects to modify.

It looks to us—and we believe it will so impress the American people—like an attempt to placate the overwhelming hostile criticism which, without reference to party or section, has buried the Puerto Rican tariff bill in popular contempt and reprobation. It will fail, however. It is a confession of blunder and injustice, and there is nothing in it to appease the wrath and sorrow of the country. There is a principle involved—a principle which the new arrangement violates as brutally as the other did—and the nation's conscience is as wounded and as scandalized as it was before.

What, we wonder, is behind all this? It is impossible to believe that the superficial aspect is other than a mask.

This was on March 3. But, alas! on March 13 this lover and well-wisher of the President could not restrain the following utterance:

WORSE AND WORSE FOR PUERTO RICO.

The last state of Puerto Rico is, in our opinion, worse than the first. It is now proposed, we understand, to give the island free trade with a string to it. All our products are to be taken in without a cent of duty. The natives may have our churns, sausages, mowing machines, baby carriages, washboards, missionaries, etc., and not pay so much as the fraction of a penny on any of them. So far it is the perfection of altruism—may we say benevolent suffocation? The only thing is that Puerto Rican products—the results of native enterprise and effort and the basis upon which the people's prosperity must be founded—the only thing is that these products are to be taxed when they reach our ports.

In other words, the United States is free to flood Puerto Rico with its merchandise, but Puerto Rico must pay on everything it sends to our markets. The situation reminds us of a deal once made between China and Great Britain, and of the reply made by the English representative when asked how the deal would operate. "Heads I win, tails you lose," said the Englishman—and so it was. We are a promising pupil of England, under present auspices, and England must look to her laurels as a spoliator if we ever get ourselves really educated.

Seriously, however, we feel moved to say that this new proposition is even more inexcusable than any yet advanced. We are to introduce our wares into Puerto Rico free of charge, and Puerto Rico is to be taxed on everything she produces and sends to us. Just how Congress can discuss this with a straight face we do not pretend to say. Even the Roman augurs contented themselves with winking at each other. They never gave the game away to the ribald multitude. In this case, however, the dullest intellect can grasp the meaning of the situation. It is as plain as daylight that the object is to enrich our producers and merchants while we industriously fleece the Puerto Ricans.

We went into the war against Spain sobbing with sorrow for the downtrodden victims of Spain's oppression. We girded up our pious loins and swore a great and righteous oath that we would uplift the groaning generation. How well do we recall the passionate orations which fired the pious heart and waked to fine frenzy the American zeal for noble works! To this day we thrill responsive to the hysterical appeals of the great and good men who made the halls of Congress ring with their denunciations of Spanish tyranny. And now we are told that our scheme of rescue and exaltation consists in free trade for the United States and taxation for Puerto Rico!

Verily, it seems to us that this is the very carnival of humbug and hypocrisy!

Then it leaves unheeding Executive and legislative for the nonce aside, and on March 19 reasons to the "plain people" in a manner almost sound enough to be Democratic:

"THE PLAIN PEOPLE" AND PUERTO RICO.

The Philadelphia Press is one of the quintet of Republican papers that support the Puerto Rican tariff bill. The Press, referring to the passage by the Senate, with amendments, of the Puerto Rico appropriation recommended by the President, says:

"There is no disposition anywhere to deal with the island of Puerto Rico except on the most generous principles. The return of these duties shows this, and the proposition to relieve the island of all but a very small fraction, 15 per cent, of the Dingley duties, and then hand that 15 per cent over to the island for the sole benefit of the Puerto Ricans, is another example of national generosity which some good people persist in misunderstanding, and some not so good misrepresent and distort for their own fell purposes. We do not believe they will succeed in deceiving the plain people or make them believe that it is dealing harshly with a people to collect a trifling duty on their goods and then hand the money collected back to them."

There are few of the "plain people" in this country so dull as to be deceived by the flimsy pretense that the collection of a tax from individual Puerto Ricans and then appropriating the proceeds for public works on that island is a fulfillment of our duty in the premises. It is substituting charity for such just action as would place the people beyond the need of humiliating assistance. It is a violation of our pledged faith, a direct breech of the promise held out to the Puerto Ricans when our Army landed on their shore. President Schurman, of the Philippines Commission, appears to be one of those "good people" who "persist in misunderstanding" this business, and therefore cooperate with "some not so good" in efforts to "deceive the plain people." He stands by and on the President's message calling for free trade with Puerto Rico. He says:

"We are bound to this course by solemn promises. The supreme and irresistible reason for removing all customs barriers between the United States and Puerto Rico is the promise made by General Miles, when first landing American forces on the island, that the Puerto Ricans should enjoy the same rights, privileges, and immunities as the people of the United States. On this understanding the Puerto Ricans accepted American sovereignty, not only without opposition, but with joyful trust and confidence. The present issue is simply this: Shall we repudiate or shall we fulfill the national engagements? Shall this great Republic break faith with the little island of Puerto Rico? Having secured the fruits of General Miles's promise, shall we now renounce the promise?"

Does the Press imagine that the "plain people" will fail to understand that? Is it not as clear as a ray of sunlight? And it goes to the country commended by the fact that the gentleman who wrote it possesses, in the most marked degree, the respect and confidence of the President.

President Schurman not only stands on the President's message, but on the annual report of Secretary Root, in which he said:

"The highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Puerto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States. We should treat the interests of this people as our own. I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Puerto Rico and the United States be removed."

Is there any difficulty about "the plain people" comprehending that? And will they misunderstand ex-President Harrison's declaration that he regards the Puerto Rican tariff bill "as a most serious departure from right principles?" Senator Davis, of Minnesota, has some influence with "the plain people." We suspect the Philadelphia Press has a very high opinion of his judgment. Did the Press follow him when he said to the Senate the other day, "What is the reason that this tariff rate, anomalous, unheard of, unprecedented, and temporary, should be applied to Puerto Rico while the other day a bill was passed in the other House appropriating $2,000,000 for Puerto Rico from the Treasury?"

There is an ex-Senator from Vermont now residing in Philadelphia, for whose opinion on a constitutional question his countryman, "plain" and otherwise, have as much respect as for that of any other living man. We refer to George F. Edmunds, and cite his declaration that "the Puerto Rican tariff bill is clearly unconstitutional and violates all our agreements with and pledges to the Puerto Ricans."

"The plain people" are with the President and his Secretary of War, with General Miles and President Schurman, with ex-President Harrison and George F. Edmunds, with the almost unanimous press of the United States. And it is a case in which conscience plays so large a part that judgment refuses to be warped by selfish representations of political expediency.

Remember Professor Schurman is the President's own appointee as chief of the commissioners to the Philippines.

On March 18 the Post, commenting on an appeal made by the Chicago Times-Herald to Republicans in both Houses not to "defy the will of the people" in this Puerto Rican matter, in part says:

There is a clear and very significant recognition of the peril which now confronts the Republican party. The great Republican States of the Northwest are intensely in earnest in their demand for fair dealing with the Puerto Ricans.

In Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota this demand is so imperative, expresses a sentiment so deep and all-pervading, that a defiance of it by Congress would, in the opinion of the most competent local judges, render even the most strongly Republican of those three Commonwealths extremely doubtful fighting ground in the Presidential campaign. The Times-Herald's warning might be treated as the result of overanxiety if that paper stood alone, but standing with all the Republican and independent papers of that section, and with nearly all the influential papers in the entire Union, and known to be a warm friend of the President, its admonition should have serious weight with those who have in a special manner the fortunes of the Republican party in their keeping.

The Chicago Inter Ocean is a thick and thin, uncompromising Republican paper. It is in close touch with stalwart Republicanism throughout the Northwest. Referring to the report that Senator HANNA is telling United States Senators that free trade with Puerto Rico will injure the Republican party with the working people of the United States, the Inter Ocean says:

"If Mr. HANNA and his associate Senators wish to know what is really injuring the Republican party, not only with working people of the United States but with all the rest of the people, at the present moment, we can tell them.

"It is the proposal on the part of Republicans in Washington to repudiate this nation's pledges to Puerto Rico. It is their efforts to violate the faith pledged by the President of the United States and his representatives to the island."

It would be easy to fill columns, pages, or volumes with extracts similar to that from newspapers that are friendly to the Administration and desire the success of the Republican party. They stand and they demand that Congress stand with the President as to "our plain duty." Those newspapers have an ear to the ground and a finger on the public's pulse.

Meantime, on March 1, it had passed through the stage of upbraiding the House, "moved," as it says, "by an influence mysterious and inexplicable," for not "following the President." Poor House! How anxious a majority of its Republican majority had been to "follow" him, if only it could ascertain "whither he was drifting." Listen:

[Editorial of Washington Post, Thursday, March 1, 1900.]

THE HOUSE AND PUERTO RICO.

The House has repudiated—rejected by a vote representing almost the full Republican strength of that body—the President's solemn and righteous injunction regarding Puerto Rico.

"Our plain duty," said Mr. McKinley, in his message to Congress, "is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets." How has the House responded to this earnest recommendation? By passing a bill that, if concurred in by the Senate, will impose a tariff tax of $1,200,000 to $1,000,000 upon the struggling, poverty-stricken people of the little island.

What a spectacle is thus presented to the country! A Republican House overrules the solemn and just decree of a Republican President! The country has no knowledge of any changed conditions since the President's message was written. It knows of no change of policy or sentiment on the part of the Executive. Our duty is as plain, as pressing to-day as it was in December last. There was a ring of genuine, generous Americanism in the President's utterance. It was the recommendation of a Christian, a patriot, and a statesman. Yet the House of Representatives, moved by an influence mysterious and inexplicable, proclaims to the nation that Mr. McKinley was wrong; that we really do not owe such a duty to Puerto Rico as he so clearly and earnestly indicated.

Verily this is a spectacle not only for the country but for the world. What of our boasted mission to redeem and Christianize? What of our lofty pretensions of a year or so ago? Are we giving evidence of good faith by imposing a tariff upon our own wards more burdensome than that provided in the pending reciprocity treaties for the benefit of the British tradesmen of Jamaica and Trinidad?

The proposition is wicked upon its face, and the great mass of honest American people will continue to look at it askance in spite of all the oratory from the stump which Republican speakers can put forth.

As showing how the "plain people" of the United States, not being, like the House, "moved by an influence mysterious and inexplicable," regarded your high-handed, unjust, and unconstitutional, colonialistic, and imperialistic departure from all historic American precedent, read these specials to the Post from Indianapolis, Ind., and Portland, Me.

What receptions the people gave CRUMPACKER and LITTLEFIELD for defying your party lash!

BLUNDER WILL COST VOTES—INDIANA REPUBLICANS BITTERLY DENOUNCE ACTION ON PUERTO RICO—JUDGE CRUMPACKER'S COURAGEOUS STAND IS UNIVERSALLY INDORSED, AND IT MAY MAKE HIM GOVERNOR.

[Special to the Post.]

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 1.

The action of the House of Representatives in passing the bill imposing a tariff tax upon the products of Puerto Rico—contrary to the recommendation in the President's message—is denounced by the Republican press of the State without exception. The Journal, News, and Press of this city have assailed the measure vigorously.

Representative LANDIS is being sharply criticised for his assertion in an interview that the people of the State were not interested in the bill. The papers say that he is out of touch with his constituents on this subject, and does not understand the feeling in the State.

Judge CRUMPACKER, the only Indiana Representative who voted against the bill, is receiving universal praise and commendation for his courageous stand. The change of front by Representative WATSON at the last moment was a sore disappointment to his friends, who had enthusiastically applauded his announced determination to vote against the bill.

The Puerto Rican issue is likely to figure to some extent in the pending gubernatorial campaign. Judge CRUMPACKER'S availability for the nomination is now being favorably discussed, and in case of a deadlock in the convention, there is more than a probability of CRUMPACKER being selected as a compromise candidate. His vote against the Puerto Rican bill has made him a popular factor in State politics.

The Republican leaders unhesitatingly denounce, in interviews, the action of the Hoosier delegation. Ex-President Harrison privately remarked two days ago that the measure was very unwise, and his opinion has been generally circulated. To-day, when approached, he said:

"I do not feel that I care to say anything offhand in a newspaper interview on a matter of such grave importance. I may prepare a careful article for some magazine on the subject, but I have not made up my mind yet."

Sergeant-at-Arms Dan Ransdell, of the Senate, came in this morning and dropped in the Columbia Club, where his ears were set buzzing with the bitter denunciation of the Administration's course. At the Marion Club there was the same high feeling. Postmaster Hous said the act was one of political suicide. He pronounced the Congressional action as outrageous. Ex-Attorney-General Ketcham, Federal Judge Baker, Ex-Supreme Justice B. K. Elliott, and many other prominent Republicans, in interviews, showed how unwise was the action of the Congressmen.

State Chairman Hernley set out for Washington this afternoon to protest against further progress of the bill. He was reticent as to his mission. Governor Mount wrote Senator FAIRBANKS a letter a few days ago, pointing out the grave political danger in passing the bill. Almost every business man and politician interviewed condemns the matter in the strongest terms.

At the Republican clubs there is much talk of Roosevelt for President, and frequent comments are made that an anti-McKinley delegation will be sent to the Philadelphia convention.

REPRESENTATIVE LITTLEFIELD INDORSED.

PORTLAND, ME., March 1, 1900.

The Portland Board of Trade to-day emphatically indorsed the views expressed by Congressman Littlefield against the Puerto Rican bill, and praised him for his "courageous stand" in the matter.

In this connection keep in mind that the most partisan and hidebound Republicans in all the land, outside of East Tennessee and the mountains of Kentucky, are the Republicans of Indiana.

Why, even ex-President Harrison, in an authenticated interview, said on Saturday, March 3: "Yes; I regard the bill as a serious departure from right principles."

So far have things gone in Indiana Republicandom.

But perhaps you would rather hear the voice of a "dyed-in-the-wool" Republican paper?

This is from the Washington Star of March 11.

NO REASON FOR A TARIFF.

There is no longer an emergency money question connected with the Puerto Rican tariff matter. The House, upon the President's recommendation, passed a bill returning past revenue duties collected from the island, and the Senate yesterday, with an important amendment, indorsed the measure. The amount thus made available for public purposes in Puerto Rico is a trifle over $2,000,000—a sum almost equal to what the emergency tariff bill would produce during the two years to which it is limited.

The question then recurs, to adopt parliamentary lingo, on the reasons for erecting a tariff wall around Puerto Rico. Ready money for the island has been provided. It is not necessary to levy a tariff tax in order to settle the question about whether Congress may do this thing or that thing as to a new possession. The Philippines are not involved. Congress will have as free a hand when the Philippines are reached as it now has. Why, then, this tariff proposition, and why, especially, should it be insisted on in the face of an overwhelming public sentiment against it?

It is useless to beat about the bush. The Republican party is in power, and is responsible for legislation. In the matter of these new possessions it is making very important history, and it is within eight months of having to answer to the people at the polls for the deeds done in the body. The question of imperialism as it now stands is comparatively harmless. The country is not overrun with soldiers, nor is there any Man on Horseback on the horizon. Expansion is an accomplished fact, and the people not only accept the situation but recognize the importance of the new condition in all calculations about the future. They want the new possessions held and want their affairs well administered.

But what will the people say if the Republicans start in by legislating against the new possessions? What will they say if the first measure of importance applying to them is shaped by a few protected industries in the United States? The Man on Horseback does not exist. But how about the Man on a Sugar Barrel? How about the Wooden Indian? Does the Republican party purpose making this campaign with those two imposing figures in the foreground? Can it hope to conquer in the sign of sugar and tobacco?

The two editorials from the Star of March 21 are edifying reading for all:

TINKERING NOT IN ORDER.

The latest compromise suggested as to Puerto Rico is that the tariff shall cease whenever the civil government shall certify to the President that the duties so collected are no longer necessary for the support of the island. What would this be but to transfer to Puerto Rico the unseemly scheming which we are now witnessing here on this very subject?

Once establish the tariff by act of Congress, and the sugar and tobacco growing interests of the United States will exert themselves to the utmost to prevent the repeal of the law. All the persuasive influences of a powerful lobby will be brought to bear in Puerto Rico against any certification of the conditions suggested. And the civil government of Puerto Rico, it may safely be assumed, will never be superior to the everyday human nature of which it will be composed. Besides, if sugar and tobacco carry the day here, why should they not be strong enough to carry the day in Puerto Rico?

If the Puerto Ricans are worthy to decide this question, why not let them decide it now? They are anxious to do so. The whole case is made up. Their immediate necessities are to be relieved by the bill returning to them two million and odd dollars of revenue duties they have already paid to the United States, and there is only to be considered now the proper plan for raising revenue for the future. The great majority of the people of the United States are opposed to a tariff for this purpose, and all the people of Puerto Rico are. Free trade between the island and the United States is the generally expressed desire.

Why should it not be established? Why not start the first civil government off in sympathy with the prevailing sentiment there and here on this subject, rather than hampered with a tariff bill which it will want to get rid of at as early a day as possible, but which will be supported by all the corrupting agencies known to up-to-date lobbying?

The supporters of this tariff measure are engaged now not in considering the question on its merits, but in devising a trick to help them escape from a hot corner. They are trying to save themselves at the expense of their party and the country. They can not hope to succeed, for the only serious threat against Republican success in November is embraced in this bill, and if their party goes down they, of course, will go down with it.

PUERTO RICO'S PLEA.

The interview with Delegate Larrinaga, of Puerto Rico, which appears in the news columns to-day, puts the case of the island upon a basis of easy understanding. The islanders want civil government and a market. They hope for free trade, not because they believe the Constitution applies to them of its own force, but because they believe that the United States will act equitably toward them and grant them this inspiration to feel in touch with the Republic. Their present condition is deplorable and demands immediate relief. Charity and emergency measures will not reach the vital issue or encourage capital or restore activity to the plantations and prosperity to the island. Permanence is required, fixed laws and forms of government, definite tariff rates, if any at all, and a prospect of assured employment for the people.

This is a reasonable proposition, and should strengthen the case of the island in the Senate. It will not do for the tariff faction to declare that Puerto Rico's willingness to sacrifice principle for a market to enable it to live justifies the inequity of a tariff imposition. Free trade is required by every consideration of fairness, of precaution, of shrewd political management. The Republican party, by heeding the voice of the American people to-day and passing a free-trade bill, will not only enshrine itself in the respect and love of the Puerto Ricans, but it will immeasurably strengthen its position at home.

The pleas uttered by representative Puerto Ricans such as this delegate are piteous in their emphasis. Mr. Larrinaga declares that if they were not a Christian people the Puerto Ricans would welcome extermination in preference to the slow death of trade depression and insecurity under military government certain to ensue. This little island, he says, was self-supporting and affluent before the American occupation, and with the least degree of considerate legislation it could once again become prosperous, with plenty of money for current expenses and for needed improvements. Will the Senate crush this gem as a worthless thing, or cherish it as of value and beauty?

On the subject of the "moving influence," "mysterious and inexplicable." Hear this from the Star, of March 7:

MR. OXNARD'S WORK—PUERTO RICAN TARIFF BILL HIS INSPIRATION—INFLUENCE BEHIND THE MEASURE—SUGAR TRUST AND TOBACCO PEOPLE BROUGHT PRESSURE—ARE WILLING TO TRADE.

The amendments proposed to the Puerto Rican tariff bill by Senators DAVIS and NELSON, of Minnesota, to extend the customs laws to that island have been instantly met with a proposition to trade. The supporters of the bill are ready to accept a provision that breadstuffs—in which Minnesota is particularly interested—may be admitted free. It is understood also that if the meat-product interests are determined in opposition to the bill as it now stands, an amendment excepting meat products from the tax will be accepted. There is a disposition to trade anything necessary to render the passage of the bill perfectly safe and to quiet the resentment of a considerable commercial element, so long as the sugar trust and tobacco interests are cared for.

INFLUENCE BEHIND THIS BILL.

The influences behind this bill, which neither the Republican leaders in Congress nor the President are able to resist, though the President, in yielding and in urging others to yield, still insists that the bill is not a good one, though he accepts it, are those which Mr. OXNARD can command. Mr. OXNARD is the great original anti-expansionist, a commercial anti-expansionist, yet men in Congress who profess to want the American flag carried to the ends of the earth yield to his demands. Mr. OXNARD began his fight against the growth of this country by opposing the annexation of Hawaii.

One of the most determined fights ever put up in Congress was that made by him against the raising of the American flag over Hawaii, and his method of attack was similar to the method employed by him now to have a tariff collected upon Puerto Rican sugar and tobacco. He had letters written to men in Congress by alleged farmer sugar-beet producers from various parts of the country, protesting against the annexation of Hawaii, and insisted that it was the poor farmer, not the innocent sugar trust, that wanted protection. Exactly the same thing was done in this case. Members of the Ways and Means Committee attempt to justify their support of the Puerto Rican tariff, as the opponents of the Hawaiian annexation attempted to justify their position, by asserting that they were receiving petitions from "the farmers" against interference with the beet-sugar industry.

SUGAR-TRUST INFLUENCES.

It is asserted on behalf of Secretary ROOT that, while he wrote the Puerto Rican bill, he did so merely in response to a request, and without approving of the proposition.

The facts of the case appear to be that influences, chiefly of the sugar trust and tobacco people, were brought to bear upon the President and Congress at about the same time, and that the President and the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee consulted together as to what was best to do in the matter some time—ten days, it is said—before the public had been informed that there was any plan to overthrow the President's recommendations for free trade with Puerto Rico. The President insisted that his position was right, but yielded to the pressure brought to bear in favor of the abandonment of his position.

MR. OXNARD'S WORK.

Before this Mr. Oxnard, it is said, had held a conference with members of the Protective Tariff League in New York, and there had inspired the movement which resulted in the present bill. It is said also that he had prepared substantially the bill afterwards reported from the Ways and Means Committee, and that this bill was in the hands of Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, who disputes with Mr. ROOT the authorship of the present bill, it being based on the one he presented. As a matter of fact, the Russell bill appears to have been the basis of the bill prepared by Mr. ROOT, who undertook merely to put it in better shape without giving it his approval.

It appears that, without being too exact as to mere phraseology, Mr. Oxnard is really entitled to the credit of the authorship of the bill, it being done by his inspiration, if not by his hand.

But perhaps you would like something more specific, something showing the consideration to be paid by this "moving influence," "mysterious and inexplicable." Anticipating your desire, the Star on March 23 published what follows:

A MATTER OF MONEY—CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTION IN RETURN FOR PUERTO RICAN TARIFF—SERIOUS STATEMENT OF A REPUBLICAN—DESPERATE EFFORTS WILL BE MADE TO PASS THE BILL—PEACE COMMITTEE TO CONFER.

"The action of the Iowa legislature can not affect the situation in Congress. The deal has been made. It is a matter of money for the campaign, and the tariff measure will be carried through."

This statement was made by a Republican member of the House who supported the bill in the House by his vote.

"You may as well set it down that the deal will be carried out," he added. "The carrying out of the recommendation of the President for free trade with Puerto Rico would have deprived the party of a very considerable contribution. The adoption of the reverse policy insures a very large contribution.

"The possible unpopularity of the Puerto Rican tariff was balanced against the certainty of money to use in the campaign, and the decision was in favor of the campaign contribution. It was not expected that the storm of protest would be as strong as it is, but it is now too late for a change."

The Star never told a lie on a Republican yet, and, so far as I know, never published a false or unauthentic interview with anybody of any political faith. The Post bears witness to the character and standing of its rival and contemporary in an editorial dated March 24, as follows:

CAN SUCH THINGS BE?

We reproduce from the Washington Evening Star of yesterday an utterance so remarkable, not to say astounding, as to call for the most careful and vigilant inspection:

"'The action of the Iowa legislature can not affect the situation in Congress. The deal has been made; it is a matter of money for the campaign, and the tariff measure will be carried through.'

"This statement was made by a Republican member of the House who supported the bill in the House by his vote.

"'You may as well set it down that the deal will be carried out,' he added. 'The carrying out of the recommendation of the President for free trade with Puerto Rico would have deprived the party of a very considerable contribution; the adoption of the reverse policy insures a very large contribution.

"'The possible unpopularity of the Puerto Rican tariff was balanced against the certainty of money to use in the campaign, and the decision was in favor of the campaign contribution. It was not expected that the storm of protest would be as strong as it is, but it is now too late for a change.'"

It is quite unnecessary to say to our local readers that the Evening Star is not a yellow journal, or a sensation monger, or an irresponsible purveyor of scandal and excitement. If the Star declares—as it does in this instance—that a member of Congress has made the statement above quoted, it is perfectly safe to assume that it speaks the truth.

The Star has everything to lose and nothing to gain by disseminating falsehood—and we may add, upon our own motion, that the Star does not bear the reputation of reckless or unsupported statement. We feel that we are warranted, therefore, in assuming that our esteemed contemporary speaks with knowledge and conviction when it quotes—if anonymously—a member of the House as declaring that the Puerto Rico tariff bill has been inspired by the detestable and base purposes of a campaign fund. To say that is to say that the Republican party is using the Administration and the Congress as the foodpad exploits the defenseless wayfarer—for mere plunder in the form of cash!

We have frequently wondered, and as frequently asked, what there is behind all this astonishing determination in Congress to afflict Puerto Rico with a tariff. Unable to understand it ourselves, we have appealed to the country at large for enlightenment—for even a suggestion. Every consideration of honor and good faith and justice demands that we should treat Puerto Rico as the President eloquently indicated in his message last December. Almost without exception, the press—especially the Republican and the independent press—has supported this demand.

And now comes the Evening Star, as if to answer the almost passionate anxiety of the country, explaining in deliberate terms that the tariff against Puerto Rico has been devised, not for any purpose of statesmanship, not even in mistaken loyalty to national honor, not even to establish a precedent in the public interest, but simply and solely to placate certain corporations which will contribute handsomely to a party campaign treasury!

If this be the case; if Puerto Rico is to be sacrificed to the sordid uses of a political contest; if these innocent and trustful people, who welcomed us with open arms and confided their destinies to our honor and generosity, are to be immolated on the altar of a detestable and mean party emergency; if it be true that the Republican Congress, backed by the Republican Administration, deliberately intend to trade upon the misery and the helplessness of a people who have thrown themselves upon our mercy, then we say—and we believe—that the country will make haste to denounce and to condemn and to rebuke an infamy so monstrous and so indefensible.

This is our first experiment in proconsular government. Rome had some experiences ages ago. Are we to expect the same results, legislation founded on intrigue and produced by corruption? If we begin thus with little Puerto Rico, so near our doors and whose people possess our sympathies, what are we to expect when you come to deal legislatively with the domestic affairs of the Philippines, a thousand in number, at our antipodes and whose people have incurred hatred of so large a proportion of our own? All shades of newspaper opinion at the city of Washington blend into one color of opposition on this question. Hear without comment the following utterance from the Washington Times, Democratic:

THE PUERTO RICAN CRIME.

As far as the House of Representatives is concerned, the crime against our suffering fellow-Americans in Puerto Rico, and against the Constitution of the United States, is complete. The Republican party and its Administration have crossed the Rubicon. They have at last thrown off all pretense of respect for the fundamental law of the country or of the rights of its inhabitants sacredly guaranteed by that law. They have registered the declaration that henceforward they will own no allegiance to the Constitution, oaths of office to the contrary notwithstanding, and will do no act of legislation that is not in the interests of and dictated by the oligarchy of the trusts and monopolies they so humbly and criminally serve.

* * * * * * *

In view of the facts of the case, it would be folly for Democratic Senators to offer any serious or prolonged resistance to the Payne iniquity. The sooner it is placed on the statute books the sooner it will be wiped out by the Supreme Court. It is a dastardly outrage on the Puerto Ricans, who so gladly threw off the yoke of Spanish sovereignty and accepted ours, under the promise of our Government that they should enjoy the blessings and privileges of American institutions.

But they must bear their burden with what patience they may, knowing that the honest people of the country, which is equally theirs and ours, will punish their oppressers in November; and knowing also that there is a power in the United States which an Administration and a majority in Congress, owned, controlled, and operated by the trusts and monopolies, can not long defy, however great may be their combined ability to do mischief and commit public crime for the time being. That power is the Constitution, which will speak by the voice of its prophet, the Supreme Court—a tribunal which never yet has tolerated the impudent assumption that any territory under the flag and sovereignty of the nation can be considered or treated as foreign, or denied any basic right enjoyed by citizens of the component States of the Union.

Were it not for the cruel suffering which this infamy will impose upon nearly a million loyal Americans, we could regard the political situation created by the course of the trusts and their executive and legislative agencies not only with equanimity, but with positive delight. The defense of American justice and the Constitution against the designs and assaults of a robber enemy is an issue upon which a united Democracy can sweep the country. In this connection there is great encouragement in the record of yesterday's vote.

Out of all the Democratic members of the House only four could be found sufficiently open to trust influence to violate the principles of their party in the matter of monopolies oppressive of the people and their duty to support the Constitution. This is brilliant evidence that the vast majority of Democrats are still true to the faith of the fathers, notwithstanding the unfortunate differences that have kept the party disunited for years and given the organization of the oligarchy an enormous advantage on the political battlefield.

[Washington Times, March 8.]

THE REPUBLICAN SPECTACLE.

Mr. McKinley's position in regard to the attempt to loot the Puerto Ricans for the benefit of the oil, sugar, tobacco, and rum trusts is not any more pleasant or edifying to contemplate than it is comfortable for him. In spite of inspired denials, it is evident that before the interested magnates made their now historical descent upon him and compelled him to deny his words, his conscience, and his oath to defend the Constitution, no man in the country was more thoroughly convinced than he that "duty and good faith," as well as the fundamental law of the land, demanded that the illegal exactions of Dingleyism should not be imposed upon the commerce of Puerto Rico.

It is true that, wishing to evade the constitutional consideration involved, he made his recommendation to Congress without referring to the sacred right which the island possessed, under American sovereignty, to the relief he proposed. Secretary Root was at one with the President, and even more strenuously urged that free trade should be accorded with as few words as possible.

Both of these trained and ruseful politicians realized that the little trade with Puerto Rico could not hurt the trusts. By permitting it they believed that the constitutional status of our separated Territories might be avoided until after the Presidential election, and that the Administration would be able to achieve popularity through a policy of apparent equity and generosity toward a suffering American community. The White House attitude was completely illustrated in the Payne letter of January 24, in which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee delared that Puerto Rico was entitled to free trade, because that right had been recognized in the case of "every other State and Territory, and of Alaska, not organized into a Territory."

Under what promises or threats Mr. McKinley was induced to change his mind it is not for us to say. What is important in the present connection is that, having changed it, he felt compelled to convert all the Republicans in Congress possessed of consciences who had followed him originally to his new way of thinking or, at least, acting. It is notorious that it took many White House conferences with Representatives inclined to be honest to so deprave them that they would consent to save the Payne infamy from defeat; but success finally crowned the effort, and a great many Republican members are now sorry that it succeeded. From end to end of the country the people are denouncing this Administration surrender to the trusts, and Representatives by the dozen who supported the infamous measure are booked for defeat in the November elections.

To cap the climax Mr. McKinley, the Jove without the assistance of whose thunderbolts HENDERSON, PAYNE, DALZELL, and CANNON would have been helpless to jam the bill through the House, is now, with characteristic unctuousness, attempting to shift all the blame on the legislators who obeyed him and voted for it under duress. He causes it to be advertised that he is still, as he always was, in favor of free trade for Puerto Rico, and that he only surrendered his convictions on the overwhelming demand of his party in Congress. A similar explanation is made in behalf of Secretary Root, who drew the Payne bill, but "only because the act was forced upon him." By whom? It was not PAYNE or his followers in the House. It must have been the missionaries whose arguments were so powerful with Mr. McKinley.

It happens that the unfortunates who were coerced by the White House into support of a measure which their souls and—what is more to the point—their knowledge of political consequences, abhorred, are riotously minded toward the amiable chief who is attempting to make them carry the bag, while he poses as the pure person who always contemned the crime. They say that they will not stand it; that the Administration shall not use them for a nefarious purpose and then run away and hide behind a hedge of consistent virtue, while they have to face political ostracism and death because they have been persuaded to obey their party rather than their consciences. Verily, in dealing for a valuable consideration, with the mammon of unrighteousness, Mr. McKinley has not added a cubit to his stature, and assuredly he has made soreheads among the House Republicans to an extent that will be visible in the future.

The subterfuge resorted to, in order to allay the indignation which is boiling over throughout the country, is only another evidence of Administration panic and paresis. That the free-trade Northwest may be reconciled, and the threatened punishment of Congressmen from that section and the Middle West be averted, the Administration influence now proposes such alleviations as are included in the amendment to the Payne bill offered by Senator MCCUMBER of North Dakota, which provides for free trade in all cereal and meat products.

Ultimately the willingness to trade will lead to an offer of a tariff surrender on every commodity enumerated in the Dingley law except those controlled by the trusts. That may help to appease party anger in Congress, but it will only increase the luridness of the spectacle which the Administration is presenting to the country. It will only emphasize the picture already hung on the walls of history. The Administration is ready to violate the dictates of humanity and to defy the Constitution that trust profits may be protected; but protection in other directions it will cheerfully surrender Only oil, sugar, tobacco, and rum are sacred.

Washington Times, March 18, says:

A MOST SIGNIFICANT VOTE.

What would the great men who evolved the Constitution of the United States have thought if they had been in the Senate Chamber on Friday. On that day, with hardly more care or ceremony than would have been devoted to the confirmation of a postmaster, a proposition going to the very root of American rights under the Constitution was dismissed perfunctorily by a vote of 36 to 17, 34 Senators not voting. Of the majority all but 1 were Republicans. Of the minority all were Democrats but 3.

The vote was taken on an amendment to the Puerto Rican revenue bill offered by Senator ALLEN, as follows:

"Provided, That the Constitution was, by force of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain at the city of Paris, France, April 11, 1899, extended over the island of Puerto Rico and its inhabitants."

Mr. ALLISON moved to lay the amendment on the table, and the motion prevailed:

YEAS—36.

Allison,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Ross,
Baker,	Foster,	McBride,	Sewell,
Bard,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Shoup,
Beveridge,	Gear,	McCumber,	Simon,
Carter,	Hale,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Davis,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Warren,
Elkins,	Kean,	Pritchard,	Wellington,
Fairbanks,	Lindsay,	Quarles,	Wetmore.

NAYS—17.

Allen,	Chilton,	Harris.	Tillman,
Bacon,	Clark, Mont.	Kenney,	Turley.
Bate,	Clay,	McLaurin,
Berry,	Cockrell,	Morgan,
Butler,	Culberson,	Rawlins,

What are we to understand by this? In the golden days when the Senate was, and was recognized as, the most dignified and able deliberative body in the world; in the days, in fact, when its great figures were Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Cass, Benton, and such men, compared with the Hannas, Beveridges, Wellingtons, Pettigrews, Kyles, and Hales of to-day, such a basic definition of constitutional power and vigor, if there had been any doubt about its truth or applicability, would have been debated for days and weeks. But here we have the statement of a self-evident truth—self-evident because it has been held and applied in the case of the Louisiana purchase, the Mexican cession, and the Alaska purchase—calmly voted down.

It is an astounding thing for the country to contemplate. Only a few weeks ago the President was urging that justice and good faith demanded that the tariff barriers between an American island and the American mainland should be torn down. His Secretary of War pleaded with Congress to the same end. The Governor-General of Puerto Rico represented that nothing less would prevent the present famine in the island from becoming universal. And Mr. McKinley's own special commissioner declared in his formal report that nothing could avert general destruction of Puerto Rican life and property but the unrestricted domestic free trade to which, as all constitutional lawyers know and all honest Americans believe, Puerto Rico is entitled under the Constitution.

It is our duty and privilege to congratulate the Democratic minority in the Senate upon its course in voting solidly for the Allen amendment, supporting the principle, and the sacred principle, that the Constitution follows the flag. But a single Democrat—Mr. LINDSAY, of Kentucky—sided with the majority on the occasion under review; and his adherence to the faith of the fathers has been too variable and uncertain in the past to make his new stand in favor of the views advanced by the proprietors of the Republican Administration either surprising or worthy of present consideration.

The question that the Senate has so flippantly passed by is one which the American people hold to be more important than any now before the country. They can no longer appeal to Congress, it seems. They must await the final action of the Supreme Court.

On March 24, the Washington Times, referring to the unanimous resolutions of the Iowa legislature condemning the action of their Representatives in this House and the bill of interterritorial tariff for which they voted, said:

The more the Administration forces in Congress pondered over this unanimous declaration by the Iowa house of representatives yesterday the more uncomfortable and desperate they felt. They might defy the comments of their own party organs in Chicago and refuse to believe the evidence of their senses concerning the tidal wave of denunciation flowing toward them from the whole Mississippi Valley, but they could not ignore a monumental and official fact like the Iowa resolution.

There is every evidence that the blow was as staggering as it was unexpected. It was a remarkable commentary upon Senator FORAKER's prediction of ten days ago, that the storm would blow over and the country would forget all about the iniquity in a short time. On the contrary, each succeeding day has only added to the popular excitement and indignation. At last the Administration has overloaded that patient ass, the American people. It has submitted to everything from Eaganism, Algerism, and Sampsonism down to the deal between Gage and the Standard Oil bank, with scarcely an audible murmur. But violation of a solemn pledge to Puerto Rico and deliberate inhumanity toward the people of that national territory, in defiance of the Constitution of the United States and at the demand of the trusts, is the last straw.

Mr. McKinley and his principal advisers and the Republican Senators and Representatives are all amply convinced that the country is thoroughly aroused against them, and that if they carry out their purpose to make the treatment of Puerto Rico as foreign territory a party issue, and on that ground drive the Payne-Foraker bill through the Senate, they will incur a terrible risk of defeat in the impending campaign. But long immunity from the wrath of man and of God has rendered them callous, and in addition they are desperate.

Prominent men, close to the Administration, declare with open cynicism that the Payne-Foraker bill is a deal with the trusts for a heavy campaign contribution which can be secured in no other way. The outburst of national protest and anger is much greater than had been expected. Nevertheless, as between public opinion and the cash promised by the trusts, the Administration will consider the latter and force Congress to persist in the unconstitutional and criminal oppression of Puerto Rico.

The natural presumption is that in adopting this course the Administration feels itself strong enough to defy the consciences of the American people and the principles held sacred by them. The experience of 1896 seems to have impressed the Republican leaders with the conviction that the people are a negligible quantity compared with the possession of a huge corruption fund. But can they be right in entertaining such a theory?

No doubt there are as many purchasable votes this year as there were four years ago, and quite as many politicians of the baser sort ready to stuff ballot boxes and pervert returns. On the other hand, there are vastly more voters who know the Republican party for what it is than were thus illuminated in the former campaign. It has pretty well thrown off the mask of hypocrisy by this time, and is hardly ashamed to acknowledge itself the servile creature of the trusts and monopolies it most notoriously is.

Therefore it is barely possible that the impudent position assumed by the Administration and its following, after the bursting of the Iowa bombshell, is neither as good nor as safe politics as the trust-Republican combination may imagine. But any doubt on the subject is liable to be dispelled on the 6th of November next.

Washington is the political metropolis of the country. Let us hear from the great commercial centers, and first from that marvelous American growth—Chicago:

[Special dispatch to The North American.]

REPUBLICAN EDITORS VOICE THEIR OPINIONS.

CHICAGO, March 5.

The Times-Herald, which is edited by Mr. H. H. Kohlsaat, the representative supporter of the McKinley Administration in the West, will say editorially to-morrow morning:

"Senator DAVIS, of Minnesota, has raised the true standard of American obligations to Puerto Rico, around which all Republicans can rally for the salvation of the party from the amazing blunder of the 15 per cent House compromise with our duty. Mr. DAVIS's free-trade amendment to the Senate bill comes not a day too soon nor goes a step too far to save his party from the direful consequences of that unaccountable aberration from the straight path of national justice and honor.

"From every section of the Union Republicans have called upon their Republican Representatives to undo the great wrong contained in the tariff provision of the Puerto Rico bill.

"We in the great West know that that demand is almost unanimous throughout the Republican party in this section. We know, too, that if it is complied with—if the Republicans in Washington act upon Senator DAVIS's amendment promptly—that in two week's time the mistake will be forgotten in thankfulness that it was remedied.

"But if that wrong is persisted in—if the Republican party in Congress, through false pride or in obstinate servility to the mysterious power behind the House bill, enacts its Puerto Rico tariff into law, it will become the overshadowing issue in the Presidential campaign.

"How can the Republicans meet such an issue? Up to the day Mr. PAYNE introduced the amended Puerto Rico bill in the House, every report, pledge, message, and tradition of the Republican party was committed to the principle of no customs barrier between parts of the United States. Republican sophistries will be choked back into Republican throats by the report of Republican pledges, professions, and principles.

"We do not know what they think in Washington would be the result of such a campaign; but here in the West we know that such a tidal wave of popular indignation would sweep across the prairies that the Democrats would capture the House of Representatives, even if they did not defeat President McKinley.

"Senator DAVIS has shown the path of duty to his party, which is the only path open for its salvation it can take and be forgiven, its blunder forgotten, and its campaign saved. It can refuse and prepare for the penalty which fate exacts from those who despise the warnings of honor, justice, and duty."

And "on to-morrow morning" "Editor Kohlsaat" did say it "editorially. Later he proceeded to say other things, to wit:

[From the Chicago Times-Herald—Republican.]

NO QUESTION OF RATE.

Whether the Puerto Rican tariff is 25 or 5 per cent, indeterminate or for two years, makes not a particle of difference with its justice. It will not be acceptable to the American people because of the plea that it is such a little breach of "our plain duty," as acknowledged by President McKinley.

* * * * * * *

[From the Chicago Times-Herald.]

"AFRAID OF THE HOUSE"—PROGRAMME THAT "WOULD DRAG DOWN ANY PARTY, HOWEVER POWERFUL."

Senator ALDRICH could hardly have grasped the full meaning of his plea for the Senate's acceptance of the House Puerto Rico bill. The argument he used was that an amendment would endanger the whole programme, because it would make it necessary for the House to vote once more, and, as he said, "we do not know whether or not we can hold the House again."

On the supposition that this is a popular government, the Senator's own programme thus appears as a political trick to defeat the popular will. Why is it that there is doubt if the House can be held again? Simply because the House has been hearing from the people. Having a regard for their representative character, as well as for their own convictions and the prospect of future punishment, the Congressmen feel that they have committed a mistake which they should rectify. They recognize that the power which they wield is delegated to them by their constituents; that it belongs in the last resort to their constituents, and that it should be employed as those constituents decree.

This is undeniably the correct theory, but what is the proposed practice of Senator ALDRICH? He admits in effect that there is no question about the trend of public sentiment, and then suggests a betrayal. For the present the Congressmen have the advantage of position. They are in office for a fixed term and may do as they please. Therefore they should use their advantage in a way that is antagonistic to the people.

Naturally the question arises, What is the consideration for this conduct? The Senator would probably reply that it will be found in the interests of his party. But no party has an interest in offending the public. This persistence can be referred only to some organized, selfish force that is playing for a personal profit, and that force can be discovered only in the lobby.

To this complexion does it come at last. The implied alliance would drag down any party, however powerful.

[From the Chicago Times-Herald—Republican.]

RING DISCIPLINE.

It may be said that the lower tariff of the bill and its disposition of the revenue are "compensating benefits" for the lost trade, but it is impossible to escape the "plain duty," and the Senate committee did not try to do so. It made free trade a feature of its own bill, so that this policy was twice sanctioned in the highest councils of the party.

The change, so far as the House is concerned, was brought about by a few members acting like autocrats. If they finally succeeded in whipping all but a small minority of their party into line, that was not because the majority was persuaded that they were right on principle. It was simply because they arrogated to themselves the authority of leadership and harped on the dangers of a division in the ranks.

Aside from the incidental benefits to the lobby, it may be said that the party plea has been used solely for the purpose of preventing their personal humiliation. Whether the other party authorities will be as solicitous on their account as the House remains to be seen. It is to be hoped that the Senate will reject the bill, that its Republican members will take a broader view of party policy, and not imagine that the fortunes of half a dozen individuals are of more importance politically than a wise consistency and devotion to principle.

[Special to the Post.]

MEANS PARTY DEFEAT—EDITOR KOHLSAAT ON THE PENDING PUERTO RICO BILL—MUST UNDO GRIEVOUS WRONG—UNIVERSAL SENSE OF AMERICAN JUSTICE AND HONOR OFFENDED BY ACTION OF THE HOUSE—THE COUNTRY'S INDIGNATION WILL NOT DOWN, AND ADMINISTRATION CAN NOT TOO QUICKLY REALIZE THE "STUPENDOUS AND HUMILIATING BLUNDER" THAT HAS BEEN MADE.

CHICAGO, March 4, 1900.

The Chicago Times Herald, stalwart in its Republicanism, and whose editor, Mr. Kohlsaat, is a close personal and political friend of President McKinley, prints an editorial which, in the vigor of its attack upon the pending Puerto Rico tariff legislation and its prediction of dire results to the party if the bill be passed, be fairly sensational in character. With the heading "Undo the great wrong to Puerto Rico," the Times-Herald will to-morrow say:

"It must be evident to the Government at Washington by this time that the treatment of Puerto Rico as alien to our institutions, foreign to our markets, and only entitled to our charity, contemplated in pending legislation, offends the universal sense of American justice and honor. When such a cool-headed and conservative constitutional lawyer and Republican as ex-President Harrison says, 'I regard the bill as a most serious departure from right principles,' it is time for the Republican majority in Congress to face the situation with the courage and wisdom that dares to acknowledge a grave mistake and undo a grievous wrong. Mr. Harrison merely packed into one sentence the well-nigh unanimous sentiment of Republicans of the Mississippi Valley.

"In the popular mind Puerto Rico occupies a very different place from Cuba or the Philippines. It came under the protection of the Stars and Stripes more than willingly—gladly. The people do not forget, if politicians do, that we sent an army under General Miles to conquer Puerto Rico. That army went prepared to meet the fiercest resistance, not only from the soldiers of Spain, but from the inhabitants of the island. What was the fact? From the landing at the port of Ponce to the entrance into San Juan the resistance was nominal and the welcome was generous. General Miles and his soldiers were everywhere greeted as deliverers. When they entered San Juan the children, dressed in white, strewed flowers before the feet of our marching host.

"OUR PLAIN DUTY," SAID THE PRESIDENT.

"Our conquest of Puerto Rico was a peaceful ovation. There was no haggling over terms, no talk of independence, no quibbling about relations. General Miles pledged the protection of the Stars and Stripes, and Puerto Rico accepted the pledge with all that it implied.

"When we contrast the attitude of the Puerto Ricans, loyally accepting the situation and confiding their future without question or condition to the honor of the United States, with that of the Cubans and Filipinos, we understand how the American people feel bound to extend to the former ungrudgingly every privilege and benefit that American institutions afford.

"This sentiment was reflected in the report of Governor-General Davis, of the Puerto Rico Commission, and of Secretary of War Root. It was embedded in President McKinley's message of last December in words that met with instant approval throughout the Union. It seems little short of providential that the common will of 75,000,000 Americans to less than a million Puerto Ricans should have found such simple yet imperishable expression in the very heart of a state document of over 26,000 words long.

"But there it is, telling us 'our plain duty' in a sentence that can not and will not down.

"How came it that the President, moved by the same impulse that yet sways the vast majority of his fellow-countrymen, has permitted himself to lend his influence to the perpetration of a political blunder that has sent a shudder of apprehension throughout the Union? It is a question that is being asked in every hamlet and home in the United States, and upon its answer depends more than was dreamed of in the mysterious meeting from which the Puerto Rico bill came without a father and without a sponsor who would give to it his name.

PATERNITY OF BILL NEVER ACKNOWLEDGED.

"To this day no man has acknowledged the paternity of the bill, which, like a veritable apple of discord, threatens to bring disruption to a great party.

"While we can not trace the parentage of the Puerto Rico bill beyond the doors of the Ways and Means Committee, it is not difficult to comprehend how, having found its way into the House of Representatives, it became a party fetich that has involved Congress and the President in a serious conflict with popular sentiment. Having become a party measure, the well-nigh irresistible influence of party discipline and traditions were enlisted on its behalf. But even these were not strong enough to insure its passage through the House. A majority of Republicans were opposed to the principle of the bill and faithful to the thought and purpose of the President's message.

"The defeat of the bill was imminent, and the prestige of the Republican majority in the House was in peril. Then the President was appealed to. It was represented to him that nothing could save the party from a humiliating division and defeat but some sign that he receded from the recommendation of his message. The leaders of the party were permitted to suggest that he had changed his mind; but this was not sufficient to bring the recalcitrants into line. The President was again appealed to, and under pressure from the party leaders in the House he personally urged several Representatives to support the bill so as to preserve an unbroken Republican front in the House."

FRAUGHT WITH DIRE POSSIBILITIES.

"Thus was the grievous blunder committed. How grievous and fraught with what dire possibilities, not only to the Republican party, but to the country, neither Congress nor the President could have foreseen. But they must realize now that the tariff section in the Puerto Rico bill has aroused a storm throughout the country that will not down.

"If Congress and the President persist in their present course, nothing can save the Republican party from defeat next November. It will surely cost them the House of Representatives, and it may cost them the Presidency.

"Worse than any of these possibilities, it may involve the election of Bryan, with all that that implies.

"But one course is open to the Republican party. Let it face the situation with the only spirit that can compel respect in the presence of a stupendous and humiliating blunder. Let it acknowledge the mistake and make haste to regain popular confidence by undoing the contemplated wrong to Puerto Rico.

"There is no shame in retreating from the verge of a precipice before taking the last irretrievable step. The only salvation for the Republican party is through the gate that gives free trade to Puerto Rico.

"The country looks to President McKinley to rise to the full stature of a statesman who dares to acknowledge a mistake and to undo a wrong."

Now, hear the Chicago Inter-Ocean, another straight Republican organ which protests against the Republican Puerto Rican tariff:

THE REVOLT OF DECENCY.

Men who are protectionists to the backbone, whose lives and fortunes have been devoted to the advocacy of protection as a policy, will revolt and are revolting against the proposal to exclude the people of Puerto Rico from full and free participation in the benefits of national trade and against a scheme to debar the people of the United States from the advantages of free intercourse with American territory that has been won by expenditure of their blood and treasure. Cuba and Puerto Rico were not redeemed from serfdom in the spirit of the cry, "Help the trusts!" Nor are they to be administered in such a spirit.

And in another issue of the Inter-Ocean I find this ultra expansionist organ using this language:

The Puerto Rican tariff bill is in effect a betrayal of the doctrine which in the last two years has become synonymous with Americanism and Republicanism.

Thousands of telegrams and letters have gone forward to Congress from all parts of the Union in protest against thus nullifying the platform of the Republican party. The people of the Middle West should join in this demonstration. They should multiply the letters and telegrams a hundredfold. Every man interested in the welfare of the nation, in the policy that is to carry us forward in the world's commerce, in the doctrine by which the Republican party must stand or fall in the elections of next fall, should telegraph or write to his Representative and Senators to correct the great wrong done by the House last Wednesday.

The Middle West gave first impulse and momentum to the expansion policy. Every man in it to-day should rally to the aid of the President. In his message of December 5, 1899, William McKinley declared: "The markets of the United States should be opened up to her (Puerto Rico's) products. Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico, and give her products free access to our markets." This declaration still stands. It is the voice of the President rebuking the Republican Congressmen who would break faith with the people.

These Congressmen, with six honorable exceptions, repudiated every recommendation of the President. They declined to recognize Puerto Rico as a Territory or part of the United States. They simply provided new tariff regulations between the United States and Puerto Rico on the principle that the island was but one degree removed from foreign territory.

The President in his message clearly defined the Republican policy. This fact was universally recognized at the time. If a Territorial bill had been presented on December 6, 1899, there would have been no opposition on the part of Republicans or Democrats. The President's recommendations appealed to both parties and to the whole people, because they followed the precedents of Louisiana and Florida and fulfilled the pledges of the United States to its new possessions. But with delay there came into the field a lobby representing the sugar and tobacco interests of the East, and all Republican members except six were induced to betray the party's policy. This action was taken in defiance of nine-tenths of the Republican newspapers, East and West, North and South. It was taken in the face of popular protests from every part of the country.

In the Senate there has been substituted for the House Puerto Rican bill a measure following the recommendations of the President in some respects, but containing the atrocious tariff clause. If this bill should pass, the betrayal of the expansion policy would be complete and beyond recall. Therefore, there should go forth to Washington from every city and town in the Middle West at once a general protest against the outrage. It should be made so clear that the common sense of the party and the conscience of the people are arrayed so strongly against this measure that the Senate will not dare to countenance the wrong to Puerto Rico.

The President is right. Let the people stand by him. Let them serve notice of their intent on their Representatives in Washington. And let them act quickly, lest they act too late.

It is a pity this great though partisan newspaper can not see a little further into this great problem, and while recognizing that Puerto Rico should have a Territorial government within the Union, also recognize the grave peril of retaining the Philippines at all—peril to our institutions if we violate the Constitution by governing them as a province inhabited by subject peoples, peril to both institutions and industries if we govern them constitutionally—as a Territory and a part of the United States—their people vested with the constitutional rights of freedom of trade, freedom of travel, and freedom of religion, and with local self-government. But hear the Tribune, another Chicago Republican journal:

UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Many lawyers who are competent to pass upon questions of this kind believe that any attempt to establish discriminating duties as against a part of the territory of the United States will be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and if this shall be the ultimate fate of the present bill and all other measures like it, few tears will be shed by those members of the Republican party who are not controlled in their opinions by the financial or business interests of other people.

In another issue the same paper actually suggests that you and the President need "advisers," and need them in the shape of men of sense who know something about "government."

The Administration has fallen into difficulties in many directions. It is evident the Administration is in urgent need of judicious advisers. By "advisers" we do not mean editors of newspapers, but men who have had experience in public life. The President should consult more frequently than he seems to have done men who know something about legislation and know it by experience in legislative or executive offices. They should be men who have served in a city council or a State legislature, if not in Congress; and men, too, who are not so far removed from the people as to be ignorant of their sentiments and emotions. Much used to be said of the President's purpose to keep his "ear near the ground." If his ear has been "near the ground" of late it has not been in close relations with American soil.

The Republican majority in the Senate has appointed a "steering committee" made up of its most judicious members. That committee has assumed control of legislation in the Senate, and to a certain extent in the lower branch. While Republican Senators have picked out as advisers the persons in whom they justly have the most confidence, the President has trusted too much to men who have not had experience in public life and whose immature opinions have led him astray.

Instead of sticking resolutely and firmly to his original and righteous views regarding some great questions, the President has been persuaded by incompetent advisers to abandon those views. He was right in the first instance as to Puerto Rico. Had he stood by his own sound intuitions he would be now one of the most popular men in the United States.

Unhappily, he was induced to abandon his convictions and give up an impregnable position at the instance of a few special interests or of possibly disinterested but altogether ill-informed advisers. Nor is that all. He was induced to bring his influence to bear upon Representatives to "get them into line." He sent for recalcitrant members and absolutely entreated them to vote, against their convictions and against the wishes of their constituents, for a measure which he himself at the outset strongly and properly opposed—a bill which flew in the face of his own positive recommendations to Congress. There are some Republicans who can not turn corners as sharply as the President can, and they are not sorry for their lack of flexibility in this respect.

The President, without needing to do it, has assumed the whole responsibility for the passage by the House of the maimed, mutilated, crippled, and inadequate Puerto Rico bill, a measure which eventually will be repudiated by both Houses of Congress. He might have kept his hands off and let the House "work out its own salvation in fear and trembling," and have looked to the Senate and a conference committee for judicious legislation on the subject.

A storm is gathering. The House Porto Rico measure will have to be sacrificed. It is scarcely supported by anybody. The three newspapers in Chicago which have stood by the President are against him in this matter. So is the Indianapolis Journal, while all Indiana is in a tumult and a ferment over it. It is evident that the feeling against the House bill is becoming more intense. The only mode of allaying it is for blundering leaders to admit they have led the party from its true course and promise an immediate return to safer ways.

There is need of a judicious "steering committee" in the House. There is still greater need of a pilot in the Cabinet. There is great need of fresh material there—of men who are not "amateurs" in politics, but who are experienced in public life, who are trained in the arts of statesmanship, and who know the temper of Congress and of the people. Men who are destitute of these qualifications, who are influenced by social considerations in Washington, and who deem it the acme of human felicity to be asked to dine with the British ambassador are not fit constitutional advisers for an American President. He should have at his council board men who look at American interests from an American point of view.

That is what is needed. The sooner that need is met the better. If President McKinley wishes to retain the confidence of the public, he will bring into his Cabinet before long advisers more sagacious than some of those he has there now. Otherwise the feeling will go abroad that the Administration is nerveless, spineless, and without convictions, adopting good policies only to abandon them at the dictation of incompetent advisers.

Then the Chicago Journal, an independent paper, joins Representative SWANSON, Senator PROCTOR, and others who have paralleled your policies with those of Lord North and poor, foolish, obstinate George III. Hear:

[From the Chicago Journal—Independent.]

MR. M'KINLEY AND LORD NORTH.

Up at the White House plain duty appears to have collided with party unity, and, so far as anybody can see, has come off second best. * * * The President has shown pretty plainly where he stands. He is ready to sacrifice the interests of a people to the exigencies of party politics. It is a hard thing to believe about Mr. McKinley, but he has lent plausibility to it by his significant failure to say a word against the bill when he knows a single syllable would have defeated it long ago.

If anything was needed to insure injustice and corruption in our dealings with our dependencies and make it reasonably certain that our government of them was to be one long, miserable failure in everything that could redound to their benefit or ours, it will be supplied in this effort to inject the spirit of party politics into our administration of their affairs. If the President has been correctly quoted, he has disposed of all pretext that the tariff was needed to supply revenue for the island. The islanders will know they are being taxed not to supply their public wants, but to promote party unity in another country. Lord North's tax on tea was nothing to this.

In the following brief blast it goes further and asserts that Spain herself, with the worst Government in Christendom, was more just, generous, and enlightened in her dealings with Puerto Rico than you are in yours! To what are we fallen!

[From the Chicago Journal—Independent.]

WHEN DID SPAIN DO WORSE?

What did Spain ever do to the present inhabitants of Puerto Rico that was worse than the things the tobacco ring and the sugar trust, through a lot of servile Congressmen, are proposing to do to them, and to which William McKinley, conscious of his "plain duty," to quote his words, seems willing to assent rather than embarrass his party? If that is the spirit in which Puerto Rico is to be governed, what have the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands to hope for from submission to American rule?

Then hear this from another Chicago paper:

[From the Chicago Record—Independent.]

"THE PLAIN DUTY."

It is the "plain duty" of Congress to provide for free trade between the United States and Puerto Rico. The advocates of this policy apparently are in the ascendency. They should not allow themselves to be induced through a caucus compromise to forego the fruits of victory. Let the policy of justice to the Puerto Ricans prevail.

Thus speaks the great city of the mighty West. Let us hear from the London of the New World—New York:

[From the New York Sun—Republican.]

NO DELAY.

The essential justice of the situation demands that the free trade of Puerto Rico, which the bill promises in two years, should be made to begin now.

[From the New York Times—Independent.]

THE COUNTRY'S VERDICT.

The opposition to this measure within the Republican party in the House is as nothing compared to the opposition, without regard to party, throughout the country. The American people do not like meanness; they do not like perfidy; they do not like cruelty. And with these base qualities the bill the House has passed is branded.

[From the New York Mail and Express—Republican.]

A COMPROMISE WITH DISHONOR.

The fatal weakness of the measure, we believe, is that, like most compromises, it signifies nothing. It is neither free trade nor protection, imperialistic nor anti-imperialistic, and therefore is just the legislation that demagogues thrive on. It is so easily susceptible of misrepresentation that no one will fear convincing refutation of his charges, no matter how he maligns its purpose and spirit.

We have not believed that the Republican party should be compelled to defend such a law, particularly when it is to be the first general legislation affecting our new possessions. Rather have we looked for a measure that would embody in its terms and principle a clear, explicit, and vigorous expression of the disposition of our people toward the Puerto Ricans, and that if it erred at all it would do so on the side of the island people. The bill passed by the House yesterday, however, is a weak response to that sentiment. It dallies with a situation that should have been met decisively, cordially, and promptly. It lacks heart and force and will have many enemies, but few friends here and in Puerto Rico.

A great opportunity for the country and for the Republican party has been needlessly frittered away.

[From the New York Evening Post—Independent.]

OUR NATIONAL FAITH.

The bill now goes to the Senate. The duty of all who have fought it while it was before the House is to keep up that fight while it is pending in the Senate. Indeed, they should now redouble their efforts to avert the national disgrace involved in the enactment of the bill into a law.

This fight should be made in behalf of the national honor. Questions of constitutional construction are interesting subjects for discussion, but the issue of good faith in redeeming our pledges to a suffering people is the fundamental one. That is the issue to keep before the American people until they force their representatives in the National Legislature to do justice.

[From the New York Evening Post—Independent.]

A SHAMEFUL SPECTACLE.

The open contempt with which the wishes and needs of the Puerto Ricans themselves have been treated will be an eye-opener to many and a serious burden for the Republican party to carry. The cool brutality of the whole affair is well brought out by the statement which the Puerto Ricans themselves made. This Government has actually negotiated a reciprocity treaty the effect of which is to give the inhabitants of Trinidad free food and free agricultural implements at the very moment it is proposing to tax its starving subjects in Puerto Rico 15 per cent of the high Dingley rates on the same articles. If such a thing is done the Republican party will be on the defensive from the very beginning of the campaign.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

MR. M'KINLEY'S POSITION.

President McKinley's attitude in this whole matter is to be discussed on higher than personal grounds. The poor figure he cuts as a man we pass by, but as the incumbent of a great office he has brought humiliation upon it as well as upon himself. To "stand by" him is impossible for his most earnest supporters, since he does not stand by himself. No man can serve two masters, nor a single master with two minds, neither of which he himself knows. "I had hoped," sneered a Democrat in the House yesterday, "that there was one question of which the President was not on both sides."

There was no answer to the taunt, for there could be none. Mr. McKinley is quoted vehemently both for and against the Puerto Rico bill, and he sits silent under the open charge of double dealing. The only question on which he is known to have firm and unchangeable opinions is that of his reelection. It was the unconcealed threat to defeat that which set him to jumping back and forth over the Puerto Rico fence with such agility. But why could he not have confronted his sordid and minatory visitors, if not as a brave man, at least as a courageous President? Why did not his office, if not his character, make him despise their threats?

[From the New York World—Democratic.]

ROBBERY AND HYPOCRISY.

The pretense that "all the money collected will go to the Puerto Ricans" is of a piece with the rest of the fraud and hypocrisy and robbery that are back of this bill. The duties paid upon the food and clothing of the starving and naked Puerto Ricans will not go back to the poor wretches who pay them. It will go to the carpetbag officials and other agents of the government that Mr. McKinley has set up there.

The bill violates the Constitution. It imposes upon the Puerto Ricans the tyranny of taxation without representation against which our forefathers rebelled. It violates the promise of General Miles to the inhabitants, never disavowed by our Government, that "Puerto Rico under the American flag will enjoy the same privileges and the same immunities as the citizens of the different States and Territories of the Union." It makes of Puerto Rico a "crown colony" instead of an American Territory.

After the London of the New World, let us see what the Athens of America thinks. I have in my introductory remarks quoted somewhat from the Boston newspapers. Hear furthermore these from Boston:

[From the Boston Post.]

NOT FOR PARTY CAUCUS TO DECIDE—RIGHT OF CONGRESS TO LEVY A TARIFF TAX ON PUERTO RICO.

We believe that the United States Government has no more right to collect duties upon goods imported from Puerto Rico than upon the products of Oklahoma or Arizona.

This is the view held also by Congressman McCALL, Congressman LITTLEFIELD, and other Republicans who have an old-fashioned regard for the Constitution. And, however Congress may vote on the question, it is the Supreme Court of the United States that must finally decide it. The matter is of too great and far-reaching importance to be allowed to rest upon the authority of a majority of a party caucus. It might be permissible, so long as Puerto Rico and the Philippines are held under military rule, for the President, by his authority as Commander in Chief, to levy taxes and tariffs in extraconstitutional form. But Congress, which is itself a creature of the Constitution, can not override or nullify the provisions of the source of its authority.

This body is restrained by limitations which do not exist in the case of the Executive acting as the supreme military power. Sooner or later the Supreme Court will have to pass upon whatever act of this character Congress may pass. This court is composed of six justices appointed as Republicans and three appointed as Democrats. But it is unlikely that party designations will rule in the judgment of this matter. Judge Brewer, as is known by his public utterances, does not sympathize with the imperialist policy. Judge Harlan holds traditional ideas of the relations of Congress and the Constitution. In short, if the Republican tariff bill for Puerto Rico is passed, there is a very likely chance that the whole scheme, including the Philippines and all the rest, may be ripped up by the Supreme Court.

[From the Boston Journal—Republican.]

A WANTON TAX.

There is no need of tariff discrimination against Puerto Rico to protect any American industry. The sugar product of the island is only 45,000 tons, or less than one-quarter of that of Hawaii—and Hawaiian sugar has been coming duty free into the United States for many years without appreciable effect upon domestic cane and beet producers. Puerto Rican tobacco is of a quality that does not compete with the Connecticut Valley or Virginia leaf. Coffee is the Puerto Rican staple of the future, and coffee has been on the free list for more than a quarter of a century. There is no reason in tariff conditions, therefore, why Puerto Rican products should be subjected to even 15 per cent of the Dingley rates.

[From the Boston Journal—Republican.]

THE FULFILLMENT OF A PROMISE.

Months ago President McKinley and Secretary Root pointed out the course which ought to have been taken. It was direct, intelligible, fair to the Puerto Ricans, just to all concerned. It was the unqualified admission of the island within our tariff system, with absolute freedom of commercial intercourse. The Journal considered this proposition at length at the time, and heartily approved it as the proper fulfillment of our plain obligation to the Puerto Rican people whom we had brought beneath our flag.

[From the Boston Traveler—Independent.]

"SOLD OUT."

"Sold out" is the only fitting epitaph to describe an Administration whose pledge to the world has been broken, by whose recreancy to the high principles it caused to be promulgated the American flag is made to stand for indirection and oppression, instead of liberty and relief for oppressed peoples. Shame upon President McKinley for eating his own words, publicly spoken, upon the rights of Puerto Rico.

"There should be no discriminating tariff against our new possessions." At the bidding of the great sugar and tobacco trusts he now says let them be taxed without representation. Let the Constitution be forced to permit of this grave injustice.

Sold out to sugar and tobacco!

I have previously quoted from the Boston Transcript. Let us hear further from the "City of Homes"—Philadelphia. The North American (Republican) on March 8 says:

It is evident that what the leaders of both parties at the capital still need to learn is that the country is not thinking of tariff percentages or points of constitutional construction in connection with Puerto Rico. The people know simply that it is our plain duty to deal justly with the inhabitants of this American island; that our plain duty will not be done until the Puerto Ricans, who supposed they were becoming Americans when they threw off their allegiance to Spain, are treated as Americans.

Anything short of that will be condemned by the sense of fair play, which the people of the United States have not lost. No fine-spun explanations of the necessity of sacrificing Puerto Rico in order to establish a precedent for use in the Philippines will satisfy. If the Philippines can not be retained without committing a crime against justice and liberty in Puerto Rico, it is highly probable the popular judgment will be that it would be better to turn the Philippines over to the Filipinos than to hold them at any such cost. If freedom does not follow the American flag when it is carried beyond this continent, then it had better be kept for use only where it does mean freedom.

This Puerto Rico outrage is breeding a rebellion against expansion. If we are not to expand except as imperialists, making ourselves hated as oppressors where we go, there will be an irresistible demand for the abandonment of a policy that can not be brought into harmony with the Constitution and that denies to others the rights which we claim in the Declaration of Independence for ourselves as natural and inalienable.

The Republican leaders at Washington are leading the Republican party away from Republicanism. President McKinley is face to face with a crisis, party and personal. The North American hopes to see him return to his message of December and take his stand inflexibly upon his recommendation of free trade with Puerto Rico. That stand was right and politic, and should never have been departed from, no matter what the nature or the strength of the adverse pressure. And we believe the President will return to it. He is too wise a man, too good a politician, to antagonize stubbornly the will of the masses of his party and the conscience of the American people.

[From the Philadelphia North American—Republican.]

SIX HONEST REPUBLICANS.

We congratulate the six Republicans who held out to the last against a pressure seldom felt, and seldomer resisted, and voted in accordance with their views of the Constitution and their personal sense of their duty to their country. Any country is the better for the possession of such high-minded and patriotic citizens—men who act upon the often quoted but seldom heeded maxim that "He serves his party best who serves his country best."

[From the Philadelphia Ledger—Republican.]

THE PUERTO RICO INFAMY—ROBBED AT HOME AND ABROAD.

On the day that the Republican majority of the House imposed upon Puerto Rico the rigors of a law intended to operate only against aliens—a law which, in the case of any part of this country, is opposed by the Declaration of Independence, which presents as a just cause of the Revolution taxation without representation, and which is condemned by the Constitution, which declares that all Federal taxation must be uniform throughout the United States—several hundred of the people of Puerto Rico, employed in the construction of military roads for the Washington Government, went on strike to secure an increase of remuneration for their labor from 3 cents to 5 cents per hour.

It appears that these workingmen, recently brought under the benevolent safeguard of the country's flag, are compelled by the United States Government's contractors to work on Government work under "the old flag" ten hours a day for 30 cents, or less than many of our workingmen here justly receive for a single hour's work.

It would be interesting to learn what the Republican leaders in and out of Congress think of the contractors of the Government who are constructing the military railroads, paying a wage of 3 cents an hour, or 30 cents for the labor of a ten-hour day, to their Puerto Rico employees. It might be similarly interesting to learn what our workingmen here at home think of their Government making all the money it can out of the Puerto Rican workmen by levying unconstitutional taxes upon them, upon the one hand, while on the other it pays them 30 cents a day on which to pay the taxes and sustain life.

[From the Philadelphia Ledger—Republican.]

SERVING THE TRUSTS.

The bill is a purely selfish one. It is directly in the interest of two of the most notorious trusts in the country. If the sugar trust and the New England Tobacco Association were out of the way, there would be no effort to starve the people of Puerto Rico, under the plea of giving them a government.

[From the Philadelphia Press—Republican.]

A BACKWARD STEP.

Complete freedom of trade between the United States and Puerto Rico is the ultimate condition of affairs between the Union and its dependency to which all look forward. Every step toward this is desirable.

[From the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph—Republican.]

WORSE THAN SPAIN.

What the Puerto Ricans need, and what they rightfully demand, first of all, is a fulfillment of the express and implied promise that their condition would be improved under American control, instead of being made worse, as is actually the case, than it was while they were subject to the corrupt and inefficient rule of Spain.

[From the Philadelphia Record—Independent.]

PETTY LARCENY.

The bill in the form in which the House passed it should be dubbed the petty larceny bill, and for the credit of the country and to save our weak-backed President from the disrepute of his own nerveless vacillation the Republican leaders in the Senate should fall foul of it when it shall reach that body and strangle it in committee. The people of the United States stand pledged to a different course of action toward the unfortunate people of Puerto Rico. They should make their pledges good in spite of protectionist repudiation.

But now, "Ho, for the Middle West," Indianapolis:

[From the Indianapolis News.]

PRESS WILL NOT BE SILENCED—WILL NEVER GIVE UP THE FIGHT AGAINST THE PUERTO RICAN TARIFF ACT.

Our friends in the East need not fear that the people and papers of Indiana will give up the fight against the Puerto Rican tariff act. They have enlisted for the war. And as the days go by the more clearly does it appear to them that the President has made a grave mistake—a mistake from every point of view. He has hurt his prestige, seriously weakened the party, and injured the standing of the country in the eyes of the world. After all the "explanations" that have been made, and in spite of the attempts to "educate" them, the people of Indiana, unlike Mr. McKinley, adhere to the opinion that we ought to do what the President said was "our plain duty."

The virtue and vigor of a free and untrammeled press have rarely been more plainly illustrated than by the conduct of the American newspapers since the Puerto Rican tariff measure was proposed. There are defenders of it among the press, but they are few and far between. The prominence, the persistence, and the force with which the measure has been opposed by the press in all parts of the country is one of the best guaranties that the people can have of a great defense and guardianship of liberty. As long as the press is not hampered by law, and is undeterred by private interests, that is, as long as it is free and honest, so long the people have a most potent defender against invasions of every liberty, be these what they may.

In the Puerto Rican case there is apparently no cessation of opposition. Day after day, first one, then another, and sometimes all together, there are shots at this measure. Why should we treat Puerto Rico with less consideration now that she is ours than we did when she belonged to Spain? It is recalled that there was a reciprocity treaty negotiated with Spain when Mr. Harrison was President, which put Puerto Rican sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides on the free list, while it gave a number of our products, including flour, free entry to the island. What we were willing to do then we hesitate to do now.

Now, when the island belongs to us, when we are responsible for the care of its people, we refuse to do what we were willing to do when it was a colony of Spain. We have just now negotiated a treaty with the island of Trinidad, a British possession in the West Indies. It will receive all articles of machinery, implements of husbandry, and nearly all food supplies free, the free list being larger than the list of articles admitted free from Puerto Rico by Executive order, but all of which it is proposed to tax under the bill that Congress is now considering. Thus we are proposing to treat the possessions of other countries better than our own, and discriminating among our own possessions! Verily, the American people will not stand this.

[From the Indianapolis Journal.]

MISTAKE OF ADMINISTRATION—"CAMPAIGN OF EDUCATION" ON THE PUERTO RICAN TARIFF WILL FAIL.

If the attitude and policy of the Administration regarding the Puerto Rican tariff bill are correctly foreshadowed by Washington dispatches, it will add another to the mistakes already made in this matter. It is said to have been decided upon at a Cabinet meeting to inaugurate a campaign of enlightenment and education of the people, in the belief that when they understand the question in all its bearings they will withdraw their opposition to the House bill and admit that in the peculiar circumstances of the case a tariff on commerce between the United States and Puerto Rico is proper and necessary.

It is said the campaign of education will include evidence that the proposed tariff is only a temporary measure; that it is necessary to establish a precedent for the Philippines, and that its real effect will be to give the Government a free hand in fostering Puerto Rican industries. All this ground has been gone over. It is straw twice thrashed.

The people have considered the matter from a broad and liberal point of view, without regard to temporary expedients or makeshift policies, and they are of opinion that a fair construction of the Constitution in the interest of national honor and justice requires that the door to trade between the United States and Puerto Rico, both ways, be thrown wide open.

No argument of political expediency or party advantage can lead the people to look at the matter differently. They breathe a different atmosphere from that which sometimes pervades party caucuses and conferences in Washington, and they must be permitted to reach their conclusions in their own way. No campaign of education is needed in this case. It is not only unnecessary, but it will be politically injurious.

[From the Indianapolis Journal—Republican.]

A BAD BILL AT BEST.

The Journal has already stated the reasons why, in its opinion, the bill should not be passed. Those reasons relate to the constitutionality, the justice, the fairness, the wisdom, and the expediency of the measure. All the arguments in favor of it are based on sordid and mercenary considerations which should have no place in the policy of a great nation toward the people of a newly acquired territory. The bill should not be passed at all, and the two years' proposition does not help it any.

[From the Indianapolis Press—Republican.]

A DAMAGING COMPROMISE.

The American people do not take kindly to invasions of their primary rights. They see in this Puerto Rican measure—or if they do not now they will see later—a dangerous departure in constitutional construction. It means a reversal of American traditions.

I have previously read to the House a part of another strong editorial from the Indianapolis Journal, and a special from Indianapolis appears earlier in my remarks.

The same cry comes from all parties in Baltimore:

[From the Baltimore American—Republican.]

COLONIAL RIGHTS.

There should be no discrimination. Puerto Rico should be made to feel that her interests are identical with our own. This can not be done by raising a tariff barrier between her and this country. The recommendations made several months ago by President McKinley, Secretary Root, and Governor-General Davis were made after fullest investigation and careful thought. They were then the wisest, considering all conditions. The true manhood of the nation, considering first the good of the people of Puerto Rico, fails now to comprehend how, in so short a time, those recommendations can be said to have been erroneous and opposed to the best interests of all concerned.

[From the Baltimore Herald—Republican.]

ADVICE TO THE SENATE.

In justice to the people of Puerto Rico and in recognition of their reasonable claims upon the generosity of the United States, it is to be hoped that the Senate will resist the imposition of a duty. The population of the island was led to expect liberal treatment, and was induced to welcome American control by promises which, if not very explicit, are none the less binding. Having lost the Spanish markets as a result of the war, Puerto Ricans may rightfully look to us for assistance.

[From the Baltimore Sun—Democratic.]

POLITICS AND INHUMANITY.

The purpose of the Administration in setting up a tariff barrier between the United States and a part of its territory is very plain. The President holds that Congress has the right to govern our dependencies without regard to the Constitution—in fact, to keep the territory which we have acquired by purchase, conquest, or annexation permanently outside of the Constitution.

From this point of view, as stated on the authority of Mr. Henry L. Nelson, Congress has the power to establish one tariff system in Puerto Rico, another system in the Philippines, and a third in Hawaii; or, if it pleases, to impose duties on the products of Puerto Rico and the Philippines, but to admit the products of Hawaii to the United States free of duty. In order to establish this principle the starving and indigent Puerto Ricans will be taxed, ostensibly for the purpose of raising revenue for the island, on articles of food and deprived of all the privileges which the Constitution gives to the people of the country by which they have been annexed. To maintain this extra-constitutional theory, therefore, the party in power has deliberately committed itself to an act of inhumanity unparalleled in the history of the United States.

The refrain is taken up by the rival cities, Cincinnati and Louisville:

[From the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune—Republican.]

A HELPLESS PEOPLE.

If permitted to sell their products in the United States free from duty and buy what American products they need duty free, the Puerto Ricans will be able to pay all the taxes that will be required to raise money for the support of the insular government. To give them less than this is to take criminal advantage of helplessness.

I have previously quoted some strong language from this same Commercial-Tribune, and also from its Democratic rival, the Enquirer.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal—Democratic.]

THE PRESIDENT'S DOWNFALL.

In December last the Republican party, speaking through its President, who owed his nomination—whatever may be true of his election—to his zeal for protection, said it was the "plain duty" of this country to give free trade to Puerto Rico. Now, political exigencies may change. Policies must necessarily be modified to meet changing conditions. But expediency does not change the moral law. "The Ten Commandments will not budge." A "plain duty" in December is a plain duty in February.

The fear that an honest discharge of this duty might change the vote of Connecticut or some other State next November has nothing to do with the obligation. The President has once or twice admitted that he has been coerced into doing certain things by the compelling force of the Almighty. But "let no man say when he is tempted he is tempted of God: for God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed." No man is tempted of God to disregard a plain duty. Nothing can be clearer than that.

Then there is a word to be said by Kansas City:

[From the Kansas City Journal—Republican.]

UNFAIR AND UNGENEROUS.

Even if the bill pass both Houses and receive the President's signature, the fact will remain that the Puerto Ricans are being treated unfairly and ungenerously at the hands of the country from which they had a right to expect better things.

[From the Kansas City Times—Democratic.]

THE ISLAND'S CONDITION.

Peurto Rico is run down and needs good care for a time, but we have "infant" industries crying for the sustenance that might otherwise go to her. They have their millions as the potent weapons of political warfare, while she is impoverished in claims, except in the inferior class that appeals only to Christianity and humanity. This is a terrible handicap in a contest where practical politics seek to decide.

Both parties join in one voice of protest from Detroit:

[From the Detroit Tribune—Republican.]

TO REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN.

Congressmen, especially those from Michigan, have been bombarded with letters and telegrams telling them to stand firm for free trade with Puerto Rico and the honor of the nation. It remains to be seen whether the people or the protected interests will conquer. The struggle is being watched by the people, and there will be a day of reckoning for those Congressmen who capitulate to the capitalists when they come up for reelection.

[From the Detroit Free Press—Democratic.]

THE PRESIDENT'S SHAME.

Party zealots may applaud the President's performance as a precious example of peacemaking. They may extol his party loyalty in subordinating his personal convictions to considerations of expediency and advantage at the threshold of a Presidential campaign. They may say, "Behold the secret of William McKinley's political success."

But to the American minds that are unclouded by selfish political or commercial considerations, the consent of the Executive to a compromise that involves faithlessness to the noblest national traditions is anything but inspiring or sagacious. It will open the eyes of Americans who were sincere in their desire to extend the blessings of our republican institutions to oppressed and benighted peoples, and it will be seized upon by the foes of empire as confirmatory of all that they have claimed concerning the sordid character of the imperialist programme.

Then not only does the New Haven Chamber of Commerce pass resolutions calling on you to halt in your mad career of imperialistic legislation, but these resolutions are approved and reenforced by the most intellectual and statesmanlike Republican newspaper in Connecticut, perhaps in New England. You all know it. It is edited in that seat of learning, Hartford:

[From the Hartford Courant—Republican.]

THE CONNECTICUT OPINION.

There is something very significant in those resolutions of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, protesting against a tariff upon Puerto Rican products. That is a large and representative body of business men, made up without regard to politics. It was widely known that such resolutions were to come up, and yet there was not an adverse vote. We must admit that the sentiment of the New Haven business men reflects the general sentiment of the State, as far as we have tested it. The message of President McKinley, a recognized leader of protection, advocating free Puerto Rican trade as a matter of justice, set the drift of thought all that way, and things are not especially different now from their condition when the message was read and received with applause in Congress. The feeling is widespread that we owe it to these people not to choke them to death with our embrace of welcome.

[From the Hartford Courant—Republican.]

AN APPEAL TO THE SENATE.

"No question is settled until it is settled right." This question of fair play to the Puerto Ricans has not been settled. It has been evaded and postponed. We were bound—we are still bound—in honor and decency and conscience to see to it that the people are no worse off but better off for coming under the sovereignty of the United States. They had lost the best of their old markets. We were bound—and are still bound—to make that loss good to them. Our duty was our interest, too. Better a thousand times the appropriation out of the Federal Treasury for the urgent needs of the island which President McKinley had in view than the raising of the money by a tax upon its struggling industries and a denial of its legitimate hopes.

What the purblind and blundering leadership in the House has done is grievously to disappoint the people of Puerto Rico, to chill and alienate them, and to put a new weapon in the hands of the Republican party's enemies. To say that to give free trade to Puerto Rico would have been to recognize Puerto Rico as an integral part of the United States is—with all necessary respect for a number of honorable Congressmen—to talk puerile nonsense. The Republican Senators have now an opportunity to do their country and their party a service of importance. Perhaps they may see it and improve it. We are not building any very sanguine hopes on the chance, however.

Upon this position and the expressions of the Hartford Courant the Washington Post writes this:

"THE BAD POLITICS OF IT."

Inasmuch as the tobacco interest of Connecticut was one of the principal factors in effecting that sudden an amazing change which arrayed the House of Representatives against the President's earnest recommendation of free trade for Puerto Rico, it may interest our Republican friends in Congress to learn what the Hartford Courant, the leading Republican paper of that State, thinks of the Puerto Rican tariff bill. "The bad politics of it" is the caption of a recent Courant editorial calling attention to extracts which it reproduces from "seven representative Republican journals of the great West—two of them published in the State of President McKinley and Senator HANNA."

The Courant says the bill strikes nearly all the other journals of that class out there in the same way; that not merely these big city newspapers but also the newspapers of the little cities and towns are crying out at the folly of it. It could easily fill a page, it says, with their outspoken protests against it.

That is the simple truth, and it seems to us to present a situation to which the leaders of the dominant party in Congress can not afford to be blind. The Courant adds:

"The amazement with which the Republicans of the West viewed it at first is rapidly changing to anger. The indications are that, if it were submitted to popular vote by referendum, it would be beaten a thousand to one. There is good reason for fearing that Indiana is not the only State of the Middle West that will be instantly moved over into the 'doubtful' column by its enactment.

"Is it wise politics, we again ask the politicians of the Senate and House 'steering committees,' to jam through by sheer force of party discipline a measure so obnoxious to millions of voters whose votes will be wanted—and needed—eight months from now?"

The two or three Republican Congressmen who have taken pains to inform the Post of their disapproval of its plainness of speech on this question will possibly find it convenient to write to the editor of the Courant. In common with every other independent journal and nearly the entire Republican press, the Post promptly indorsed President McKinley's view of "our plain duty" in this matter. The Post stands with the President, with his latest Republican predecessor, with President Schurman, of the Philippine Commission, with the leaders of thought in education and religion, and with the masses of the people, "the plain people," as the Philadelphia Press designates the general run of voting citizens.

In performing its imperative duty as an independent newspaper, it is not compelled, as it has sometimes been, to set itself against the current of public sentiment. It will be fortunate for the Republican party if its leaders in both Houses of Congress will give heed to the warnings of such judicious counselors as the Hartford Courant and those "representative Republican journals of the great West" to whose deliverances the Courant invites their attention.

From the far-off West, "where Oregon rolls," this:

[From the Portland Oregonian—Republican.]

THE PRESIDENT'S MASTER.

The probability, as the Oregonian supposes, is that the President, who said a while ago that it was "our plain duty" to grant struggling Puerto Rico free trade, has been badgered by selfish protected interests into silen acquiescence in this bill. In the ancient day it was said: "There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things that say not, 'It is enough.'" In the modern day there is a fifth. It is the "protected grafter."

From Milwaukee, "where good beer is made," this:

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel—Republican.]

DECEIVED.

If Congress does not do "our plain duty" by Puerto Rico and give her free trade with this country, if it takes the other term of the alternative, the Puerto Ricans will be justified in looking with contempt upon future American protestations of disinterested affection.

And this from the Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel:

SOME POINTED OBSERVATIONS ON THE PUERTO RICAN ISSUE.

Whenever the members of a political party are sharply divided in opinion upon an important question, each side accuses the other of doing the party harm. Thus Senator HANNA assures the Republican advocates of free trade with Puerto Rico that their persistence is injurious to the Republican party. At the same time those Republicans who disagree with Mr. HANNA are convinced that the party will lose a good many votes by giving Puerto Rico anything less than free trade.

As we have already taken sides in this controversy, and have seen no reason for modifying our opinions, we can not of course aspire to the office of judge between the contending forces. But it seems to us that pretty good reasons can be given for believing that it is the opponents of free trade with Puerto Rico who are doing the party most harm.

Say that they are successful and that the Republican party refuses to give Puerto Rico free trade. Upon what hypothesis can this course be explained? Not by saying that free trade with Puerto Rico would have made the island part of the Federal Union and brought it under the Constitution, because Senator DAVIS has shown by his amendment how free trade may be given at the same time that any constitutional right to free trade is denied.

Not by saying that the constitutional question involved can not be brought before the Supreme Court except by imposing a tariff, for a suit to recover duties on goods already sent from Puerto Rico to the United States would bring before the court precisely those constitutional questions which the opponents of free trade are anxious to have the court settle. Not by dropping constitutional questions for questions of revenue. Not by saying that the money which Puerto Rico needs can be raised only by a tariff between the island and the United States.

The President, by recommending an appropriation from the Treasury, and the House of Representatives, by passing a bill appropriating about $2,000,000, have shown that there is one other way of giving Puerto Rico what she needs. The Puerto Ricans themselves, by declaring that they prefer internal revenue taxation, and by submitting estimates of a greater revenue from this taxation than the proposed tariff will yield, have shown that there is a third way. Not by saying that the duties will all be paid by the sugar trust and the tobacco trust, and that these combinations now own all the sugar and tobacco on hand, because the governor-general of the island has said that Puerto Ricans are still in possession of these commodities.

None of these hypotheses is in accordance with facts. No tolerably well-informed person will be satisfied by any one of them, or by all of them, as an explanation of the refusal of free trade to Puerto Rico. But there is another hypothesis. Let us look at it. Certain protected industries, among which most conspicuous are the sugar trust and the tobacco trust, objected to free trade with Puerto Rico. They objected still more strenuously to free trade with the Philippines, and looked upon free trade with Puerto Rico as the thin edge of the wedge.

Therefore, they sent their agents to Washington, where these agents have assured Congressmen and Senators that the workingmen and the farmers are fiercely opposed to free trade and will vote against the Republicans unless a tariff be imposed. And many Senators and Congressmen have believed, upon wholly insufficient evidence, what these agents said. Next these same agents have informed the party managers that if free trade is given to Puerto Rico, not a dollar will be given to the party campaign fund by either the tobacco trust or the sugar trust. And the party managers have been impressed.

Now, this is only a hypothesis. But who can doubt not only that it is the explanation upon which the Democrats will insist, but also that it is easier to believe than any of the "Constitution" or "revenue" explanations? If the voters of the United States think that protected interests should control the policy of the United States toward its new possessions, then a refusal of free trade to Puerto Rico is "good politics." If the voters do not believe this, then it is Mr. HANNA and the Republicans who agree with him that are doing the party the most harm.

From everywhere in the North and East and West hear the voices of a self-respecting press:

[From the Minneapolis Times.]

ONE OF CHAUNCEY'S CHOICEST.

Senator DEPEW'S statement that the workingmen of this country with one voice demand a protective tariff against little Puerto Rico is one of his choicest jests. He could get a laugh at almost any banquet by repeating it.

[From the Rockford (Ill.) Republic—Republican].

UNPOPULAR AND UNJUST.

There is more danger in the Puerto Rican bill than its promoters in Congress dream of in their ostrich-like philosophy. The bill seems strong in the support of hired trust attorneys in the lobbies and occupying seats in both Houses of Congress, and they are striving with desperate energy to force it through in defiance of the most powerful and general popular protest that has ever been aroused by proposed Congressional legislation.

[From the Los Angeles Times—Republican.]

FROM A FRUIT-GROWING STATE.

Our fellow-citizens of Puerto Rico, United States of America, are entitled to the relief which even the pending measure would afford. But absolute free trade with the United States proper would suit them better, and as a matter of simple justice they seem to be entitled to it.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer—Democratic.]

THE PRESIDENT'S SURRENDER.

Once more President McKinley has surrendered to dictation. He knows what is his "plain duty," but has promised he will not do it. That promise secured the passage of the bill, the principle of which had been condemned by all conversant with the situation in Puerto Rico, including the President himself.

[From the Buffalo Express—Republican.]

A NATIONAL DISGRACE.

Is the starvation of a people by the Government responsible for their welfare less criminal when enforced for industrial or fiscal reasons, or to establish a constitutional precedent, than when enforced as a war measure to put down rebellion against national authority? The United States stands shamed before all the world that eighteen months of our rule have brought the Puerto Ricans to such a pass as this.

[From the Peoria (Ill.) Journal—Republican.]

THE POLITICAL DEATH KNELL.

That Puerto Rican measure will sound the death knell of several Congressmen if they are not careful. When the people get in earnest they are not to be fooled with, and there is no doubt that they are in earnest in that matter.

From all over Dixie land, where the people revere the written Constitution as the only shield for themselves and their posterity, and where a conservative adherence to the traditional policies of the Republic and a loving obedience to the teachings of the fathers are still in vogue, these voices come:

PUERTO RICAN ROBBERY.

To enable that party to regain the ground it had lost, the bill to use the duties already paid on Puerto Rican products coming into our markets was devised. It was dictated by politics. But will this bill cure the blunder which the Republicans have made? It is very doubtful. The whole country understands now that the Republicans, in all they are doing in respect to Puerto Rico, are guided by political considerations. They are not trying to assist the poverty-stricken people of Puerto Rico; they are trying to reelect Mr. McKinley.—Savannah News.

The Republican press of the country is almost of one thought on the Puerto Rico tariff question. The Republican party in Congress is almost a unit upon it also. But the press and these leaders are, strangely enough, on opposite sides. If the press represents the sentiments of the Republican masses, the leaders in Congress have made a great big mistake.—Mobile Register.

The claim of Mr. CANNON that the sugar and tobacco in Puerto Rico are owned by the trusts, hence the proposal to tax these articles, is unique, to say the least, but it will hardly succeed in deceiving anyone.—Birmingham News.

With the abolition of Spanish rule in Puerto Rico the natives had an impression that the island had become a part of Uncle Sam's domain. The Republicans have apprised them of the fact that they have been turned over to the trust syndicates, with no Constitution to bar the rapacity of the latter. This is, indeed, a cheerful condition.—Jackson Sun.

[From the Atlanta Constitution—Democratic.]

A DISGRACE TO AMERICA.

The proposition does not even possess the merit of honesty. The suggestion that the tax be imposed for only two years is a confession that it is blackmail under form of law, a holding up of an innocent people by a highwayman, aided and abetted by the United States Government. If the tax were to be imposed as a perpetuity, honesty might be claimed, but the offer to make it temporary is full proof that there is a beneficiary held out waiting for the spoils. Was ever a more infamous raid made upon the offerings of charity? Were ever a people more outraged than the islanders who welcomed the United States flag? History fails to chronicle such a case, and if the scheme of taxation is carried through, it will be a lasting stigma upon the American name.

[From the Charleston News and Courier—Democratic.]

THE FINAL APPEAL.

The only hope of the Puerto Ricans against the outrage perpetrated by the bill lies in an appeal to the Supreme Court by some one adversely affected by the special tariff. As was repeatedly shown by the speeches in Congress in opposition to the bill, it has been invariably held by the United States Supreme Court that all territory acquired by the United States becomes ipso facto a part of the United States, and under the protection of the Constitution. Therefore the special tariff, if resisted by litigation, can not be enforced, unless the Supreme Court has become so thoroughly Republicanized (in a party sense) as to reverse all its previous decisions on the same question. We shall see what we shall see.

Why, even "Southern Republicans" who generally ask nothing but the party label, are "passing resolutions" and protesting against you as, in this respect, wrongdoers and iniquity workers! Read this Washington Post account of doings in Fairfax, Va.:

A WORD FROM "THE PLAIN PEOPLE."

The Post ventures to remind its valued and valiant contemporary, the Philadelphia Press, that there is a very considerable contingent of "the plain people" over in Fairfax County, Va., who do really and urgently need its most powerful ministrations. They are Republicans and they mean to be loyal, but recent events have placed them in an unhappy situation, as has been the case with their political brethren all over the country. They held a convention on Monday, the 19th instant, and here is the result:

"Resolved, That the Republicans of this county indorse the Administration of William McKinley and his devotion to the principles of the party he represents, and regret that he has been called upon, under pressure, to modify his action, as outlined in his message, in regard to the question of trade with Puerto Rico, believing, as we do, that the American flag carries with it the pledges and protection of the Constitution; but having full faith in his loyalty and devotion to the best interests of all the people, we indorse him for renomination and election as President of these United States."

The Press will perceive that these "plain people" experienced great difficulty in being loyal alike to the leader of their party and to their own convictions. Had they been less "plain" and more shrewd and diplomatic, they would have avoided any embarrassment by ignoring all rumors of a change of views on the part of the President. Their true policy would have been to frame a resolution congratulatory of the President's Puerto Rico policy, so clearly and forcibly enunciated in his message.

They might, with superb effect, have embodied in their resolution that impressive sentence in which "our plain duty" is so clearly pointed out that it can not possibly be mistaken. But, being merely "plain people," lacking in finesse, in cunning, and in the art of using words to conceal thoughts, they spoke from their simple, honest hearts just what they thought—just what millions of "the plain people" in forty-five States are thinking.

It is true they amount to nothing, but when they "dare cheep" against the party, sentiment must be strong, indeed.

But why not hear the Puerto Ricans themselves? Sixty-six per cent of them are "white people," and they are supposed to be "free," and the petitioners below referred to at least are "21." Hear what they say:

ASK STABILITY, NOT RELIEF—NEEDS OF PUERTO RICANS PRESENTED BY PETITION AT SAN JUAN—DISTRESS AND ALARM DAILY BECOMING MORE HARASSING FOR WANT OF A FIXED POLICY—UTTERLY UNABLE TO HOLD OUT MUCH LONGER.

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO, March 19, 1900.

A large gathering of 10,000 people, headed by the San Juan Chamber of Commerce, assembled at the palace of the governor-general to-day to submit a petition with reference to the needs of the island. The deputation selected to present it was received, in the absence of General Davis, who was indisposed, by Lieutenant-Colonel Hall, adjutant-general. On behalf of General Davis, Lieutenant-Colonel Hall expressed pleasure at seeing so many people who were interested in a question of such importance, and assured them that Puerto Rico would receive justice. An account of the proceedings will be transmitted to Washington.

The crowd was orderly, and dispersed without confusion amid "vivas" for the United States and the governor-general. Following is the text of the petition:

"The people of Puerto Rico, of all classes, represented by the mayor of this city and by the chamber of commerce, in peaceful assembly convened, call upon Governor-General Davis respectfully to direct his attention, and through him the attention of Washington, to the following most salient points of the present critical condition of the island:

"First. The consternation into which the business community in general has been thrown on account of recent cabled news from the United States, setting forth the negative attitude of the Senate as regards the tariff question.

"Second. The utter inability of the island to hold out much longer under existing conditions, as the Senate's delay in coming to a decision on the tariff simply aggravates the almost absolute state of penury throughout the island.

"Third. The urgent necessity of a final settlement of the question as a means of saving to their owners, mostly men of small means, the sugar and tobacco crops, which would pass under the control of speculators if a conclusion is not soon reached, this being the time for planting new crops, and a failure to act promptly being also calculated to have most prejudicial results.

"Fourth. The distress and alarm that are daily becoming more harassing in all branches of trade, owing to the virtual lack of a fixed and definite standard for transactions, and the grave apprehensions as to the future, now so generally entertained by all merchants.

"Fifth. The absence of buyers for products, which, with the loss of their former markets, as a consequence of the new régime, are now at a practical standstill.

"Sixth. The enormous depreciation of property, more especially on plantations, and the ruin staring a majority of the planters in the face as the result of the unnatural uneasiness which has made itself felt among capitalists and loan institutions, leading them to curtail or to shut off entirely the credit necessary in moving crops.

"Seventh. The lack of power as well as the absence of credit to contract a loan for the relief of most of the present necessities and the development of resources.

"Eighth. The need of undertakings of a public nature, instead of relief supplies, which, although necessary, tend to make paupers of the working classes.

"These statements, respectfully made, your petitioners respectfully request the Governor-General to bring to the knowledge of the Government at Washington, trusting that a favorable solution may speedily be found.

"ANDRES CROSAS.
"President of the Chamber of Commerce of San Juan.
"M. IGOZCUE,
"Mayor of the City of San Juan."

If you hope, after defying both the Constitution and public opinion, still to remain in power by "dodging the issue," you may find food for reflection in the following editorial from St. Louis:

The St. Louis Republic says:

IT CAN NOT BE DODGED.

Senator DAVIS'S amendment to the Puerto Rican tariff bill recently passed by the House of Representatives is an awkward attempt at a compromise of principle by means of which it is hoped that the Administration and the Republican party may escape the penalty due for the passage of that iniquitous measure.

The Davis amendment proposes to grant free trade to Puerto Rico on a peculiar assumption that certain provisions of the Constitution apply to that island without necessarily extending to the Philippines. In this manner it would be possible for the tariff imperialists to surrender their original position favoring the taxing of Puerto Rico and yet have a fighting chance left to exact the Philippine tribute. The trick is eminently characteristic of its originators.

It is not likely, however, that it will fool the American people, now so thoroughly awake to the peril of that lofty contempt for the Constitution and the rights of Americans so flagrantly manifested by the passage of the Puerto Rican tariff bill by the House. Nor is it likely that, when the expected Republican backdown on that issue comes, the President can be effectually shielded from blame by the claim that he urged free trade for Puerto Rico in his message to Congress last December.

No one denies that the President was on the right side then, but he flopped later in a most pitiable manner. Speaker HENDERSON, Congressman WATSON, of Indiana, and other Republicans in the House assert that the Administration influence was exerted to secure the passage of the Puerto Rican tariff bill.

The President and his party must face the people on this vital issue. They have shown their purpose under a misapprehension of public sentiment. They stand committed to the repudiation of the Constitution on behalf of the tariff trusts. The people will pass judgment on that record.

But there are people who affect to despise newspapers.

Let such take counsel from those whom you yourselves have in the past recognized as great men, pure men, and patriots.

Ever since I have been in Congress there has been one giant Republican intellect that has towered above the rest of you like a giant among pygmies—sometimes narrow, intolerant, and bitter in his partisan zeal, but a marvel of quickness, penetration, and common sense, a great man—Thomas B. Reed.

He opposes your oriental expansion, colonial government, and imperialistic policies.

Benjamin Harrison, ex-President, whom you have delighted in times past to honor, appeals to you to do justice under the Constitution to the people of Puerto Rico. Ex-Senator Edmunds, ex-Senator Henderson, Carl Schurz, ex-Senators Boutwell and Sherman, Senators HOAR, MASON, DAVIS, PROCTOR, and others—members of both Houses or retired full of honors, I can not name them all—appeal to you to halt. Boards of trade and commerce, Republican conventions, State legislatures join in the appeal.

Your President has said in his message:

It must be borne in mind that since the cession Puerto Rico has been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty. The markets of Spain are closed to her products except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without customs duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports. She has therefore lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba without any compensating benefits in this market. Her coffee was little known and not in use by our people, and therefore there was no demand here for this, one of her chief products. The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty—

This is strong language: "Our plain duty."

A great American, whom all good men love, once said: "Duty is the noblest word in the English language."

Our "plain duty"—"plain" is obvious, palpable, undeniable.

Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

And yet this "plainness" has become "obscurity" for no publicly expressed reason, save the one expressed in this debate, to wit, "Lest Finley should grow rich!" And even "Finley" existed when the President wrote his message. Your Secretary of War, in his report of November 29, 1899, has used these words, which he can not unpublish, though he may regret that they arise to rebuke him:

The question of the economic treatment of the island underlies all the others. If the people are prosperous and have an abundance of the necessities of life, they will with justice be easily governed, and will with patience be easily educated. If they are left in hunger and hopeless poverty, they will be discontented, intractable, and mutinous. The principal difficulty now in the island of Puerto Rico is that the transfer of the island from Spain to the United States has not resulted in an increase of prosperity, but in the reverse. The industry of the island is almost entirely agricultural. The people live upon the products of their own soil and upon the articles for which they exchange their surplus products abroad. Their production is in the main of coffee, sugar, and tobacco. The prosperity of the island depends upon their success in selling these products.

So long as the island was a part of the Spanish possessions there was substantially free trade with Spain and with Cuba. The total exports from Puerto Rico for the four years preceding 1897 averaged about $16,609,000, of which an average of less than one-sixth part ($2,630,000) was sold to the United States and an average of one-half ($8,025,000) was sold to Spain and Cuba. Immediately upon the transfer of the island from Spain to the United States Spain erected a tariff barrier against the introduction of Puerto Rican products. The interests of Cuban agriculture led to the erection of a similar barrier in the tariff adopted for Cuba, so that Puerto Rico was debarred from the principal markets which she had previously enjoyed, and at the same time this country has maintained its tariff against Puerto Rican products just as it existed while the island was Spanish territory. The result is that there has been a wall built around the industry of Puerto Rico.

Even before the hurricane of August 8, 1899, two crops of tobacco lay in the warehouses of Puerto Rico, which the owners were unable to sell at prices equal to the cost of production. Their sugar shared the prevailing depression in that commodity, arising from the competition of bounty-fed beet sugar. Their coffee was practically unknown in the United States and had no market here. It is plain that it is essential to the prosperity of the island that she should receive substantially the same treatment at our hands as she received from Spain while a Spanish colony, and that the markets of the United States should be opened to her as were the markets of Spain and Cuba before the transfer of allegiance.

Congress has the legal right to regulate the customs duties between the United States and Puerto Rico as it pleases, but the highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Puerto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States, and that we should treat the interests of this people as our own; and I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Puerto Rico and the United States be removed.

Alas! that the dread of Finley's wealth should have shunted his train of thought!

Your military commander in Puerto Rico joined his voice to theirs. Professor Schurman, the president of the Philippine commission appointed by your President, Mr. McKinley, writes the following letter to a personal friend:

ITHACA, March 13, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I agree with you that the United States is under obligation to extend its tariff laws to the island of Puerto Rico. But I can not accept your contention that this obligation is derived from the Constitution, which, in my judgment, does not of its own force apply to annexed territories. The obligation is moral, not constitutional. As the President said, with equal truth and felicity, it is "our plain duty."

We are bound to this course by solemn promises. The supreme and irresistible reason for removing all customs barriers between the United States and Puerto Rico is the promise made by General Miles, when first landing American forces on the island, that the Puerto Ricans should enjoy the same rights, privileges, and immunities as the people of the United States. On this understanding the Puerto Ricans accepted American sovereignty, not only without opposition, but with joyful trust and confidence.

The present issue is simply this: Shall we repudiate, or shall we fulfill, the national engagements? Shall this great Republic break faith with the little island of Puerto Rico? Having secured the fruits of General Miles's promise, shall we now renounce the promise?

The American people will not tolerate any faltering with solemn obligations. Recognizing the national good faith as the Nation's chiefest good, they will condemn any violation of it as the blackest crime. All over the country this Puerto Rican question has stirred to the deepest the national heart and conscience; legislation, inspired by a breach of good faith, will bring a terrible Nemesis. It is said that a tariff is needed between Puerto Rico and the United States to provide a case for the courts to determine the extent of our jurisdiction over the new dependencies, especially the Philippines. I answer that no convenience, no expediency, no other obligation ever justifies a breach of the national good faith.

Let me add, too, that this Puerto Rican legislation is testing us before the eyes of the Filipinos, who keep well informed of all our doings. They will judge by this legislation of the value of American promises. When the ablest and most statesmanlike of Aguinaldo's emissaries to the Philippine commission once expressed the fear that the American Government might not keep the promises it was making, for Spain, said he, made promises and broke them, I silenced him with the reply: "Signor, the United States is not Spain."

Is he now to learn, are all the Filipinos now to learn, that in the first legislation for our new dependencies we prove faithless to our pledges and recreant to our obligations? Such an exhibition of ourselves will strengthen the hands of Aguinaldo and the insurgents, because unhappily it can be used to support their persistent statement that the Americans are no more trustworthy than the Spaniards.

At the very moment when we need to inspire confidence in the minds of the conquered Filipinos, shall we commit an act which will confirm their distrust of us, quicken their suspicions, and breed new, and perhaps, ineradicable antipathies? God forbid!

I clipped it from the Washington Post of March 16. Can you not afford to heed your own "High Insular Tycoon and Paramount Imperial Mogul?"

The two greatest constitutional lawyers who have served in either House of Congress within my personal recollection were Senators James Z. George, of Mississippi, and George F. Edmunds, of Vermont.

The former is dead; the latter still lives. Here is a letter from him to Senator PROCTOR, published in the RECORD:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 21, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 20th instant, and, both as an American citizen and an original and constant Republican, am very glad to learn that you are opposed to legislation having the effect of imposing on the people of Puerto Rico—whether we call them citizens or subjects of the United States—any kind of revenue burden or benefit that is not common to the whole people of the United States. Any such measure, if enacted, will, I believe, be unique in our whole history. It will imitate and parallel the acts of the British Parliament which forced our fathers to resistance and revolution and led them to establish a Constitution which, in studied and explicit terms, forbade any such discrimination.

I know there are many gentlemen engaged in public affairs, whose intelligence and patriotism are above question, who believe that our Constitution does not embrace the Territories, and that as to them the President and Congress possess the same omnipotent powers that the British Crown and Parliament have always possessed over their possessions. While I think that position is untenable as a matter of law, I believe the proposed action is still less defensible viewed in the light of those principles of liberty, justice, and equality of rights we all profess to believe in, and which, whether we believe in and practice or not, are still living, and will live and bear fruits more and more among men, in spite of all the tyrants, well-meaning or otherwise, in the world.

I need not weary you by referring to the often stated arguments on the general subject, but I will mention one aspect of it which, so far as I have noticed, has not been particularly adverted to. Congress is the creature of the Constitution, and not the reverse. A law passed by Congress is its creation, a mere expression of its will, which it may repeal or change at pleasure. If, therefore (assuming that the Constitution does not exist in Puerto Rico), Congress were to enact a statute declaring that the present Constitution shall be extended over and be in force in that island, the Constitution gets its only force there by the virtue of the statute. It is a statutory Constitution, and nothing else, and a repeal of the statute would extinguish it.

But the Constitution, as such, I suppose all admit is not subject to the control of Congress, either to enlarge or diminish, to expand or contract, or to be applied to or withdrawn from any people or place. It is not a movable thing like the Ark of the Covenant of the Israelites, to be set up and moved here or there, as the tribes might wander. It is the actual event and condition, and not the legislative or executive will that must, in the nature of things, determine the status of a man or a country under it.

The instances in which Congress has declared in statutes organizing Territories that the Constitution and laws should be in force there are no evidence that they were not already there, for Congress and all legislative bodies have often made enactments that in effect merely declared existing law. In such cases they declare a preexisting truth to ease the doubts of casuists. Puerto Rico and its people came under the sovereignty of the United States by force of the treaty with Spain, and I think all will agree that if any part of the people of the island levied war against the United States or adhered to our enemies, etc., they would be guilty of treason. But treason is an exclusively defined constitutional crime, and it can not exist on the island unless the Constitution that defines it is in force there.

Apart, however, from considerations of fundamental equal law for all who owe allegiance to our flag of liberty and justice, there are, it seems to me, other very weighty and commanding reasons why we should treat the people of Puerto Rico on the basis of absolute civil equality of right and circumstance with the citizens of our States and home Territories, and in doing so; if, as is contended, the Constitution is not in force there, we make no precedent for the territories on the other side of the globe; for, like all measures within the discretion of Congress, each subject must of course be dealt with when it arises under its own peculiar circumstances and conditions. These people gladly yielded to our dominion on assurances, never disowned or withdrawn, of our commanders and other officers that they would become free and equal citizens of the Republic with all the rights implied by that term.

The geographical position of the island makes it, to my mind, especially important that its people should become and remain completely and earnestly loyal, and intimately acquainted and interested with the people here, and bound to us by ties of business and friendship common to all. If we do not abandon or impair or imperil our supremely important and exclusive interests—common between our country and the Central American Republics and other American States—in relation to the Nicaragua Canal, Puerto Rico will in times of stress be the key of the situation. It was for this reason that, before peace with Spain was attained, I was earnestly in favor of holding the island, although I was opposed to taking dominion over the Philippines, excepting Guam. Pardon this too lengthly note, and believe me,

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

There is much worth hearing and remembering in the following letter from ex-Senator Henderson, one of the few left of the Republican "old guard," survivors from your better days:

FAIR TREATMENT OF PUERTO RICO—IT MUST HAVE ALL THE BENEFITS AND ALL THE BURDENS OF OUR LAWS.

EDITOR POST: I deeply sympathize with you in your defense against the charge of "free-trade" tendencies. We started out with thirteen States. We now have forty-five. All of the additional thirty-two, except Texas alone, were held by us as Territories previous to their admission into the Union. Did anybody ever propose to levy tariff duties on the commerce of any one of these Territories?

The tariff has been with us an active and exciting political topic ever since 1789. It has been discussed only in connection with foreign commerce. To be a protectionist has been to favor duties on the commodities of foreign countries. Trade between the States and Territories of the United States has always been free and untrammeled. This freedom of trade was a sine qua non of the Union. Without it the Union was originally impossible and without it the Union can not endure. Equality of taxation is crystallized in the Constitution. To remove it is to break the great compact upon which it is founded.

If the protected interests shall be able to wage wars at the common expense in order to create additional home markets for their products and then compel consumers here to pay tariff duties on the commodities of those annexed or subjugated countries, then the Union exists only for the purpose of dispensing bounties to the favored classes.

Puerto Rico, if annexed at all, has been annexed by the common blood and treasure of the people of the United States. We knew its products before we took it from Spain. One of these products is sugar. I do not produce sugar; I am a consumer of sugar. My money has gone into the acquisition of this territory. Have I not the same rights in the products of this territory and in its people that Mr. OXNARD has? He grows sugar and I consume it. Shall he take the whole benefit of the acquisition and I get nothing? I consume tobacco and I manufacture cigars. I need both wrappers and fillers in my business of cigar making.

Connecticut alone of the present admitted States grows tobacco suitable for wrappers. It produces from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 pounds of these wrappers per annum, on which there is a tariff duty of $1.85 per pound. Connecticut, of course, is benefited by this enormous protective duty on foreign tobacco. But Connecticut demanded that Puerto Rico should be brought into the United States. It is now no longer a foreign State. It is now a part of the great Republic. Connecticut claims all the benefits of the transaction and leaves me none. It accepts the good and rejects the bad; or rather, it appropriates the blessings and shuffles off on me and others all the burdens.

I have a right, both constitutional and moral, to receive from Puerto Rico free of duty its oranges, its lemons, and other fruits. California and Florida object. On what ground? Simply because they are unwilling to accept the consequences of competition. The people of these States have the benefit of an enormous tariff duty on these articles, and they wish to force me still to pay them the bounties of protection. Is it right? Is it just to me and others who stand in the same situation? They know it is unjust. They know it is immoral and against conscience. They know it is unconstitutional. They vainly imagine, however, that under the old slogan of protection to American interests they can blind the people yet a little longer. What are American interests? The interests of Puerto Rico are now as much American interests as those of New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, or California.

Gentlemen of Congress, the only way to settle your differences is to treat Puerto Rico as a part of the United States. Give to it all the benefits and all the burdens of all your laws. Puerto Rico must pay the same tariff which we pay on goods of foreign production, but not one cent on goods produced in the United States. Between us and Puerto Rico trade must be free. You must cease to vote away money from the Federal Treasury as a cloak to cover political wrongs. The people see through the very thin gauze which mantles your pretended charity.

J. B. HENDERSON.

WASHINGTON, March 27, 1900.

The Washington Post on March 5 published the following extract from a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Smith, of Indianapolis:

PUERTO RICAN TARIFF A CRIME—INDIANAPOLIS CLERGYMAN DENOUNCES THE MEASURE—CRUMPACKER FOR GOVERNOR.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 4, 1900.

The Rev. Dr. Smith, pastor of the most prominent and fashionable church here, said to-day in his sermon:

"To listen to a few magnates and burden Puerto Rico with a tariff is a criminal course. Some of our politicians are smarting under the lash of public censure, and are studying the art of being two-faced and two-voiced to extricate themselves from an awkward dilemma.

If the islands are equal to our average State on the score of intelligence, then we violate our law in laying a tax without their consent; our national enthusiasm for expansion or imperialism may carry our people so far as to override common sense and common honor. Let us keep hands off those famishing isles if we can not nurse them into strength of brain and life and love for us because we guarded them in their day of stress.

I am led to presume that the Rev. Dr. Smith is a Republican by two facts, he is pastor of the "most fashionable church" in Indianapolis, and he preaches politics from the pulpit and not merely "Christ crucified"—as was recommended by one Paul of Tarsus, who, however, did not have a "most fashionable" church.

Although none of the members of the old Cleveland régime are in high repute with the members of either party, the following utterance of ex-Postmaster-General Don Dickinson will furnish thinking men food for thought:

[Special to the Post.]

DICKINSON ON PARTY BLUNDERS—FORMER POSTMASTER-GENERAL CONDEMNS THE M'KINLEY ADMINISTRATION.

DETROIT, MICH., March 5, 1900. "Napoleon used to say that a blunder was worse than a crime, and in our foreign and domestic policy the Republican party, within the past few months, has been guilty of a whole series of stupendous blunders, executive, diplomatic, and legislative, the crowning one of which is the Puerto Rican tariff business," said Don M. Dickinson this morning. Mr. Dickinson, it will be remembered, was Postmaster-General under President Cleveland, but deserted the Democrats on the monetary issue in 1896, speaking from Republican platforms for the gold standard.

"First in the late series, the Administration sustains the deal of the Secretary of the Treasury with the Central National Bank of New York regarding the purchase of the custom-house, which was discreditable, to say the least, if not disgraceful," continued Mr. Dickinson. "Next, it resurrects and galvanizes into life the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and especially that part of it most offensive to the people of the United States, which was never ratified by the Senate and was therefore invalid.

"Next, it has actually attempted to engage in a contract with Great Britain by which we are not permitted to build or control our own waterway on this continent giving us connections with our Pacific and Atlantic seaboards, except under conditions which Europe and Great Britain may name. Could there be a more complete surrender of the Monroe doctrine?

"Then comes this Puerto Rican tariff. Puerto Rico is as much American territory as Florida was after its acquirement and before it was organized as a Territory, and, therefore, protected by the fundamental law, the Constitution of the United States, which imposes a duty upon Congress to legislate for the protection of its people.

Legally, in my opinion, you can no more apply a protective tariff to imports from Puerto Rico to New York than you can from California to New York; nor can you impose a tariff upon goods exported to Puerto Rico from any State. But, bad as that is, their backing and filling, their weakness and vacillation in this matter, seem to be gaining for the majority in Congress and the Administration the contempt of the American people.

Our people admire bravery even in wrong-doing, but they despise a cowardly policy. I can not imagine what the leaders are about, except on the theory of the old Latin proverb, "Quos deus vult perdere, prius dementat" (Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad).

As "a straw to show which way the wind blows," even in Connecticut, and how it has affected the "smaller fry," hear this, which I clip from the New York Evening Post's special report as republished in the Washington Post of March 3:

[From the New York Evening Post.]

SENTIMENT IN CONNECTICUT—A REPUBLICAN LEADER BOLTS M'KINLEY BECAUSE OF THE PUERTO RICAN BILL.

NEW HAVEN, March 1, 1900.

Feeling here is very bitter against Representative N. D. Sperry for his vote yesterday in favor of the Puerto Rican tariff bill, in defiance of the sentiment of both parties in his constituency. It is certain to affect the vote for him should he be renominated, and there are well-grounded rumors of an attempt in his own party to defeat his nomination.

A more significant evidence of local Republican sentiment is the declaration yesterday here of John L. Hutchinson, of Middletown, an active party worker, ex-collector of internal-revenue for the district, and a delegate in 1896 to the national convention which nominated McKinley. Mr. Hutchinson criticised severely the President's lack of backbone in the Puerto Rican tariff matter, and declared that he would not vote for him if renominated.

I have already made mention of the resolutions of the house of representatives of the State of Iowa. They were passed by a unanimous vote of that Republican body. Here they are:

IOWA ON PUERTO RICAN BILL—CONCURRENT RESOLUTION CONDEMNING TARIFF MEASURE UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY LOWER HOUSE OF THE LEGISLATURE.

DES MOINES, IOWA, March 22, 1900.

The house of representatives of the State to-day passed a concurrent resolution, by unanimous vote, declaring that the people of Iowa are unalterably opposed to a Puerto Rican tariff. The resolution was messaged to the senate, and will be taken up there next week. Representatives Kendall, Eaton, Byers, Theophilus, Temple, Carr, and others made speeches in favor of the resolution. While Republicans generally sympathize with the sentiment of the resolution, many of them regret its passage at this time, feeling confident as they do that Congress will not pass the tariff bill.

The resolution was introduced by Representative Kendall, as an amendment to a resolution introduced by Representative Eaton, memorializing Congress to appropriate $5,000,000 for the St. Louis Exposition in 1903. The Puerto Rican resolution follows:

"Be it resolved, That the people of Iowa are unalterably opposed to the establishment of any tariff duties between the United States and any territory acquired as a result of the Spanish-American war, the people of which accepted the sovereignty of this Government without resistance, and voluntarily passed under the jurisdiction of its Constitution and laws."

I understand that the leader of the Iowa delegation in this House [Mr. HENDERSON, the Speaker] holds that the members of the Iowa legislature "knew not what they did." Perhaps the truth is that "exalted station" has carried the Speaker further from the people than the Iowa legislators feel that they can go.

The Washington Post in an editorial of March 23, taking these Iowa resolutions as a text, well says:

IOWA GIVES A NUDGE.

We imagine that the action of the Iowa legislature, yesterday, communicated a very unpleasant reminder to quite a number of our western statesmen who, for the past few weeks, have been slipping about on Capitol Hill in their rubber shoes and pooh-poohing the idea that the American people were really interested in free trade for Puerto Rico.

After this, however, the Iowa Congressman, like the Indiana article, will have something to think about. Senator Allison and Mr. Speaker Henderson, who is generally supposed to have thought that it wasn't loaded—these two very prominent gentlemen will find it expedient to retire to their respective closets and take a thinking part. The Iowa legislature, without a dissenting voice, and, apparently, without the smallest wish to produce one, spoke for the President's free-trade recommendation and thereby set him up against the Republicans of the House who have conspired to frustrate his benevolent and righteous plans.

As all good Republicans should do, they have backed the leader of their party and frowned upon those who would confute and baffle him. They have come out fearlessly and frankly for the policy defined by Mr. McKinley in his message of last December, and they have, incidentally, served notice on their Representatives in Congress that they have serious convictions concealed upon their persons, and that it will not be healthy for Republican officials to disregard them.

The advocates of the Puerto Rico tariff bill have spent a good deal of time and eloquence in trying to persuade their coadjutors in Congress that the country does not feel very strongly in the matter; that there is nothing in it more than a demagogue outcry and an unthinking popular applause. We may say, moreover, that this propaganda has had a certain success—what the French call a "succès d'estime"—and that a great many gifted statesmen have been lulled into false security by listening to their seductive pleadings. But we fail to see how any really wise politician can misinterpret or ignore the warnings that have come to them from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and—more recently and in formal terms—from Iowa.

Not since the outbreak of the war with Spain have we witnessed a popular demonstration so potent and so unmistakable. This question has touched the country's conscience. The feeling now prevalent is based on something much more substantial and enduring than mere sentiment. It is an impulse of honesty and justice and good faith. This Iowa declaration will put an end to the fatuous complacency that has prevailed in certain august quarters. It calls a halt upon the tiptoeing into secret places and the finger-on-the-nose business, and the general air of knowing satisfaction recently observable among the leaders. It will make certain gentlemen wish that they had adhered to their original purpose, and it will strengthen other gentlemen who were quick to recognize the wisdom of the President's original attitude and to feel the force of the popular approval thereof.

I have quoted from the New York Board of Trade and Transportation. Would their opinion be reenforced by the expression of that of the commercial and manufacturing interests of Baltimore, the "city of conservative business habits"? If so, digest this:

CONDEMN PUERTO RICAN TARIFF—MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION FAVORS NICARAGUA CANAL.

BALTIMORE, March 21, 1900.

The Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of this city, one of the leading commercial bodies of the South, to-day adopted, without a dissenting vote, resolutions strongly condemning the Puerto Rico tariff bill and favoring the Nicaragua Canal. The resolutions follow:

"Resolved by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, That we hereby express our conviction that justice demands the removal of all trade barriers between the United States and our recently acquired colonial possession of Puerto Rico, and that the inhabitants of the island of Puerto Rico be admitted to the same rights and freedom in trade that is accorded to citizens of our own country.

"Resolved, That we are opposed to the passage of any law by Congress which provides for the imposition of taxes upon trade between Puerto Rico and the United States contrary to the freedom of commercial intercourse which now prevails between the several States and Territories, and we therefore request our Senators and Representatives in our Congress to advocate such legislation as will establish free interchange of commerce."

Resolved by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, That the constantly increasing commerce of the world makes the construction of a ship canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans a greatly desired necessity, and that from investigations hitherto made, we believe the construction of such a canal is practicable, merely involving questions of time, cost, supervision, and title.

That, in our opinion, the most feasible route for a trans-isthmian canal is that known as the Nicaraguan route, and we therefore respectfully urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to exert their influence in behalf of such measures as will tend to secure the construction of the Nicaraguan canal under the supervision of the United States.

It would, perhaps, be well to conclude this very incomplete, but, at any rate, representative array of utterances of legislative, conventional, and trade bodies, distinguished men and newspapers, by this clinching and conclusive editorial from the Washington Post, Administration:

"CHEAP AND COWARDLY."

The Chicago Times-Herald shows, as the Chicago Inter Ocean has done, the reason why it is proposed in Congress to violate the nation's pledge to the people of Puerto Rico, the pledge given them in behalf of the nation through a proclamation by General Miles when he landed on their island with an invading army.

The Times-Herald, in common with every other influential newspaper west of the Alleghenies, with a single exception, believes that it will be a national disgrace full of peril to the Republican party to pass the Puerto Rican tariff bill. And there is significance in the fact that President McKinley and his Administration have no more sincere and devoted friend than Mr. Kohlsaat's newspaper. That paper, in its issue of the 20th instant, says, in reply to many inquiries "for fuller and definite information concerning the origin of the present folly which has been foisted upon the party by its 'leaders' in the House of Representatives," that the matter is as inexplicable to-day as it was when the Committee on Ways and Means reported the 25 per cent tariff measure. In both the House and Senate, it says, the Puerto Rico bills went in free trade lambs and came out tariff wolves.

Having said that, our Chicago contemporary proceeds to inspect the statements made to the Senate Committee on Puerto Rico by Henry T. Oxnard, of Oxnard, Cal., the representative of the beet-sugar industry, and Herbert Myrick, of Springfield, Mass., chairman of the "League of Domestic Producers," and claiming to represent the beet sugar, cane sugar, tobacco, wool, cotton, fruit, vegetable, rice, and nut producers. It says Mr. Myrick fairly threatened the committee with the loss of 500,000 votes to the Republican party if it fulfilled the pledge of the President to give free trade to Puerto Rico.

But the Times-Herald finds nothing in the testimony given before the committee, including the threat of Mr. Myrick, to justify the committee's departure from its original bill, which gave free trade to Puerto Rico. And here is the Times-Herald's conclusion:

"The truth is that the consistency and honor of the Republican party were sacrificed for cheap and cowardly political reasons, and the moral sense of the party was outraged at the bidding of the smallest fly that ever buzzed around the hub of progress."

That is the opinion, not of one newspaper, but of the almost unanimous press of the United States. That voice comes out of the heart of the great Northwest. It is the voice of the people. Can the Republican leaders in Congress afford to defy it? Are they so confident of victory in this year's campaign as to believe they can with impunity pass a measure against a more formidable opposition in their own party than was ever before brought to bear by members of any party against any proposed action of their friends in Congress? Do those Senators and Representatives understand that they are proposing to endow the opposition with a greater wealth of campaign capital than all that they now possess?

Is it possible that Republican statesmen and politicians are going to invite the Democratic national committee to fill its campaign text-books and its reams of literature with citations from President McKinley, ex-President Harrison, President Schurman, of the Philippine Commission, ex-Senator Edmunds, 10,000 Republican editorials, and various speeches of Republican Congressmen, all condemning the Republican Congress?

Just imagine a campaign in the Northwest under the conditions which the passage of this bill will create, and you have a situation that would appall the boldest spell binder, and compel the Republican editors to either stultify themselves or bear in silence the thickest, heaviest, fiercest storm that ever burst on the heads of campaigners. And that storm would consist of Republican writings and speeches. Is it best to persist in the "sacrifice of the consistency and honor of the Republican party for cheap and cowardly political reasons"?

Let there be no doubt in the minds of the people at any time, present or future, concerning party responsibility for this more than shameful state of affairs.

Lest there may be an attempt on the part of some of the majority to wriggle out, I call attention to the—

VOTE ON PUERTO RICO BILL IN HOUSE, APRIL 30, 1900.

An analysis of the vote shows that six Republicans—Representatives CHUMPACKER of Indiana, FLETCHER and HEATWOLE of Minnesota, LITTLEFIELD of Maine, LORIMER of Illinois, and MCCALL of Massachusetts—voted with the opposition against the bill, and four Democrats—Representatives DAVEY and MEYER of Louisiana, DE VRIES of California, and SIBLEY of Pennsylvania—voted with the Republicans for the bill. In addition, Representative WARNER (Republican) of Illinois was paired against the bill with Representative BOUTELLE (Republican) of Maine for it. Two other Republicans—Representative LANE of Iowa and Representative FARIS of Indiana—were absent and unpaired. They were understood to be against the bill.

Of the four votes in favor of the bill classed above as Democrats, one is that of Mr. SIBLEY of Pennsylvania, who is not now, nor was ever at any time, a Democrat, although he voted for Bryan on account of free silver in 1896. He is now reported by the newpapers to be seeking a Republican nomination for Congress.

Two of the votes were cast by gentlemen who peculiarly represent the Louisiana sugar industry. It has become a proverb that "sugar knows no politics." The seven Republicans voting as paired against the bill, and in a less degree the two who though absent have proclaimed their opposition, deserve from the country that meed of praise and gratitude which is always deserved by men of firm resolve, fixed principles, and moral courage.

This is especially true and worthy of mention when such men are members of Congress, because the virtues they have displayed are not those in which politicians ordinarily excel.

Mr. SULZER. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield some of his time now.

Mr. HULL. Will the Chair kindly state how much time has been used on each side and how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. An hour and fifty-two minutes have been used on the Republican side, and an hour and twelve minutes upon the Democratic side.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to take about ten minutes, possibly—not more than that. I want to be called down if I undertake to exceed that.

The CHAIRMAN. It will give the Chair pleasure to call the gentleman down. [Laughter.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1918. An act granting an increase of pension to John E. Higgins;

S. 2651. An act granting a pension to Henry Hill;

S. 1578. An act granting a pension to George W. Campbell;

S. 1246. An act granting a pension to Charles A. Perkins;

S. 1245. An act granting a pension to Oliver Demon;

S. 2290. An act granting a pension to James Richardson;

S. 2753. An act granting an increase of pension to David H. Morey;

S. 1601. An act granting an increase of pension to John Thornton;

S. 1603. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Kaump;

S. 3078. An act granting a pension to Charles Weitfle;

S. 2539. An act granting an increase of pension to Capt. Milton H. Daniels;

S. 258. An act granting a pension to Coryden Bevans;

S. 3380. An act granting an increase of pension to Hamilton K. Williams;

S. 2335. An act granting an increase of pension to Maj. John W. Blake;

S. 2900. An act granting a pension to Hannah G. Huff;

S. 351. An act to increase the pension to Samuel S. White;

S. 1400. An act granting a pension to William Lyman Chittenden;

S. 2764. An act granting an increase of pension to William Murphy;

S. 3200. An act granting an increase of pension to Luke H. Monson;

S. 2483. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Beard

S. 2215. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert J. Koonce;
S. 2276. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Ragland;
S. 3418. An act granting an increase of pension to Eliza Adelaide Ball;
S. 2296. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. Sears;
S. 316. An act granting an increase of pension to Louann A. Perry, of Wallace, Kans.;
S. 3289. An act granting a pension to Isabella Underwood;
S. 3215. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew F. Dinsmore;
S. 2154. An act granting an increase of pension to William A. Owens;
S. 1890. An act granting a pension to S. E. Treadway;
S. 1996. An act revoking and annulling the subdivision of Pencote Heights, in the District of Columbia;
S. 2926. An act to prevent dangers to navigation from rafts on the Pacific Ocean;
S. 1612. An act providing for the purchase of metal and the coinage of minor coins and the distribution and redemption of said coins;
S. 2870. An act concerning disbursing officers of the Subsistence Department of the Army;
S. 3270. An act for the relief of Nathan S. Jarvis;
S. 3249. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Charles C. Lee;
S. 3060. An act for the relief of James C. Drake;
S. 1596. An act to equalize and regulate the duties of the judges of the district courts of the United States of Alabama;
S. 3662. An act granting an increase of pension to Louise D. Smith;

Senate concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Oliver P. Morton, presented by the State of Indiana, to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of the most eminent citizens and illustrious statesmen of the Republic.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Indiana;

S. 3300. An act granting an increase of pension to Luke H. Monson;
S. 3352. An act granting a pension to Sarah Kersey;
S. 1939. An act authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes; and
S. R. 72. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to appoint David Bagley as an additional cadet at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 99. An act to establish a military post at or near Des Moines, Iowa; and
H. R. 9497. An act to amend an act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 470. An act granting a pension to Jane Dykes;
H. R. 3538. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Ross;
H. R. 6700. An act granting an increase of pension to Maria Andrews;
H. R. 6701. An act granting a pension to Serelda C. McGrew;
H. R. 3012. An act granting a pension to Sarah Claggett;
H. R. 2597. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Kauffung; and
H. R. 1763. An act granting a pension to Ella F. Sydnor.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Republican Congressional committee, I feel an interest in the charges that Republicans voted for the Puerto Rican bill in order to secure a campaign fund, as made in the Star that was published last night and reproduced in the Post this morning. I want to say to this House, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment no man who is worthy of belief would make such a charge and withhold his name from the public. And so far as I am concerned, and those with whom I am associated, I pronounce the charges absolutely false. I believe, if the charge was made as stated, that the man making it will never dare let his name be known so that he can be proven a common falsifier; and I believe that a paper of the character of the Star has no right to send out to the public such grave charges affecting the integrity of members of Congress anonymously, so that the members are helpless to prove the falsity of any such accusations.

We heard in this debate on yesterday some very strong statements in regard to the crime we are committing in trying to enforce the authority of this Government in the Philippine Islands. We have heard to-day a large amount of newspaper criticisms and newspaper opinion upon the present situation in the United States and in the islands. It struck me that while we are reading extracts, it would be a good idea for my Democratic friends to learn the high estimation in which they are held in the Philippine Islands.

I have here some extracts that were taken from a prisoner captured just outside of Manila in the month of November, with certain papers upon him, which translated read as follows; and if my friends will follow this reading, they will see that, while they have enthusiastic admiration and love for the insurgents, for those who are killing our soldiers and defying our authority, at least those gentlemen, who are rather ignorant as to the location and as to politics in this country, are equally in love with them. This is a translation made from papers found on a prisoner who was captured trying to get the Filipinos who had enlisted with us to go over to their side, on the promise that they would give them commissions if they would go and see that they were properly rewarded after the next election.

I do not charge that these articles were ever published, but they were circulated among the Filipino insurgents and throughout the islands as if they had been, and the ignorant Filipino supposed them genuine.

[From the Hongkong Daily Press.]

THE AMERICAN AND FILIPINO DEMOCRATS.

LONDON, September 7, 1899.

The Democratic party of New York sustains the candidacy of Mr. W. J. Bryan for President of the United States in the coming elections.

In a meeting held yesterday by this party, a banquet was given in honor of "Aguinaldo, chief of the Filipino revolutionists," who was acclaimed as a true hero.

Here is another dispatch:

[From the Times Weekly. London edition of the 8th of September, 1899.]

"UNITED STATES.

"President McKinley arrived in Philadelphia on the 5th of September, 1899, for the purpose of attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

"On Tuesday the representative Democrats from the vicinity of Chicago held a caucus (meeting) in Cooper Union. The speakers denounced energetically the policy pursued by President McKinley in the Philippines * * * and declared in favor of Mr. Bryan as candidate for the Presidency. The meeting cheered Aguinaldo, who was acclaimed as one of the heroes of the world.

"'Por los Democratas de la tribuna de Chicago' 'Tribuna' has the sense of the meeting place for a legislative body such as Congress, thus creating the impression that would be conveyed by Democratic caucus of the House of Representatives.'

"President arrived in Philadelphia on the 5th day of September for the purpose of attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

"On Tuesday a meeting was held in Cooper Union by the Democrats. The speakers denounced emphatically the policy of President McKinley in the Philippines, and declared for the candidacy of Mr. Bryan for the Presidency. The meeting gave three cheers for Aguinaldo, who was declared to be one of the heroes of the world."

This and the one on the other page are translations of papers taken off a native who was tried before me this morning and found guilty of trying to get soldiers to desert and go over to the other fellows, promising them commissions, etc., if they would only go. As we were unable to prove that he was ever in the service, could not make a case against him of being a spy. They were merely writings pretending to be copy of articles that appeared in various newspapers. When you take in consideration that "Aggie's" last peace commissioners asked if a concurrent resolution of Congress would be able to tie the President's hand, you can see that the effect of the speeches you sometimes hear about are worth more here than they are in the United States.

Thinking that you might be able to make good use of these, I had a translation made for you. The originals are in the files of the S. P. C. No. 322.

A great many of the natives think that Congress will do something this winter that will make all the army leave here; and if they can see that is false, the end may come sooner.

I simply want to show by this that the insurgents are looking to the Democratic party for whatever hope they can have of ultimately driving American power from the Philippine Islands; and the war has been continued and will continue by the word that is sent from here that if they can only hold out until after the Presidential election during next fall, the Stars and Stripes will be removed from those islands and the government will be turned over to the men who have defied our authority.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that these men—that is, our friends on the other side, who believe in maintaining the supremacy of the Government—should let this great Government of ours settle in our own way and in our own time what will be done. They ought to cease such speeches as the gentleman from Tennessee made yesterday, denouncing us for asserting our authority.

I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the amount appropriated by this bill is large. It represents the pay and the support and the supply of nearly 100,000 American soldiers, most of whom are fighting in the Philippines for the establishment of order and such good government as we are going to furnish them as soon as they stop shooting at us. Mr. Chairman, we shall vote the bill for the support of those soldiers, who ask of us that when we vote to support them there we should not stab them in the back by attacking the military of the United States for putting down the insurgent rebellion in those islands.

One gentleman on the other side shrieked at us, "Where is your policy? Why don't you declare your policy? Why don't you say what you are going to do in those many islands occupied by many tribes?" Any American will declare our policy to be that when they shoot at us we will shoot back until they stop shooting, and then give them such a government as they are able to maintain and are willing to maintain. When the people of those islands, or rather the peoples of those islands, for they are many, each of them, are willing to and able, or any of them are willing or able, to accept free government, then, in so far as they are able, we will grant it. But until then I denounce the spirit that will vote money to the soldiers on the one hand, and then be ignorant enough to lend wings to the bullets against them, and force to the powers that fight against them, by talking as we have heard members talk here.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose further to discuss the appropriation mentioned in this bill, but the circumstances of the case render it necessary that something should be said now as to what shall be done with our Army in the future. A large part of it is enlisted only to the 1st of July, 1901. Officers and men leave the United States service at that time. Are any of these officers to be taken into the old line? Are these men and regiments to be taken into the Army then? These are questions that will shortly come before this very Congress, probably at the next session.

Our brave defenders are entitled to know what provision is to be made before their absolute discharge. We want no such spectacle as when the magnificent army of 250,000 men which was enlisted for the war had to be discharged because the war ended and because a proper and permanent army bill did not go through both Houses of Congress. What is more, the question of army reorganization is upon us. The Secretary of War truly says, in substance, that when we remember that at the outbreak of the Spanish war we had neither modern rifles nor smokeless powder, it is well to be careful that we shall not drift back into something like the same conditions.

When we remember that in a war against a power not of the first class it took us months of weary waiting to obtain supplies, equipments, clothing, equipage, and transportation for our comparatively small Army; when we remember the weary sickness and deaths that attended that work, we must remember also that the people have not forgotten, and that they will demand of us such an organization of the Army of the United States as shall make it capable of instant, immediate extension, and mobilization without friction, so as to be able at least to furnish the first fighting line against any power on the globe; and if we do not do that, if we do not realize what is asked of us, or at least attempt it, we shall fail in our duty.

Considering the present temper of the House and their desire to get through with this bill, I have given up the idea that I had of placing before the House a carefully elaborated speech on the subject of army organization. If I do it, it will be under the leave to extend my remarks. But I can not refrain from indicating the points which I think are salient. And first, if an army be properly organized, its small size will not prevent the power that owns it from being a great military power. Germany is probably the greatest military power in the world, all in all, not perhaps in numbers, but certainly in efficiency.

But history tells us the military greatness of Germany dates from the time when Napoleon ordered that only 90,000 men should be in the German line, and when she passed this 90,000 men through the line as a process of education, keeping them in active service only two, three, four, and up to six months, until she could turn them back to their own homes as educated soldiers who knew their duty.

In this way she obtained several hundred thousand men ready to take the reserved stores of arms and march against that very Napoleon who had made that order—not only trained men, but young men, with young officers who had not grown old as officers of the regular establishment, but had the welfare of the nation at heart and were alive. The modern military motto is short service and a trained reserve, that no nation that wants to be a real military power can do without. Short service avoids expense and keeps the ranks small, while a trained reserve will fill those ranks, as Germany filled hers when she called her men to go against France in 1870 and when the millions marched to the border on a few days' notice.

This plan does not involve conscription. It is just as applicable to a volunteer army, and our Regular Army is a volunteer army. Let a man be enlisted for a period part of which he shall serve with the colors, and during the other part be at his home, ready to join those colors in case of necessity, and you have the Swiss system and the German system.

The Germans have enlarged the time of service with the colors to two years, with several years more at home ready to join on call. The Swiss allow only a few months for the training of the soldier, longer in the artillery and cavalry, and shorter in the infantry. Both nations have the system of short service, and a reserve, a system eminently American, one fit for a people's army, one fit for a nation which says that the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia when actually called into service of the United States.

There are some strange things about this curious provision for short service. It wakes up the officers as well as the men. If an officer has a lot of old soldiers and gets in a few recruits daily, he leaves their training to the first sergeant. But if men are only enlisted for two years, and half of the men are new every year, and if a company officer has to present the company for inspection within three months from the time it is brought to him, he must be alive.

He takes them into the regiment, and the regimental commander must be alive to present the regiment in three months to the brigade, one-half of which is composed of new men, and the brigadier-general has to be alive for three months to present his brigade in time for maneuvers in the autumn. This work runs through successive years. Thus the officers are working constantly, not simply to maintain an old and established regular army, but to train the people of the nation so that they shall be ready for the call to arms.

This plan makes it necessary to have local recruitments. Imagine the first regiment, say, of the United States infantry, with less than half of its active members in the ranks, the others having graduated from the school of war and being ready at call.

That first regiment, when it sends for its men, wants to find them together. If they are found in one State, in one city, in one locality, all that it does is to give notice to the men to repair to the halls where their guns and uniforms are kept, to put on their uniforms, to hang up their citizens' clothes, and march to the front to do their duty until they return and hang up their uniforms, put by their guns, and take their places among the people again.

One further consideration; local recruitment prevents desertion. A man does not dare to desert when his comrades live in his own neighborhood.

Again, this plan makes the army a part of the people. And the army ought to be part of the people, with sympathy the one for the other. I do not know whether the sentiment of this country can be now brought forward to such a step as to feel that the Regular Army, like the militia, should be part of the people, most of them living among the people, although subject to the call of their officers, and yet citizens following the pursuits of peace.

Whether our people are ready to adopt a plan so foreign to that of the standing Army as it has been understood may be doubtful; but it is certain that this step, which has made the German and Swiss armies a citizen army, has been the power that has worked for peace through the great continent of Europe.

Mr. RIDGELY. May I ask the gentleman a question? I am in perfect accord with the sentiment of the gentleman's speech; but I want to ask him if he does not believe and know that there is a constant pressure in this country to separate the Army as much as possible from the citizenship.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am not talking of what pressure there may be; I am talking of what ought to be. I do not believe that the gentleman's suggestion is correct; but I know that it is not germane to my argument, which is directed to what we should do as patriots.

Mr. RIDGELY again rose.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have but ten minutes, and I hope the gentleman will not press his inquiry further.

Mr. RIDGELY. The gentleman's remark suggested that there was something in the way of doing this thing.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I did not go into what was in the way.

Mr. RIDGELY. You mentioned it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Tradition has been in the way—tradition since the time of Washington has been in the way. We have regarded the Army as consisting of hired men enlisted from day to day. Thank progress and the management of the Army that it now contains a different set of men. Soldiers are now allowed to buy their own discharge; if they serve faithfully they are excused from service after a certain time; they are no longer flogged by way of punishment, and they are seldom imprisoned.

The usual punishment is by light fines and other small penalties. The general sentiment of the Army has raised its tone until we are proud to associate with the "boys in blue," whom we take by the hand. Regulars and volunteers throughout, they represent the great body of the people of the country—its youth and its bravery. And now is the time to put the Army upon a permanent and yet a popular basis.

Little of my time remains, Mr. Chairman, but I will proceed to another point. The Constitution says that the President shall be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. Mr. Chairman, he must be. No general in chief of the Army can take the place of the President in war. The Army and the Navy have to work together; he only can control both. In a war the question whether an advance shall be made is not always to be governed by purely military considerations.

The President is sometimes forced to try what is desperate. The advance and battle may be dictated, as at Santiago, by considerations not only of finance, not only of home policy, but probably (though we do not know it) by high and secret diplomatic policy. We had to try; we had to go ahead; no merely military considerations as to the danger or the season or the fevers or the smallness of our preparations could keep the President back, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, from ordering that victorious advance, which came so near being a defeat, but which, nevertheless, was necessary then to end the war.

Under such circumstances nobody but the President can be commander of the Army. General Schofield, who had been General Commanding the Army, who had been Secretary of War, who had likewise been major-general for years, when asked about this matter in 1898, testified before the committee that it was impossible to have a permanent General Commanding the Army; that such general had only had a real command in one year, when the command was in General Grant; that at all other times, when others held that position, whom he named, it was impossible that the General Commanding, as well as the Secretary of War, should rule.

He advised that the place of General Commanding the Army should be a mere detail, as chief of staff for the President; that the President needed some one as his executive officer to do his will, to see that it was carried out; but in order that that should be done properly, the officer should be detailed from time to time. He suggested that the President has this absolute power now, not by law, but by the Constitution, but that a definite law would enable him to exercise it without injury to anyone's feelings if it were understood that the place of chief of staff, general in chief, or whatever it be called, the President's executive officer, should be a position held only for a short time and at his order.

In this way only can a military officer be put at the head of the staff departments as he should be, as well as at the head of the line. The President changes every four years. Make the general in chief really chief of staff, the President's own adjutant, named, as the adjutant is named in a regiment, by the President himself, from time to time, and that supervisory and benign power can be exercised over both staff and line.

Many other questions in the Army may be said to be subordinate. Give full military control over staff and line, and old traditions and the crust of departments will disappear, and the live man can make himself felt.

Another suggestion as to Army legislation: It is dangerous to try to specialize too much. It could sometimes be wished, especially in time of war, that every law on the subject of the Army were wiped off the statute books and that the moneys were given directly to the Commander in Chief to provide the men and to expend almost as he sees fit.

There must be rules and regulations, but there is such a thing as specializing too much. We are the only country in the world clever enough to educate our officers in all branches of the service. At West Point we educate the officer in engineering, artillery, infantry, and cavalry, with sciences and languages.

No other school in the world does that. Elsewhere they make artillery officers or engineer officers or infantry officers or cavalry officers, but they do not teach all branches. We do it, and we have felt the good of it, because when a man becomes a general and receives an independent command he must know something of all branches. He must be enough of an engineer to intrench his troops. He must know how to deal with cavalry and artillery as well as infantry. He must, to a certain degree, be master of all arms of the service. Above all, he must be a master of the art of transportation.

In General Grant's history of the civil war he spends more time discussing the relief of Chattanooga than any battle. He details with pride how he arranged his Northern railroads to ferry the cars across the Ohio River, so that they could be sent down and dumped as fast as they were unloaded, new cars being brought down with every train, with only wild-cat engines going back, so that he was able to supply that starving army and give them the provisions and munitions of war to go forward on their triumphal march.

We all remember that the only thing known about Sheridan before the war was that he was a good quartermaster, and it stood him in good stead when he got to fighting battles and making fast marches, and he kept his men fed. We know what that means in general. In time of peace remember that the Army should be so arranged that the officers should get full staff training, and that is one reason for the system of details to the staff department proposed by the Secretary of War, a Secretary whom all admire, a Secretary who at least knows what he does know, and who says that he has accepted a retainer to take care of the Army and that he is going to do it as well as a lawyer can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey five minutes additional.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us recapitulate, for there is no time for argument. Modern experience would dictate very radical Army reforms, short service, and a reserve, local recruitment and provision for the expansion of the Army from within, when it is needed, so that your 50,000 men can become 250,000 men by the filling up of their companies, and go forward under the same officers.

The men will thus be young and the officers kept active by the constant schooling that they must give. The President should have by law what he has by the Constitution—absolute control of the Army and the right to nominate his chief of staff from year to year, if he pleases, and certainly with every new President, unless it be a reappointment.

Wherever possible there should be details to the various branches of the staff, not only so that the staff may do its duty with more knowledge of the needs of the line, but so that the line officers may learn about staff duty. This is the naval system. A war college is proposed by the Secretary of War. We should have it by all means, even if we doubt whether it is possible to make these details and some promotions by examination and certificate of a war college. I am not much of a believer in examinations myself. It may be that we will do better by sheer seniority, with the understanding that the man must do full duty in any of these departments, and that every man shall be expected to do everything that he is detailed to, and to be an all-round man.

We will do well to take hold boldly of the question of the Army. No one loves it better than I do. Relatives and friends serve in it. Nor should there be much legislation, least of all by Congressional interference with its discipline. But this House should take hold boldly and see that our Army is properly organized and reserve stores sufficient kept for the national defense.

At the outbreak of the last war we had not enough rifles. The Military Committee had done its best to get them. I believe it was at the time of the Venezuelan scare that we inquired how many we had and what facilities, and we doubled the amount requested by the Secretary of War to provide the new rifle. We have not yet enough. They are not furnished to our militia. There are 100,000 in the National Guard and they have not got those arms yet. There is no reserve for war.

It is true the manufacture is still going on, and it is hoped that this want may be filled. Under the rules of the House it has been decided that the Military Committee can not provide additional machinery in the arsenals, even for the manufacture of small arms, much less for making cannon.

Large supplies of the best arms and ammunition are absolutely necessary for proper preparation for war. Everything else can be provided on the moment. What is more, they cost little to provide. A soldier's gun and ammunition cost but a few dollars, while his support for a year averages a thousand dollars. A nation of freemen should have a rifle ready for every man. The Boer war has shown what can be done by military preparedness, just as our own war with Spain showed us what it was to go into battle with black powder and rifles of short range.

It is admitted by all that cavalry and field artillery should be maintained in time of peace rather than infantry, because they can not be provided or drilled quickly in time of war. A few years ago it was the fashion to sneer at these arms, and we heard of nothing but fixed fortifications. The South African war has shown what artillery and cavalry can do and that infantry can not ever advance safely within the range of the modern rifle without first clearing the ground by the use of these arms.

Our present provision of 10 regiments of cavalry is too small, even for our present force of 100,000 men, and entirely too small if we should be forced to enlarge our Army or call out the militia. Our provision for field and horse batteries is simply ridiculous. The numbers of guns contained in the field, horse, and mountain artillery are, in Russia, 3,912; France, 3,048; Austria, 1,524; Italy, 1,266; England, 768—but now many more—Japan, 712; Bulgaria, 414; Portugal, 216; Servia, 276; Sweden, 276, and in the United States, 84.

It is now proposed to increase each of the field, horse, and mountain artillery so as to give them 144 guns in all. Of course we have others in reserve. Our Ordnance Department is made up of men of great talent, but it needs the willingness of Congress to provide our Army with what I venture to say they have not now—nonrecoiling carriages, which allow rapid-fire, Maxim, and other small repeating cannon—and to provide them in such a quantity as that they shall be available upon a sudden call of war.

We have said nothing yet of the militia, the National Guard. There is no body of men that so much needs the same provision of short service. The older men are relied upon for the defense of homes, for steadiness and conservatism in the midst of insurrection or riot, but the experience of the late war has shown that the active list should be composed of those who are young and ready for active service; that they should be ready at the call of the President for service anywhere, and that the older men only should be reserved entirely for the proper functions of militia. I quote from the remarks of Governor Mount at the convention of 1900 of the Interstate National Guard Association.

How to organize and better equip a national reserve or national guard is the important question for your consideration. The National Guard is not wanting in promptness, patriotism, nor in drill, but it is deficient in that it has not taught the guardsmen how to meet the needed requirements of a soldier in active service. [Applause.] It has instructed him in the manual of arms, in squad, company, and regimental drill, but not how to march, camp, draw rations, properly prepare them, and observe sanitary conditions.

* * * * * * * *

I believe it would be wise to organize a national reserve of 200,000 strong in lieu of the present National Guard. These should be mustered into United States service when enlisted, as well as into State service, and be subject to the call of the President in time of war. We saw the weakness of a National Guard in the Spanish war when called into camp—the next thing to decide whether they were going to the front to fight, and all the paraphernalia of remuster and reexamination had to be gone through. This is too serious a process for an efficient army in the emergency of war. They should be mustered under the vigilant inspection and examination of the United States, so that only men are enlisted who have the physique and the strength to become soldiers indeed. The officers should be appointed by the governors, the appointments based upon competitive examination rather than political reward or favoritism. [Applause.]

This reserve of the National Guard should be uniformed and equipped by the United States. State laws should be in accord with Federal requirements as to drill, care of uniforms, arms, etc., and yearly encampments for drill, discipline, camp training should be held under the supervision of United States officers. Regular troops should encamp and drill with these National Guard reserves. Under such provision the United States might have in reserve a formidable army without the cost and objection incident to a large regular army. The military spirit would be augmented in the State, the best men enlisted, with competent officers to command. Then the esprit de corps of the National Guard would not only be maintained, but it would be improved.

These are practical suggestions, and the militia, too, must be thoroughly armed, thoroughly equipped, and properly divided between the different branches of the service—in marching and camping, and of taking care of itself like a regular force. The people are done with the business of playing soldiers. They want the reality.

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman from New York will now use some of his time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, since the commencement of this session of Congress several resolutions expressing sympathy with the South African patriots have been introduced in this House by myself and other members. The Speaker has referred these resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, although ample time has elapsed, that committee has taken, so far as we know, no action, and apparently does not intend to take any action in regard to the same.

For that reason, and lest a more favorable opportunity shall not be available, I desire at this time to express and to place on record my condemnation of the unjust, the inhuman, the predatory, the cruel, and the barbarous war the Empire of Great Britain is ruthlessly and relentlessly conducting in South Africa to destroy and exterminate two brave little republics, sisters of our own, and as free and as independent as this Republic.

Mr. Chairman, the patriotic people of this country take a deep and an abiding interest in the life and death struggle between republic and empire now going on in South Africa. As an American citizen and a Representative in this Congress, I am not ashamed to have it known that my sympathy is now, always has been, and always will be with the heroic Boers in their magnificent struggle to maintain their freedom and their independence against the piracy of the corrupt oligarchy now controlling the policy of the British Empire.

I am with the Boers and I want to see them maintain their independence because they are right and because they are free and deserve to be free. In a contest between liberty and monarchy I want to see liberty win.

The cause of the patriots of South Africa is a just cause. No one who impartially reads history can honestly dispute it. They are defending their homes and repelling a tyrannical and a remorseless invader. England's attempt to steal their country is the outrage of the century, the culminating atrocity of criminal British aggression, and should be condemned by this Republic and by the Christian powers of the world.

In my judgment, if I mistake not public opinion, nine-tenths of the American people are against England in this bloody war of conquest for sordid gain and in sympathy with the Boers. The best thought of England condemns the conflict, and the awakening conscience of the British Empire demands peace with honor in the name of humanity, Christianity, and civilization.

In 1776 the patriot fathers of this Republic fought England to gain our independence. The South African patriots to-day are fighting the same country to maintain their independence. That is the only difference.

The courage of the Boers in the face of tremendous odds has challenged the admiration of mankind, and their heroism against almost insurmountable obstacles has won the respect of the civilized world. They are entitled to our sympathy, and we would be false to ourselves and to all our history if we did not give it to them. The sacrifices they have thus far made and the gallantry, heroism, and bravery they have exhibited are unequaled and unparalleled in the history of the world.

The story of the struggles, the hardships, the trials, and the triumphs of these brave people in South Africa is one of the saddest and one of the greatest pages in all history—an imperishable heritage to every lover of liberty, and to their hardy and valorous descendants an incentive to maintain their freedom, that can never be crushed. No true American can impartially read the history of the Boers without feeling a deep sympathy for them in their present struggle to uphold and defend their independence against English greed for gold, English tyranny, and criminal British aggression for land.

In regard to all the facts of the case there may be some honest difference of opinion; but if there is, it is based, I believe, to a large extent on misinformation or a lack of knowledge of all the circumstances. English agencies have been sedulously at work for some time unceasingly disseminating misinformation in regard to the Boers and the true situation in South Africa. Let me ask you all to search out the truth ere you pass judgment on the brave republicans of South Africa.

Let us briefly review the situation. We must not rely too much on the colored, the doctored, and the censored British reports from English sources in Cape Colony. England is now and always has been unscrupulous. In a war like this—a war against humanity—she has little regard for truth.

In South Africa there are two free and independent countries—one called the "South African Republic," the other called the "Orange Free State." They are duly organized Governments, republican in form, patterned to a great extent after our own, and recognized as free and independent throughout the world. As a matter of law and as a matter of fact, England has no more right to meddle with them or to interfere in their internal affairs than she has to meddle with Mexico or interfere in the internal affairs of the United States. These States are now and have been ever since the convention of 1884 free and independent States. There can be no controversy about this.

These brave South African patriots are a good deal like the patriots of our own Revolution. They love their homes, their freedom, and their liberty. They come from good old Saxon ancestors from the north of Europe. They love free institutions, the same as we do, for the sake of personal liberty. It comes to them naturally and by inheritance. Their love of liberty is not of a day or of a year, but of centuries.

They are a brave, a fearless, a patriotic, a liberty-loving, and a God-fearing people. Many years ago their ancestors emigrated from Holland, from France, and from other places in the north of Europe to Cape Colony in order to live under free institutions, enjoy the blessings of liberty, and worship their Maker according to the dictates of their own conscience.

The Puritan, the Hollander, the Irishman, the German, and the Cavalier came to this country for the same reason and for the same purpose.

These sturdy immigrants and their heroic descendants carved out unaided and alone their own destiny in the wilds of the Dark Continent amid unspeakable hardships and privations and gave to the world a civilization as good as our own. For a century and more, in sunshine and in storm, these brave people toiled and plodded on, and they builded, like the fathers of this Republic, better than they knew. Surrounded by savages, harassed by wild beasts, visited by famine and scourged by disease, in all the long weary and dreary years they never lost hope; they prayed to God and never despaired.

They are a simple Christian people, as honest as they are brave. They redeemed the wilderness, turned the desert wastes into sweeping fields of grain, made the jungle blossom and bloom like a rose, and dotted the hills with villages and towns. Notwithstanding all they had to contend with, they grew, they prospered, and they were happy until perfidious Albion came. From that day to this England has made cruel war on the Boers. She has repeatedly robbed them of their lives, their property, and their lands.

But the spirit of their love of liberty has never been broken. You can not conquer a brave people inspired by the love of freedom and battling on their own soil for their homes and their liberties. They will never surrender their principles. They will resist oppression and tyranny until they are exterminated by overwhelming and superior force. They know, like Patrick Henry, that resistance to tyrants is obedience to God. Their love of liberty is stronger and more tenacious than their love of life. Their history is an epic poem of one long heroic struggle against English greed, English tyranny, and English oppression.

These brave Boers are now fighting, perhaps for the last time, for republicanism against monarchy; for democracy against plutocracy; for home rule against the bayonet; for the ballot against the throne; for the love of home against the love of gold; for Saxon freedom against British tyranny; for the integrity of their country against a ruthless invader; for the schoolhouse against the army barracks; for religious freedom against foreign domination; for the fireside of civilization against the blazing torch of devastation; for free institutions against imperialism; and, above all and beyond all, they are fighting a battle for the rights of man. God grant that their liberties and their independence shall not be destroyed.

When we consider it all, how true seem the words of Lowell:

> Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne;
> Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown
> Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch upon His own.

To-day in South Africa Truth is on the scaffold and in England Wrong is on the throne.

The absolute independence of the South African Republic was finally recognized by Great Britain in 1884, and ever since then it has been as free and as independent as our own great Republic.

Prior to the year 1884 these brave and fearless men and their ancestors had struggled and struggled for a century and more to establish what they now possess and what they are at present so gallantly fighting to maintain—a free and independent government of their own. Once, twice, three times has England violated her solemn pledge to them and trespassed on their sacred rights. She saw what they had wrought, and her greedy sons coveted it. The Boers were compelled by English greed and tyranny and power to move farther and farther inland. Whenever they thought they were secure and had the right to enjoy the blessings of liberty and self-government, England encroached on their domain, waged pitiless and savage war against them, and drove them farther and farther from the sea.

To their credit and their glory, however, be it said that every encroachment on their land, their rights, and their liberties has been manfully and stubbornly resisted. They were forced to move on, but they never gave up their freedom; they never surrendered their independence.

Prior to the present conflict Majuba Hill marks the place of the last contest with Great Britain of these valorous people for their homes and their firesides. Majuba Hill! Forever glorious in the annals of the South African Republic's struggle to maintain its independence. Majuba Hill to them is the same as Bunker Hill to us, and both will live in history to the end of time as an inspiration to man.

After this disastrous blow to British arms the convention of 1884 was entered into, and all other and prior treaties were annulled. By this treaty the South African Republic became free and independent and took its place among the nations of the world. And Lord Derby, then secretary of state for the colonies and a very different man from Joseph Chamberlain, distinctly stated in Parliament that the South African Republic was independent and free to govern itself. The question of England's paramountcy in South Africa was not mentioned, and never a word was said about British "suzerainty."

That great English statesman, friend of the Boers, friend of liberty and of Irish home rule, William E. Gladstone, said the word "suzerainty" was dropped on purpose.

Even as late as May, 1896, after the Jameson raid, Mr. Chamberlain said in the House of Commons:

> A war in South Africa would be one of the most serious wars that could possibly be waged. It would be a long war, a bitter war, and a costly war. It would leave behind it the embers of a strife which I believe generations would hardly be long enough to extinguish. To go to war with President Kruger in order to enforce upon him reforms in the internal affairs of his State, in which secretaries of state, standing in this place, have repudiated all right of interference—that would be a course of action as immoral as it would have been unwise.

Now, sir, I say, from the record, that it must be clear and plain to everyone who has reviewed the question from an English as well as a Boer standpoint that the South African Republic is and was since 1884 a sovereign and independent State. In proof of this I cite the additional fact that it was admitted to the International Postal Union, that it was a member of the Convention of Geneva, and that our own Government and all the other powers recognized it and appointed to it consuls. The United States consul at Pretoria to-day is acting in that capacity, not only for us but for Great Britain as well.

Under all the circumstances, it seems to me England is now precluded from raising the question of the independence of the South African Republic. For England to raise this contention at this late day is a mere flimsy pretext, an afterthought of Cecil Rhodes and Joseph Chamberlain, and constitutes a blunder worse than a crime.

The question of suzerainty was not raised at first in the differences with the South African Republic. There never would have been trouble if gold had not been discovered in the land. The rich find of gold there is at the bottom of it all. Love of gold is the cause of this cruel Anglo-African war.

Cecil Rhodes, the most daring and colossal grabber and manipulator of the century, coveted the Boers' golden land. He wanted it for his English chartered syndicate. He and Chamberlain instigated the Jameson raid, and Chamberlain repudiated it when the Boers made it a miserable failure. Cecil Rhodes plotted and planned against the Boers. He stirred up dissension among the people at Pretoria; he conspired in South Africa and in Europe to overthrow the Republics. He is the power behind the British ministry in this war, and Chamberlain is now, and always has been, his willing tool.

This conflict should be called Cecil Rhodes's war for gold and conquest in South Africa. He is responsible for all the woe, all the sorrow, all the despair, and all the misery this war has caused. He is the Pizarro of the nineteenth century.

Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Rhodes began the present trouble by taking up the alleged grievances of the English aliens or uitlanders in South Africa. Mr. Chamberlain practically demanded they be enfranchised without abjuring or renouncing their allegiance to the British Crown. This proposition is, and was, preposterous. No government on earth would submit to it.

If the English aliens in the Transvaal wanted to become citizens of the Boer Republic, they had to comply with the law, just the same as English aliens in this country, in order to become citizens of the United States, must comply with our law and renounce forever their allegiance to the British Crown. The law there regarding naturalization is just about the same as the law here. If anything, it is more liberal.

But be these grievances of the foreigners in the South African Republic regarding franchise, taxation, and representation just or unjust, reasonable or unreasonable, it was no cause for this sanguinary war. As a matter of fact, however, the South African Republic was willing to comply with every request of the English Government regarding the franchise and all other alleged grievances of the uitlanders.

I think it can be safely stated that the Boers were willing to arbitrate all questions of difference between the two Governments; but England declined and began a systematic concentration of English troops on their frontier, which in itself constituted a practical declaration of war against them.

And, sir, let me say right here that if the friends and sympathizers of England urge as a reason for British interference and as a justification of this war the alleged grievances of the uitlanders in regard to the franchise, taxation, and representation in the Transvaal, the friends and sympathizers of the Boers answer that England's rules, laws, and regulations regarding American aliens in the British Klondike are more severe, more grievous, and more burdensome. And yet does anyone here urge a war with England on account of the grievances of American miners in the British Klondike?

From all the facts and circumstances in the case, I am convinced and clearly of the opinion that England has no right to interfere in the internal affairs of the Boers. Her pretexts for doing so are untenable, and her entire course in the matter has been selfish, cruel, unjustifiable, and dishonorable.

The war she is waging against them to-day is the most criminal, the most defenseless, and the most predatory war in all history. The Boers at all times were willing to concede every fair and just demand England made. Nothing would satisfy Rhodes and Chamberlain. They wanted the land of the Boers because it contained gold, and all the other incidental demands were merely pretexts. As soon as one was conceded, another and a harder one was made.

The truth is, and history will so record it, that England wanted the control of this country because it is the richest in gold in the world. England always puts in a claim where gold is found.

England is now, and always has been, the aggressor against the Boers. The concentration of British troops on the frontier of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic was a virtual declaration of war. England forced the war. England began it. The Boers yielded everything but independence to satisfy England. If the Boers had not struck for their rights, their firesides, and their independence when they did and as they did, they would have been overwhelmed by superior British forces before they could have struck a blow and resistance would have been useless. They were right in striking when they did.

I glory in the spunk of grand old Paul Kruger. He is one of the world's great heroes. He knew only too well how dangerous was delay, and everything that has occurred since he issued his defiant ultimatum to the British Crown has demonstrated his wisdom and his foresight. He is a grand old man, one of the world's immortals, and will always stand out on the pages of history as a friend of man, a lover of liberty, and a champion of freedom.

The ultimatum he issued to England rang round the globe, and will live in the world's history.

The Boers will never surrender their love of liberty. They can only be conquered by being exterminated, and England must not be permitted to exterminate them and steal their homes. Her criminal march of devastation must and will be checked.

America should do its duty. The great Republic, the beacon light of the world, in the name of liberty, humanity, and justice, must demand peace and make that demand good. We have the right to insist on peace with honor. We have the right to express our sympathy. We have the right to aid the Red Cross Society. International law gives us these rights, and we should exercise them. Why are we silent?

We sympathized with Poland, with Hungary, with Greece, with all the South American Republics, with Armenia, and with Cuba in their struggles for freedom. Many we helped. Why, I ask, in the name of all that is just and honorable, in the name of our glorious past, should we now refuse to lend our moral support, our sympathy, and our aid to the patriots of South Africa? Is the great light of the Republic going out? Is American sentiment dead?

A republic that has sunk so low that it glories in the downfall of a sister republic is in danger of destruction itself. A republic that refuses sympathy to a sister republic struggling to maintain its independence against monarchical agression is unworthy the name and in danger of monarchy itself. A republic that will secretly aid a monarchy to destroy a republic and blot out its free institutions is a republic rotten to the core, and will soon fall like a decayed tree on the banks of a turbulent stream to be swept away forever.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the defeat of the Boers will be the severest blow to republican institutions that has been struck in more than a century, and every friend of liberty the world over should fervently pray that Oom Paul may be successful. How patriotic citizens of this country can sympathize with Great Britain in this cruel, unjust, and unholy war against our two sister Republics is beyond my comprehension. Their defeat will be a terrible blow to free institutions on this hemisphere, and give thrones and empires a renewed lease of life at the very dawn of the twentieth century.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, this Republican Congress, and this pro-English Administration of William McKinley will do nothing for liberty, nothing for the Boers, and secretly sympathize with Great Britain. Every liberty-loving citizen of the Republic should denounce and condemn these pro-English and imperialistic tendencies. This Republic should stand by republics—not against them. I want to see the right triumph, and if it does the Boers will maintain the independence of their country.

God bless the embattled farmers of South Africa is my fervent prayer, and from the ashes of the conflict may there arise a greater and a grander republic—the glorious United States of South Africa. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. To whom does the gentleman from New York now yield?

Mr. SULZER. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa to consume a part of his time.

Mr. HULL. I do not propose to go on now. We had sixty-five minutes each when the gentleman from New York took the floor, and we have the right to close the discussion.

Mr. SULZER. How much time has the gentleman from Iowa now?

Mr. HULL. We had sixty-five minutes when the gentleman from New York began.

Mr. SULZER. If the gentleman has no one to whom to yield who wants to use any time, he can yield it to me.

Mr. HULL. I will not yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I ask the Chairman to recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ].

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

Mr. SULZER. I ask the Chairman to recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] in his own right.

Mr. HULL. The Chairman can not do that, because the House has agreed to limit the general debate until 4 o'clock. The gentleman from New York knows that the Chairman can not recognize the gentleman from Ohio in his own right.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I want to know how much time is left on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I will yield the gentleman from Ohio five minutes of my time now.

[Mr. LENTZ addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HULL. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] out of my remaining time.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, but for the very extraordinary speech just delivered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ], I should not trespass for even one minute upon the time of the committee. The speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] was perhaps characteristic of the gentleman. In the absence of facts he drew liberally upon a very brilliant imagination. Just what the gentleman from Ohio was endeavoring to establish is somewhat difficult to ascertain from the remarks he made.

From the beginning to the end his speech contained nothing except one complaint after another. He has earned, if ever a man earned, the sobriquet of the great scold. He has scolded the Administration of the last three years. He has found nothing in it to commend and everything in it to scold and find fault with. There is nothing in the gentleman's speech that is calculated to build up and make stronger and more mighty the country that honors him with a position upon this floor. On the contrary, he has exhausted his great intellect in endeavoring to belittle his own country and the Administration thereof.

The most violent and vituperative enemy of the American Republic could have said no worse things than have been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] to-day. The man who might be hung upon the gallows for treason to the country could not have uttered more diabolical and improper sentiments than has the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I want here, in my place, to characterize the gentleman's speech from the beginning to the end as a disgrace to the American Congress, as a violation of all the decencies that pertain to this House. He has misrepresented history; he has misquoted history; he has misrepresented the Administration; he has misrepresented the majority of this House. He has exhausted his whole vocabulary in unjust and false accusations against his country and against this Administration.

I make these remarks upon my own responsibility as a member of this House here, and as a gentleman outside of the House. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] I am responsible for them here and I am responsible for them elsewhere. [Applause on the Republican side.] One of the beautiful things in the Constitution of the United States is, and one of the beautiful principles of the Constitution of the United States is, that no man can be punished under the law for words used in debate. Hence, the gentleman from Ohio goes scot-free notwithstanding the false representations and charges that he has made upon this floor to-day.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House is a bill appropriating money for the support of the United States Army during the next fiscal year.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MARSH. Yes.

Mr. LENTZ. I would like to have some of these documents that I read from the War Department contradicted. I understand the gentleman to say they were false. Now, which one of them is false?

Mr. MARSH. The gentleman will hear from me before I get through. If I had any language at my command to make my meaning more clear and emphatic than I have, I would use it; but I know of none.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is a bill appropriating money for the support of the Army during the next fiscal year. Notwithstanding the long diatribe of the gentleman from Ohio, he proposes to vote for that bill. I believe there is no contention here as to the propriety of passing the bill. But the gentleman confines himself to a denunciation of the condition of things that makes the appropriation necessary. He says that the war in the Philippine Islands is an unholy war, and that it ought to be stopped by diplomacy.

Why, Mr. Chairman, early in the spring of 1898, preceding the war with Spain, the President of the United States, who had been denounced and ridiculed upon the other side of this House, was endeavoring by all the diplomatic power in his possession to prevent this very war. Gentlemen upon the other side were nagging this side and nagging the Administration, charging that we were afraid to go to war. The President of the United States was using every instrument within his power by diplomatic proceedings to prevent the Spanish war. But unanimously, almost, upon that side of the House the cry was, "Down with diplomacy." Gentlemen insisted upon war. I am not finding fault with that side for the course they pursued at that time, because I was of the same opinion myself. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I had no more confidence in diplomacy then to settle and prevent war with Spain, or to settle upon proper terms the great questions that then existed, than I have to-day that diplomacy should be used to settle the troubles that exist in the Philippine Islands. I was for force then as I am for force now, and so long as there is one insurgent in the Philippine Islands who is resisting by arms the sovereignty and the authority of the United States Government, I shall be for force. Then, when we were at profound peace, gentlemen on that side were for war, and the President was for diplomacy. As soon as the war came on, before even the hundred days were over during which the war lasted with Spain, gentlemen upon the other side of the House commenced to cry for peace; and from that time until now they have vociferously contended, in season and out of season, for peace, for pacification, for the settlement of these troubles by diplomacy.

Who was there in the Philippine Islands with whom to negotiate diplomatically? There was no organized government in the Philippine Islands with whom the Government of the United States could treat if it had been disposed to treat. As I said, before the war came our friends on the other side were for war and after the war came they were for peace. It reminds me of what a gentleman in my section of the country said a good many years ago, who was not very friendly to the Democratic party. He said there was one thing about the Democratic party, that in time of peace it was hell for war and in time of war it was hell for peace. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] talks about the condition of things in this country in the days of Thomas Jefferson. He instituted a comparison between the expenses of the War Department under Thomas Jefferson and the expenses of the War Department under President McKinley.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] wants to go back to the days of Thomas Jefferson, I have no objection to his doing it, but I want to tell him that he will have to emigrate from this country to find conditions in all respects such as existed when Thomas Jefferson was President. You would not only have to stop the clock of time, but you would have to turn it back for a century. All the great improvements and advances that have been made in the arts and in the sciences, in human progress and human liberty, would have to be turned back one hundred years. If that is what the gentleman from Ohio desires, he will have to emigrate from this country, because the people will not consent to any such turning back.

Yet if the gentleman will make a computation he will find that in comparison with the population of 1800, the wealth of the country in 1800, the extent of the country in 1800, and the size of the Army in 1800, comparing them with the present day, he will find that the Army, even now upon a war footing, is not in excess of the proportion that existed in the days of Thomas Jefferson.

The gentleman talks about expense. It is expensive to maintain an army. It is expensive to maintain a great country like that which you and others here represent, a great progressive and growing country that has ceased to be a third, a fourth, or fifth class nation, but in the last two years is recognized by the powers of the world as stepping into the front rank of the nations of the world. Occupying that rank, occupying that position—and I am proud we occupy that advanced position among the nations of the world—there comes upon our Republic responsibilities that did not rest upon it in its youthful days under the Administration of Thomas Jefferson.

Can not the gentleman from Ohio recognize what has taken place in this country in a hundred years? Has he been asleep all this time; has he not read the history of the progress of the American people, of the world, since 1800, of the one hundred years that have passed? Oh, he says, we have abandoned the Monroe doctrine! We have not. The Monroe doctrine is to-day just as it has always been. There is nothing that this country has done in the last two years that militates in the slightest degree against the principles of the Monroe doctrine.

Those principles are living principles to-day, having just as much force and obligation upon us to-day as they did, and even more than they did on the day on which they were proclaimed. There has been no abandonment whatever of the Monroe doctrine growing out of the results of the Philippine insurrection. But the gentleman says that militarism has taken possession of the country; that the Republic is in danger because of the militarism that exists in the country to-day.

It became necessary to enlarge our Army because of the Spanish war and the Philippine insurrection; and yet, Mr. Chairman, you may take the Army upon a war footing as it is to-day, and it amounts to 1 soldier to 1,000 of our people; it amounts to 100 soldiers to 100,000 people; it amounts to a thousand soldiers to 1,000,000 of our people. Is there anything to be alarmed at in that condition and that strength of the military arm of the Government? Four-fifths of that army is being utilized outside of the limits of the United States, and is being utilized for the sole and only purpose of suppressing an armed insurrection and rebellion against the authority of these United States.

I hold, Mr. Chairman, that our title to the Philippine Islands is as complete as is our title to the State of Florida. We acquired each of them from Spain; we acquired each of them by treaty with Spain, and the duty of the National Government to maintain its authority in the Philippine Islands and suppress insurrection and armed rebellion against the United States is just as strong and just as powerful as it would be to suppress rebellion in the State of Florida. It rests upon the fact that the sovereignty of the United States extends over the Philippine Islands as well as it extends over the State of Florida.

Our title to the Philippine Islands and to Puerto Rico is as complete and as indefeasible as our title to the Louisiana purchase. We acquired one by a treaty which has no more sanctity and binding efficacy than the other; and while Florida contains one State and the Louisiana purchase contains fourteen States and Territories, the ægis and sovereignty of the United States is there, no more there and no more right to be there than it is in the Philippine Islands; and there was a time, an unpleasant and unhappy time, in the history of our country, a time that I hope to God will never come again in this land of ours, when it became necessary in order to maintain the integrity of the Union, to maintain and assert the sovereignty of the United States over all our territory, to wage a war four years long. That is what we are doing there in the Philippine Islands.

I say here that if the President of the United States should of his own motion abandon the Philippine Islands, withdraw the Army and Navy therefrom and allow them to go scot-free, he would be liable and subject to impeachment by the House of Representatives and conviction by the Senate. And in the prosecution of this armed force in the Philippine Islands the Administration is doing nothing more nor less than what is its bounden duty to do. Aye, more; the Congress of the United States, men on both sides of this House, I am glad to say—men on both sides of this House in the last days of the last Congress passed a bill, with a very few dissenting votes, authorizing the President to raise an army of 100,000 men. For what? To be sent to the Philippine Islands to maintain our sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, to maintain it in Puerto Rico if necessary, and to carry out the purpose of the Government with reference to Cuba. The Democratic side of this House bear a part of the responsibility of this existing Army, as well as this side that I am on. What did you expect the President to do with these troops when you voted authority to him to raise 100,000 of them? The war with Spain was over; peace had been declared.

The treaty had been ratified by the Senate of the United States and, I believe, by the Spanish Government, although the interchange had not taken place between the Executives of the two Governments; yet we were absolutely at peace with Spain; no war with Spain; no war with any country on earth; yet our Democratic friends, in the closing days of the last Congress, stood up here, with few exceptions, and voted authority to the President to raise 100,000 troops. Why did you do it if it was not for the purpose of asserting and maintaining the authority of the United States Government in those islands? Why, then, this complaining from the gentleman from Ohio, complaining of the President for doing the very thing that Congress, on both sides of the House, authorized him and clothed him with 100,000 men to do?

Did you give him that 100,000 men in order that the Secretary of State might write some diplomatic letters on the subject? No; you gave it in order to clothe him with the necessary military power to do just exactly what he has been doing in the Philippine Islands. And I say that if the mouth of the gentleman from Ohio is not closed, the mouths of a good many of you are; and it comes with bad grace from gentlemen who voted for that bill to attack the Administration for using these very soldiers in the very way and manner that you knew he was to use and expected that he would use them when you voted him 100,000 men a little over a year ago.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question in this connection?

Mr. MARSH. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ], without attempting to vouch for the correctness of it, placed in the RECORD a statement that a thousand handcuffs were sent to the Philippine Islands to handcuff our soldiers there who are insane. He does not claim to vouch for it, but suggests it and puts it into the RECORD. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the Military Committee, what basis there is for it.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman where it came from; the Military Committee never heard of it.

Mr. MARSH. I think it came from the brilliant brain of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] stated that he took it from the Evening Star.

Mr. COX. Who?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. LENTZ, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MARSH. It is in keeping with a great many other things which the gentleman from Ohio indulged in.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MARSH. Certainly.

Mr. COX. It is said that the Democrats on this side of the House and the Democrats on the committee voted to authorize the President of the United States to call out a hundred thousand men. Upon examination the gentleman will find that there was no such authority conferred.

Mr. MARSH. I said nothing about the committee. I said that both sides of this House voted for the bill on the 3d day of March, a year ago, to authorize the President to raise and recruit 100,000 soldiers and to use them until the 1st day of July, 1901. My recollection is that a majority of the gentlemen on that side of the House voted for that bill. I have not got the RECORD, but my recollection is that a large majority on the other side voted for the bill, and the query has occurred to me, Why did you clothe the President a year ago this month, after the war with Spain had closed—why did you clothe him with the power to raise a hundred thousand more troops unless it was to use them just as he is now and has been using them?

When you authorized that hundred thousand men to be enlisted did you expect the appropriation bill to be about the same as the war appropriation bill in the days of Thomas Jefferson? Of course you did not. You were fully aware when you voted the President 100,000 men, to be used until the 1st of July, 1901, that it would take over a hundred million dollars this year out of the public Treasury to defray the expenses thereof. And I submit that it is not the square thing for gentlemen upon that side of the House to find fault with the amount of this appropriation bill.

I submit that it is not the fair thing, and I do not believe many on that side of the House would indulge in it. I do not think there are many outside of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] that would indulge in it. I do not think there are many on that side of the House who are disposed to criticise the Administration because the expenses of this Army this fiscal year have amounted to $127,000,000, or because the probabilities are that the expenses of this Army for the next fiscal year will be $112,000,000. It does not come with a good grace from your side, any more than it would come with a good grace from my side.

I believe that the great Democratic heart of this country, largely as it is represented upon this floor of Congress, is as anxious as I am, as are the gentlemen upon my side of the House, to assert and maintain the sovereignty and the power and the authority of the United States over every foot of land that we possess; and if the President should be derelict in that respect, if he should abandon the Philippine Islands to anarchy and mob law and mob rule and withdraw the Army and Navy therefrom, there are no men in the country who would be more prolific in their denunciations of the President than the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to occupy even one-half of the time I have, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] quotes what he vouches were the words of General Lawton. General Lawton, fortunately for him [LENTZ], is dead. General Lawton can no longer speak; he can no longer be heard. His memory may be traduced; he may be misrepresented, as many a man who has gone to his long home in the past has been misrepresented. That interview he vouches for, in my opinion, never was uttered by the tongue of General Lawton. I say that from my general knowledge of his character and from some things that came to us from his pen, that no man can deny. I will read from a letter written by him but a very few days previous to his death an extract, in which he says many other things:

> I wish to God that this whole Philippine situation could be known by every one in America as I know it. If the real history, inspiration, and conditions of this insurrection, and the influences, local and external, that now encourage the enemy, as well as the actual possibilities of these islands and peoples and their relations to this great East, could be understood at home, we would hear no more talk of unjust "shooting of government" into the Filipinos or of hauling down our flag in the Philippines.
>
> If the so-called anti-imperialists would honestly ascertain the truth on the ground, and not in distant America, they, whom I believe to be honest men misinformed, would be convinced of the error of their statements and conclusions and of the unfortunate effect of their publications here. If I am shot by a Filipino bullet, it might as well come from one of my own men, because I know from observation confirmed by captured prisoners that the continuance of the fighting is chiefly due to reports that are sent out from America.

That sounds to me much more like the real character of General Lawton than the purported interview which the gentleman from Ohio had read from the Clerk's desk.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word further and I am through. I always feel like asking the pardon of the House when I have trespassed upon it even for a short time.

I did not participate in the Puerto Rican debate, for the reason that in February a year ago, by the courtesy of the House, I addressed it, and on that occasion I advocated the very lines that were adopted in the Puerto Rican bill that passed the House. I took the ground then and have been absolutely confirmed in it since, that the Constitution of the United States does not go proprio vigore into the territory that we may acquire; that its principles and guaranties can only go there by enactment into statute.

I moreover said in that discussion, having more particular reference to the Philippine Islands, in answer to what was said to me by a gentleman then on the other side, who is not here now, Mr. Dockery, whom I respect and honor very highly; in answer to a suggestion from him that the people of the country were opposed to the acquisition of these islands, that the workingmen and the farmers were opposed to the acquisition—in response to that statement of his, I said, while occupying the floor, that it had been the policy of the Republican party and of the country for forty years to protect American industry and American workingmen against the cheaply paid labor products of other countries; that now we had taken into our possession the Philippine Islands, if the country adhered to the economic policy to which it had been committed for forty years, the products of the cheap labor of the Philippine Islands would not be allowed to come into this country in competition with the better paid labor of our own workingmen. I said further, that when the workingmen and the farmers of our country understood, as they would understand, that Philippine cheap-labor products could not come here in competition with theirs, they would stand where I stood, in favor of extension and expansion, in favor of the acquisition and retention of those islands.

The Puerto Rican bill embodies the principle which I announced at that time and which I proclaimed in my own Congressional district on more than twenty public occasions during the last summer and fall. I do not intend to discuss that principle at any length.

I want to call the attention of the House to some statistics on the subject of Puerto Rico. It is claimed that this Puerto Rican bill is levying tribute upon the people of Puerto Rico; that it is oppressive upon them. I deny that it is either levying tribute in any sense of the word or placing burdens unjustly upon those people.

Let me call attention to the burdens that were put upon them under Spanish rule: For 1898 the estimates for customs under Spanish rule were, in round numbers, $3,377,000; taxes, in round numbers, $1,000,000; monopoly revenues, $184,000; postage stamps, $128,000; lotteries, etc., $309,000; other sources, $106,200, making $5,157,200 of taxes that were laid by Spanish authority upon the people of that island; and those did not include the local taxation of towns, cities, and villages. Note that the customs alone were $3,377,900. And none of that money went to the benefit of Puerto Rico; all went for the benefit of Spain, to be expended wherever she chose to put it; $1,152,000 went to the Spanish army.

Under the Puerto Rican bill as it passed the House the whole amount of taxes to be collected in Puerto Rico and in this country would amount to not exceeding $750,000, as against $3,377,000 collected under Spanish rule. Besides, every dollar of the $750,000 derived from duties imposed by the Puerto Rican bill goes to the benefit of Puerto Rico; not a cent of it goes into the United States Treasury, not a cent of benefit is to be derived from it by the people of the United States; but every dollar of that revenue goes to the people of Puerto Rico. We do not extend to Puerto Rico the internal-revenue system that we have for ourselves.

The extension of the internal-revenue system to Puerto Rico would be burdensome upon those people in the depressed condition of their business interests at present. Instead of the Puerto Rico bill being oppressive upon the people of Puerto Rico, you may, in my judgment, search the history of the world from the beginning down to this time without finding anywhere in all the history of legislation an instance where the people have been so liberally, kindly, and generously treated as the Puerto Ricans have been by that Puerto Rican bill and the bill that passed the other day devoting to the use of the Puerto Rican people the revenues derived from our taxation of imports from Puerto Rico, amounting to over two million and a half of dollars.

Search the history of legislation from the beginning of government and you can not find anywhere such liberality and generosity as have been displayed in the legislation of this Congress already enacted and in the Puerto Rican bill which passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

Some members inquired what book I was reading from. I have been reading from Dr. Carroll's Report on Puerto Rico, made last November to the President of the United States. Dr. Carroll was sent to Puerto Rico by the President as commissioner, and this is his report.

Now, the Puerto Rican legislation which passed this House is temporary in its character. There is no civil government in Puerto Rico now that can levy taxes in the interim between now and the establishment of a civil government there. It takes some little time to establish a civil government. It may be done this year. I hope it will be done by this Congress. Even then it will take time to get that newly established government into operation so that it can legislate and by virtue of its legislation derive revenue to support the local government.

It takes the machinery of government one year after we have made the assessments, in my State, before we succeed in getting the money in the treasury to be available for use. So even if this Congress succeeds in establishing a government in Puerto Rico, it will take some little time, a year or two or three, before that government will be in shape to pass the necessary legislation to raise revenues and administer them.

So that this legislation is temporary in its character, and in my judgment is right. Now let me read you from what Dr. Carroll says. Dr. Carroll, speaking with reference to the future and final disposition of things in these islands, says that reciprocal relations ought to exist between Puerto Rico and the United States; and I agree with him in that—that the time will come when those reciprocal relations ought to exist between Puerto Rico and this country, just as they exist between Arizona and the rest of the country. But I call your attention especially to what he says should be done in the meantime, in the interim. Speaking of the customs tariff collections as being $3,377,000 under Spanish law, he says:

It would seem to be prudent not to revise the Puerto Rican tariff so as very greatly to reduce the customs revenue, at least for the period ad interim.

That is the advice of Dr. Carroll, who is upon the ground. We have reduced them not inconsiderably either. We have reduced them from nearly $4,000,000, as they were under Spanish rule, to about $750,000 under the Puerto Rican bill, and more than half of that is paid at this end, and the other half at the other end.

So, Mr. Chairman, the principles involved in the Puerto Rican bill and the policy embodied therein, in my judgment, are correct. And I want to say here that it will be a matter of pride to the people of this country hereafter, it will be a source of great satisfaction to the people of this country hereafter, to you and to your children who come after you, that the first law of Congress placed upon the statute books after the acquisition of these islands, relative to these islands, asserts the principle that the Constitution, by its own vigor, does not go there.

I thank the committee for their attention. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] commented upon the services, casualties, and pension applications of certain volunteer regiments engaged in the late war with Spain.

For some purpose which I do not understand he instituted a comparison between eight Northern regiments and eight Southern regiments. I quote from the record of the gentleman's remarks the following:

I now read, and insert as a part of my remarks, a list of eight regiments of volunteers who took part in the Santiago battles, with the list of casualties and number of applications for pensions.

Regiments of volunteers.	List of casualties in Santiago battles.				Number of claims filed on account of service.
	Killed.	Wounded.	Missing.	Total.	Invalids.	Widows.	Dependents.	Total.
Second Massachusetts Infantry	5	40	....	45	424	15	28	467
First United States Volunteer Cavalry	15	76	2	93	200	16	16	241
Seventy-first New York Infantry	18	60	43	116	255	11	39	305
First District of Columbia Infantry	....	....	....	....	409	....	10	419
Ninth Massachusetts Infantry	....	....	....	....	552	15	78	645
Thirty-third Michigan Infantry	....	....	....	....	413	9	37	459
Thirty-fourth Michigan Infantry	....	....	....	....	466	9	60	535
Eighth Ohio Infantry	....	....	....	....	447	5	35	487
Total	38	176	45	254	3,175	80	303	3,588

It will be seen by reference to these tables that the 8 volunteer regiments had a total of 209 killed and wounded, and that the applications for pensions filed by these 8 regiments are 3,588, or 17 applications for pensions filed for each soldier killed or wounded.

It will be seen that the above 8 volunteer regiments are from Massachusetts, New York, District of Columbia, Michigan, and Ohio—all from the North, where it is popular to favor liberal pensions.

I now read and make a part of my remarks a list of casualties and applications for pensions for 8 other volunteer regiments, as follows:

Volunteer regiments in the war with Spain.

Regiments.	Strength.	Casualties.				Number of applications filed for pension.
		Killed in action.	Wounded.	Died.	Total.
First Alabama Infantry	1,651	.....	.....	16	16	71
First Georgia Infantry	1,331	.....	.....	11	11	65
First Kentucky Infantry	1,334	.....	.....	28	28	122
First Mississippi Infantry	1,141	.....	.....	30	30	66
First South Carolina Infantry	1,359	.....	.....	18	18	110
First Tennessee Infantry	2,026	1	.....	25	26	174
Second Tennessee Infantry	1,419	.....	.....	15	15	93
First Texas Infantry	1,397	.....	.....	15	15	60
Total	.....	1	.....	158	159	761

It will be seen that the total number of deaths, killed, and wounded in these 8 regiments are 159; that the total number of pension applications by soldiers of these 8 regiments are 761, or, in round numbers, 4 applications for each death in these 8 regiments.

These last 8 regiments are from the States of Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas, where the pension evil has not reached the horrid proportions it has in the Northern States, and where the people are still willing to make a living by honest toil and are not knocking at the doors of Congress day and night for the passage of legislation enabling them to appropriate the hard earnings of other people to their own use.

The extreme injustice of these tables and comparisons is apparent to the most casual observer. In the northern regiments no account is taken of deaths, except of those killed in battle. By counting only the killed and wounded in the northern regiments, he finds that there are 17 pension applications for each soldier killed and wounded. Had the gentleman followed the same method of comparison for the 8 southern regiments, he would have found that there are 761 pension applications for each soldier killed and wounded in those regiments. What glory can be gained by such a comparison is beyond my comprehension. If these soldiers had need of a champion to praise or defend them, they should pray to be saved from their friend from Tennessee.

But, Mr. Chairman, the attempt to institute a comparison between Northern and Southern soldiers is unjustifiable for any purpose or from any point of view. The courage, devotion, and patriotism of the American soldier, North or South, East or West, in the late war, or in any war, has been conceded by all, questioned by none, except so far as it is called in question by the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee. The bravery of the Southern soldier in the late war, as in every war in which he has drawn his sword, has been and is conceded by the people of the North as freely as by the people of the South. No soldier in any age, in any country, or in any section exhibited unflinching courage in a higher degree than the soldiers who made, as well as the soldiers who repulsed, the immortal Pickett's charge on the fields of Gettysburg.

But why does the gentleman now raise this cry of sectionalism? What good purpose can be served? One of the most beneficial and glorious results of the late war was the welding together of the North and the South—a firmer union of one people, under one flag.

The attack of a foreign enemy, the insult to the flag, the destruction of American lives by a treacherous people, was miraculous in its effect upon our divided countrymen. It healed every wound of the civil war, brushed aside every cause for estrangement, and welded our divided country into a more perfect and lasting union. Sectional lines were obliterated. The bitterness that had lingered so long was effaced. Old hatreds were forgotten, and Confederate and Federal, the Blue and the Gray, the men who made and the men who repulsed Pickett's charge, united as one man, under one flag, in defense of one country. In the language of a distinguished Southern Senator, in an instant "there was no North, no South; one country and one flag."

I warn the gentleman from Tennessee that no patriotic citizen of the United States should attempt to destroy this union of sentiment and substitute the old-time bitter feelings of sectionalism.

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise so much to criticise the gentleman from Tennessee as to call attention to the record of a regiment he has failed to notice. I would not institute any odious comparisons with any other regiment. I would not attempt to distract one iota from the praise or fame or glory due to any other soldier. I simply want to call attention and give a just meed of praise to a regiment whose history is such a record of unflinching courage, undying devotion to the flag, danger defied, battles heroically fought, and victories won that the heart of every man, woman, and child in our own State thrills with pride at the mention of the Second Oregon. Let me place the record of this regiment side by side with those named by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Record of Second Oregon Infantry.

Killed	16
Wounded	74
Missing	3
Died	4
Total casualties	137
Number of pension applications	178

It will be seen that there are approximately one and one-fourth pension applications for each soldier, dead, wounded, and missing, and less than two pension applications for each soldier killed and wounded, as against 761 pension applications for each soldier killed and wounded in the eight regiments whose records were eulogized by the gentleman from Tennessee. But this by no means gives a complete record of the Second Oregon; its glory rests on much more solid foundation.

The Santiago campaign lasted from June 23 to July 17—in all, 25 days. The Second Oregon anchored at Manila Bay June 30, 1898, and embarked for the return journey June 14, 1899. It engaged in the first battle at Manila, February 5, 1899, and ended its fighting career by the capture of Aryat at 5 a. m. and Pasing at 9 a. m. May 22, 1899. In this fighting campaign of three months and seventeen days it marched 588 miles in rain and mud and through unbroken country. It fought, and it is needless to say won, 42 battles, skirmishes, and engagements; it merited and received words of praise from every general who commanded it in the field—from Anderson, Wheaton, Merritt, and on three occasions from the bravest of the brave, the gallant, lamented Lawton.

The quality of the men who composed the Second Oregon was indicated by a brief order of General Wheaton at Melinto: "Orderly, overtake those Oregon greyhounds on the road to Polo and order them to Melinto. Go mounted, or you will never catch them." When, after the glorious victory at Malabon, General Wheaton was asked, "Where are your regulars?" he pointed to the Second Oregon, saying, "There are my regulars." A volume would not record the heroic deeds of those boys. At Malabon those brave young soldiers charged across the open rice fields, upon which they left many dead and wounded, in the face of a murderous fire from an entrenched foe and planted the Stars and Stripes upon the fortification of a defeated enemy. No veterans the world ever saw showed more cool, steady, and determined courage than the boys of the Second Oregon in that magnificent conflict.

The story of this regiment would be incomplete without some description of the men who composed it. People look to the West for brave, but rough, strength of character. Doubtless you are thinking that these soldier boys learned skill with the rifle, coolness in danger, and endurance in camp and on the march in the wild frontiers, hunting in the mountains, or herding on the plains of some imaginary "wild and woolly West." Let me undeceive you. These men were of the best "ye breed" in every sense. Out of the 1,190 enlisted men, there were 531 of these members of different church organizations; 114 were college graduates, 156 were students, 34 were merchants, 28 were teachers, 15 were lawyers, 15 were bookkeepers, 141 were clerks, 123 were farmers, 69 were skilled mechanics, and 175 were laborers.

When a railroad was captured, the Second Oregon furnished an engineer, who had left employment at $150 a month, to man the engine. When a town with waterworks out of repair was captured, the Second Oregon furnished the engineer to repair the waterworks and put them in running order. When the custom-house was organized, the Second Oregon furnished largely the clerical force, as it did for the quartermaster's department. When an educational system was instituted in Manila, a private from the Second Oregon became superintendent of public instruction.

It is the old story. The most remarkable courage is intelligent courage. The bully from the prize ring, when the real conflict comes, is a coward by the side of the more intelligent young man, who has left behind him a mother, wife, sister, or sweetheart, whose name he fears to tarnish even by the appearance of cowardice.

I present the record of these men as the tribute of the State of Oregon to flag and country. As citizens of that fair young Western State, where "rolls the Oregon," we are proud of them. We cherish the living, we honor the dead, and shall erect fitting monuments to their memory.

That other American soldiers under like conditions would have done nobly I doubt not. But it fell to the lot of the Second Oregon to be placed in a situation where supreme courage was the imperative need of the hour. Like true heroes they rose equal to their opportunities and the occasion; met every emergency, responded to every demand, discharged every duty, laughed at every danger, and left behind them a record of heroic achievements never excelled in any land or in any age. Not only the State of Oregon, not only their own country, but their race should be proud of such men. Their record proves what humanity can and will achieve, what it can and will suffer, when duty calls for great suffering or great achievement.

Mr. Chairman, if this Republic should be endangered, it will be through the negligence, not the wickedness, of its citizens.

The welfare and happiness of every man, woman, and child are dependent upon the honor of their country's flag, the quality of its laws, and the proper administration of every department of its Government. Our country preserves for us all that we have that makes life worth living. It protects property from the hands of violence, reputation from the tongue of slander, family honor from the invader of homes. The eloquence of Demosthenes, the music of Milton, the humanity of Shakespeare, the wisdom, devotion, and patriotism of Lincoln could not have flourished under the hand of tyranny.

But to properly preserve and administer every department of a great government wisely and well, to enact and enforce good laws, to give to each citizen as much freedom of action as is consistent with public safety and the welfare of others, requires thought, toil, intelligence, patriotic devotion to the country's welfare. It requires the faithful, conscientious performance of his public duties by every citizen of the entire country. A government like ours should be in fact, as well as in name, a government by the people and by all the people. The man who shirks, who fails to do his part, is recreant to a most sacred duty.

The man who receives the blessings and protection bestowed by a government like ours and does not in return perform faithfully and conscientiously his own public duties is taking something for nothing, something he has not earned, and is guilty of moral larceny. Yet there are men of wealth, the protection of whose persons and property occupies the time of our courts, the watchful care and attention of our officers, the thought and labor of our legislators, the courage and suffering and lives of our soldiers, who never in their lives gave a moment's thoughtful consideration to a single public duty.

There are men of culture, educated at schools supported by the public or by the endowment of patriotic men, who draw closely about them their robes of self-righteousness and shrink from public duties as something that might contaminate their immaculate purity or darken the whiteness of their hands. But even this is not all. Not content with neglecting their own public and political duties, they stimulate and encourage others to equal guilt with themselves. They point the finger of scorn at those whose public duties are well and faithfully done. They proclaim that politics are unclean, that public men are coarse, selfish politicians, that voters are corrupt. This is a vile, damnable slander upon many men who are infinitely their superiors in the discharge of public duties.

Against the example and conduct of such as these it is a pleasure to place the record of a band of men who have done their full public duties like heroes and patriots. They received little from the Commonweath, yet offered to lay down their lives for it. Of the average citizen their country requires little of his time or thought or labor, and this little is too often denied. These soldiers, young men on the threshold of their lives, took life and limb and happiness, all they have, or are, or hope be, and placed all on the altar of our common country, and some, alas, completed this great sacrifice. No wonder that when these boys returned to Oregon the woods and hills, the mountains and valleys rang with joyous welcome, and the very birds sang diviner and more inspiring songs in their honor.

A word for the heroic dead. They have performed the noblest and sublimest act it is given to humanity to achieve; they have given their lives for their country. Theirs were not lives nearing their close, worn out with dissipation, broken with toil, devoid of hope, their cup of happiness drained to the dregs, and nothing left worth living for. Theirs were lives at the beginning, unspent, everything to hope, everything to achieve, everything to live for. Before the prime of manhood had been reached their life's work had been done and well done. Their rest will be eternal, their fame secure. For those who returned, full of hope and full of honor, life holds many temptations and many dangers; the rest and happiness they crave may not be theirs.

Hope may turn to disappointment; the honors they have so proudly won may be sullied; we hope and pray not. The fame and honor of no man is safe this side of the grave. But the fame of these heroic men, "dead on the field of honor," is secure. Their honor will be forever unsullied, their memory will be like sweet perfume. They have received and are wearing their crown, and no power on earth or in heaven will pluck it from their brows.

On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

These men and their thousand comrades in a few months of war achieved more for their State, more for their country and its future advancement and future greatness; made more and grander history; have written their names higher and more legibly upon the scroll of fame than the 100,000 men who remained at home will in a lifetime of peaceful occupation.

The gratitude of their country will be theirs for all time; their memory will be cherished as long as youth loves life; their examples will be a treasure and an inheritance of inestimable value to generations yet unborn.

Through the late conflict our nation has received a new baptism of freedom; we have acquired new heroism and new heroes for future and higher inspirations. We have placed patriotism above business and valued liberty more than wealth. The hearts of poet and orator have been touched with a holier fire. We have learned diviner songs, instinct with national spirit, and that thrill and throb through every heart, East, West, North, and South.

Now, more than ever, we are one people, having one language and one law and under one flag. And among those who have contributed to this glorious result, in the first rank, second to none, stands the Second Oregon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PARKER of New Jersey having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On March 26, 1900:

H. R. 4696. An act for the relief of J. A. Ware;

H. R. 2956. An act to extend the time for the completion of the incline railway on West Mountain, Hot Springs Reservation; and

H. J. Res. 159. Joint resolution to amend joint resolution to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to members of the press, etc., approved February 17, 1897.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. HULL. The time for debate has expired, and I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMANDING GENERAL'S OFFICE.

To defray the contingent expenses of the Commanding General's Office, in his discretion, $1,750.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Before proceeding with my remarks I want to thank the gentleman who has just taken his seat for the complimentary way in which he referred to Pickett's division at Gettysburg. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I am the only man on the floor of this House who was in that charge, and I am prouder of it than he possibly can be. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to discuss fully the pending bill, but matters to which it relates. There is no one occupying a seat in this House that would withhold from our gallant soldiers a bountiful supply of everything that will make them as comfortable as soldiers can well be and in every way possible relieve their burdens and alleviate their sufferings; but when we pause and consider the vast sums of money appropriated by this bill alone, not considering the naval and other appropriations yet to be provided for, and further consider that these vast sums are being appropriated in a time of at least comparative peace, and, further, that our war with Spain has long since ceased and that the insurrection in the Philippine Islands has been pronounced as practically at an end for the past four months, I shall not wonder that the taxpayers of the country will ask, and that not without reason, Why the appropriation of these vast sums of money and the continuance of the burdensome and unnecessary war tax?

The appropriation made by this bill is largely for our army now in the Philippines.

By the results of the war with Spain, or rather, I may say, by what is called that peculiar, unaccountable, unexplainable "manifest destiny" that we hear talked about as having marked the march and progress of this great Republic on its course to grandeur and to glory, we are in the military possession and occupancy of portions of the Philippine Islands, which were by the treaty of Paris ceded to this Government; and for the title we received from Spain we paid $20,000,000, and thereby these islands are under the military control of this country, and it is seriously urged by some to be permanently held by us a part of the territory of our country.

The acquisition of foreign territory by this Government and its incorporation into and as a part of ours is such a radical departure from all the teachings of the founders of the Republic and all that is truly American and fraught with so much danger that we can not but contemplate such action with the gravest fears as to the result.

The problem is one of perplexity to all patriotic and true Americans, and demands at the hands of the Congress of the United States the most weighty consideration and the exercise of the profoundest wisdom.

Now, the question most naturally arises, When the insurrection in the Philippines has been fully and finally quelled, peace and order therein restored, and armed resistance to the military authority of the United States shall have ceased, what shall be done with the islands, or rather with their inhabitants?

Shall Congress legislate in regard thereto, and so legislate as to make the islands irrevocably a part of our great domain, placing them on the same footing as our other Territories and their inhabitants citizens of our Republic; or shall we let them go and tell their people that we began the war with Spain for the sake of humanity, and that we still stand by that declaration, and that we regard "forcible annexation as criminal aggression," and that as the fundamental principles of our Government forbid us attempting to govern a people without their consent, and that as they have evinced a disposition and determination not to be governed by us, therefore, if they will formulate their own government in their own way and make to us full reparation, that we will withdraw the military arm?

Mr. Chairman, we do not now, nor will we when peace and order is restored in these islands, own them or their inhabitants. If we should decide to retain them the most we could claim would be the right to govern the people; and what shall be the form and character of such Government? They are now without civil government, at least have only such as the military authorities of the United States now in the islands, acting by the authority of the President, may choose to furnish them. The people of these islands have no rights, except it be to live, breathe, be quiet and peaceful, provided always that they do not get in the way of or disturb the military establishment in their midst, and that they obey the same. And this state of affairs must substantially continue until the Executive of the United States shall choose to withdraw the military arm and substitute some other kind of government, or Congress shall legislate touching the status of government of the islands and their people.

But Congress, in its wisdom, may not choose to legislate in regard to the islands further than to declare that when peace and order shall have been restored the people shall be at liberty to formulate their own government and suit themselves as to its form.

If this be long delayed, other things may occur that may put it beyond the power of Congress to allow these people to go, and leave us with them on our hands.

The discussion in this House on the Puerto Rico tax measure developed that there has gotten into this question a great deal of, at least, apparent muddle and confusion—perhaps mostly muddle of brain—touching the acquisition by the United States of these islands and of the Territories of Louisiana and Florida. But the acquisitions of Louisiana and Florida should not, in my humble opinion, furnish any precedent for our action touching the Philippines. I can best illustrate our true position as to Louisiana and Florida at the time of their acquisition, and how our people regarded it, by relating a conversation I had some years ago with a Californian who was on a visit to my section of the country.

He said Virginia people were in some respects the most peculiar people with whom he had met; that they were constantly buying lands and farms, and when he asked them why they did this the invariable answer was, "Oh, because it joins us." So with the Territories of Louisiana, Florida, California, and Texas—"they joined us."

The people of Louisiana and Florida at the time of acquisition were to some extent, at least, dominated by American sentiment, by reason not only of contact with our people, but many of our people had settled in these Territories prior to their acquisition.

And, again, in a large measure, and by reason of this fact, the people of Louisiana and Florida were a homogeneous people and occupied adjacent territory to ours, while the Philippine people are a heterogeneous people and live in a far-away land, in another hemisphere, separated from our shores by a great physical barrier—an ocean 7,000 miles wide—and besides this they are not Anglo-Saxons, but Malays, red men, in fact, almost all colors save white. In religion, part Mohammedan and part Christian, and between their civilization and ours a great, if not an impassable, gulf exists, which will forever prevent their assimilation. They have no Anglo-Saxon instincts, and no connection whatever with our history. But I turn from this for the present to the discussion of another question.

It must not be supposed that the Democratic party is not for expansion, both of territory and trade. Nearly all the great Democratic leaders who have lived in this country or now live are expansionists, but there is a wide difference between what they pronounce true and proper expansion and what is termed imperialism, the assimilation of a homogeneous people and of adjacent territory and that of a heterogeneous people and foreign territory.

No party in this country that ever rose, reigned, or fell has advocated the acquisition of territory for colonial purposes or the owning by this country of colonial possessions until this doctrine has in this day found champions in the now Republican party of the country.

I am now, as I have always been, in favor of expansion of territory and trade, but as a patriotic American, true to the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, I am utterly opposed to the newfangled doctrine of expansion as expounded by our friends of the Republican party; or, in other words, I am opposed to a colonial policy whereby part of the people of this Republic will be citizens and part subjects. To avoid this we must let go our hold upon the Philippines or make them a part of the territory of this country and their untold millions citizens of our Republic.

On the debate on the Puerto Rico tax bill I heard it argued and urged on the floor of this House by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber that Congress, in dealing with the inhabitants of the islands acquired by us from Spain under the treaty of Paris, acts outside and beyond the pale of the Constitution; that the power of Congress in this regard is plenary, is supreme—omnipotent—and it takes an act of Congress to carry the Constitution to this newly acquired territory.

If Congress does not get its authority from the Constitution in dealing with these acquisitions, where does it get it?

The Congress "plenary" is a creature of the Constitution.

Can the creature get above the creator or go, be, or exist without the creator?

It can not be true, in the very nature of things, that Congress can do anything outside the Constitution.

To even assert, much less admit, that Congress, in dealing with the inhabitants of these islands, can act without and beyond the Constitution is the very rankest imperialism, and to admit such to be the authority of Congress is to state the fallacious proposition that under our Constitution we can in this country, at one and the same time, have two kinds of government in operation—one a Republic under the Constitution; the other an empire, by Congressional action, outside the Constitution.

If it be conceded that Congress can legislate for the inhabitants of these islands without being bound by the limitations, prohibitions, and restrictions of the Constitution, then it, or the legislatures of the Territories organized under its laws, can pass ex post facto laws or bills of attainder, abolish jury trial, suspend the writ of habeas corpus in time of peace, create titles of nobility, impose unequal taxation and that without representation—in a word, make the President of the United States or some military officer dictator or emperor. The statement of the proposition is its refutation.

How can an act of Congress carry the Constitution to our new acquisitions? Is not the very reverse true? Does not the Constitution carry Congress to these acquisitions, after our flag has been there planted and it has become our manifest intention to hold as part of our territory these acquisitions?

My examination of the decisions of the Supreme Court has satisfied me as to the status of territory and the inhabitants of territory acquired by the United States. I do not deem it necessary to repeat what has already been said in this House along this line.

Would it had been as Mr. Jefferson said, that the Constitution had been made so clear and plain that the people would have had no differences of opinion as to its meaning and only differed in policies of the Government.

Why should we make the Philippine Islands a part of this country and their inhabitants citizens of the United States? What do we want with them and what can we do with them? If we once incorporate them into and as a part of this country and make the inhabitants citizens of the Republic, and we shall hereafter discover we made a mistake, how shall we get rid of them?

It is asserted that we want their trade and the trade of the Chinese seas and the Orient, and by a distinguished Senator, that it is a land of great value in its productions and great in mineral wealth—a land of gold, and much gold; but it must be remembered that these are the maxims of covetousness, and not those of liberty and patriotism. We surely have not fallen so low as to be moved by such sordid considerations as those of greed and gain, and to barter our liberty and free institutions for "commercial assets."

I have already stated that we do not own the lands of these islands. They belong to the inhabitants, and we can not get the lands without paying for them, unless we are going to follow the example of William the Norman, and divide them out among our soldiers. We do not and can not own the inhabitants and can not force tribute from them, unless we are to become tyrants and freebooters and follow the example of England in South Africa, crushing as gallant, chivalrous, and brave a people as ever fought, bled, and died for liberty; and yet the American Congress, the grandest deliberative body on the earth, representing the most liberty-loving and enlightened people of the best and grandest Republic in the world, is not willing to even express sympathy with this people.

England is the enemy of free government. She is the enemy of this country and has tried to destroy us, and would be willing to undertake it now if she dared. She has been guilty of arson and murder. She is an old thief and robber, and is not only trying to rob the Boers of their gold and their diamonds but of their liberty. Away with your English alliance. Let those who will advocate it, but shame to any patriot who even thinks of entertaining such an idea.

Then there would seem to be only one principal thing we are after, and that is the privilege of trading with the people of these islands, and this privilege we can have without attempting to govern them.

It is said to retain the Philippines will furnish to us great opportunities for trade between America and the nations of the Orient; that we must look for markets, and that we must enter into actual competition for this trade; that we must recognize changed conditions, and that by holding the Philippines our trade in the Orient will continue to increase until we shall find a market for all our supplies and surplus products. I can not see the logic of this reasoning when there can be no reason why we can not find markets in the Orient for our surplus products without the Philippines as well as with them, and by letting them go we shall escape dangers to our liberty that are not now so clearly foreseen, but which will certainly come if we attempt to establish free institutions in the Eastern Hemisphere.

Again, the protective-tariff people, who have heretofore wanted to build a Chinese wall around this country to keep out the foreigner and make him pay the tax, and keep out foreign pauper labor, or goods made by foreign pauper labor, seem to have waked up to the realization of the fact that the country has outgrown Chinese walls at home and wants to go over and tear down the Chinese wall on the farther side of the seas, and to open broader markets for our surplus products, and are even willing to open up the country to pauper-made goods, and even to the paupers themselves.

They talk about opposition to free trade, and yet prate about reciprocity, which we all understand is nothing less than international free trade. Why not stand, as you will finally have to stand, on the true doctrine—tariff for revenue only? You are traveling rapidly in that direction and to that doctrine, and it will be no surprise that you should go beyond it. But are you preparing to exchange protectionism for imperialism? "It is better to bear the ills we have than to flee to those we know not of."

What is the trade of these islands worth to us? It has already been shown on this floor by the able speech made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the 6th of last month, that the trade of these islands, as it now exists, if we could get it all, would not exceed $30,000,000 per year and that their productions, or at least many of them, are the same as our own. And, as shown by the speech referred to, the products of these islands are made by labor costing a mere trifle (a few cents per day to the laborer) and that these products would necessarily come into competition with our products, produced by our well-paid labor.

Will our laboring people submit to this or be willing to see this take place?

It would seem that every thoughtful American who loves liberty, his country, her opportunities and free institutions, and our glorious history and all that we hold sacred and dear does not wish to see the Philippine Islands incorporated into the Government of this country and its inhabitants become citizens of this Republic.

Some of the reasons that present themselves to my mind why I do not want to see this occur are:

First. These islands and their people are too far removed from our shores. Climatic and other conditions forbid our people from migrating and settling there. The situation of these people, their condition, and temperament would require too much governing, and of a kind and character not suited to republican institutions.

Certain it is that abuses in government and corruption in high as well as low places would follow, and we should be poorly able to correct these abuses, for we know by observation, if not by sad experiences, that it is difficult, if not next to impossible, to correct such abuses here at home. Are we willing to have corruption and robbery and disgraceful carpetbag rule, such as we had in the South in the days of reconstruction?

Second. The character, education, habits, manners, customs, and religions of these people forbid assimilation, and for us to attempt by force of government or otherwise to foist and fasten upon these islanders our civilization is death to them.

It is important that we do not lay too much stress upon the representations of those of our people who have lately come in contact with the Malay race, and are too ready upon mere superficial examination to declare how they are to be dealt with. If we are to take and govern the people of these islands, our duty is plain, and that is to govern them to the advancement of civilization, if we can—not necessarily our own complex system, totally different from theirs—and to the mutual advantage of both races.

The American is democratic and progressive; the Malay is aristocratic and conservative—characteristics inherited by them from scores of generations gone before—and as these are the results of slow accumulation from associations for hundreds of years, so they can not at once be eradicated, but they must be treated as chronic diseases of long standing are by the medical practitioner.

The foremost principle which should always be kept in view is that the civilization of any race is not a system that can be changed at will. Every civilization of any race is the growing product of a very complex set of conditions, depending on race and character, on climate, on the trade and minutiæ of circumstances. To attempt to alter such a system apart from its conditions is impossible. For instance, when a total change in government is made, it breaks down altogether.

When the English constitution was swept away, Cromwell or anarchy was the alternative. When the French constitution was overthrown, Napoleon was the only salvation from anarchy. And if this be the case when the externals of government alone are altered, how much more is it the case if we attempt to uproot the whole of a civilized and social life. We may despotically force a bald and senseless imitation of our way on another people, but we shall only destroy their life without planting any vitality in its place.

No changes are legitimate or beneficial to the character of a people except those which follow from conviction and the natural growth of mind.

The incorporation of these Philippine people into our body politic is a danger that threatens the very existence of the Republic. Imperial expansion—that is, the incorporation into our system of people that are incapable of receiving our civilization and becoming homogeneous with us, and therefore, being not of us, must of necessity be ruled as subjects, and can not become citizens.

And if this imposition of a foreign system is injurious, how destructive the imposition of such a system as ours, which is the most complex, unnatural, and artificial that has been known, a system developed in a relatively cold country, amid one of the hardest, least sympathetic, and most self-denying and calculating of all people in the world. Such a system, the product of such extreme conditions, we attempt to force on the least developed races, and expect from them an implicit subservience to our illogical law and our (to them) seeming inconsistent morality. The result is death. We make a deadhouse and call it civilization. Scarcely a single race can bear the contact and the burden.

Every attempt upon a low but perfect civilization will result in eradication in our efforts to improve. While the body of man remains practically the same for ages, the brain develops and changes, only by slow processes, as the race reaches a higher level.

We should divest ourselves of the idea that the history of the world began when we were born. A familiarity with the Old Testament and the classics, with oriental polyamy and Greek polytheism, should teach us not to ignore the painful and laborious efforts in social and political problems among nations other than our own, and to avoid the well-known failures of the past, and to let all the lights play fully around the subject, when that subject is the elevation and betterment of the Moslem, the Hindoo, and the Malay, and instead of throwing the arms of protection of our Government around the Sultan of Sulu, and winking at his polygamy, shall we not, by frowning upon his conduct, and by well-considered example, teach him, if we can, that his best policy and that of his people is to conform to our customs. No one solution of the problem of society, social life, and culture will fit every race.

And most surely our civilization is illy adapted to be all at once imposed upon the Filipino people when civilization so different from the Anglo-Saxon has been the growth of centuries. We must not, indeed can not afford to, force our civilization upon them, for, as I have already argued, it is death in the end to them and no profit to us, but eventual loss. If we can not elevate and Christianize them we are in danger of being carried down in the scale of civilization.

My third reason for stating that we do not want the Philippines is that to govern them will most likely require the constant presence of the military arm. Yes; a standing army of thousands of soldiers, and the expenditure of untold millions of money, which must be wrung from our already heavily burdened taxpayers, and, in addition, at the cost of the sacrifice of thousands of the best and bravest of our soldiers. It is stated on competent authority that we now have about 65,000 soldiers in these islands, at the cost of not less than $1,000 per annum for each man. How many lives have been lost in battle and by disease has not yet been, so far as I know, disclosed.

How many Filipinos have been killed we do not know, nor have we any account of how many Filipino prisoners have been taken, if any. Certain it is that our army is not burdened with prisoners.

Our attempt to retain the Philippines and to erect in the Eastern Hemisphere a republic is, first, an implied, if not an expressed, abandonment of the "Monroe doctrine;" and, secondly, is sure to excite the jealousy of and alarm the crowned heads of European and Asiatic countries and lead to friction, complications, entanglements, and collisions which must of necessity result in wars, frequent, bloody, relentless, and costly, and, flowing from this naturally, insubordination and insurrection in the islands.

To retain these islands as part of the domain of this Government is to bring their products, produced by the cheapest and most degraded labor, into competition with the products of this country, made and produced by the most intelligent and best paid labor on the earth, and thus bring down the price of our own products, and considerably reduce the price of our own labor, and with this will come discontent among our laboring people, resulting in strikes, if not wholesale strife. These islands will become the breeding ground of trusts and combines, entered into, organized, and intrenched in power for the purpose of controlling the trade of the Chinese seas and the Orient; and into the valleys and plains of Luzon will doubtless be transferred and transplanted many of our large manufacturing plants, with the very purpose and object of securing the cheap and degraded labor of these islands; the articles then manufactured will also go into the trusts and combines manufactured in this country, and come into competition with articles made by our well-paid labor.

We have not as yet discovered a legal method whereby can be controlled the monster trusts and combines in this country; then how shall we in the far-away land of the Philippines?

Already these gigantic anacondas, leeches, and bloodsuckers have so interwoven themselves in, through, and around avenues of trade as to practically crush out small traders—indeed, all formidable opposition or competition—and have almost completely destroyed or paralyzed individualism and individual effort, leaving to the poor but competent young business man, depending alone upon his own abor for a living, little, if anything, to encourage him. His hopes are blasted, his aspirations crushed and wrecked.

No doubt the acquisition, and more especially the permanent holding, of these islands will be made the excuse for the advocates of imperialism in this country to unite with those of England and other European powers for the further aggrandizement of empire by seizing the first opportunity for the dismemberment of China.

Mr. Chairman, shall the Republic live or shall it perish by our folly?

Our splendid Republic is as yet in the experimental state, with scarcely more than a century's existence.

The hardiest of vegetable and mineral growths are those of slowest development.

The history and the experience of nations show that those of longest duration in reaching their climax were slowest in dying.

It took Rome several hundred years to reach the zenith of her glory and then several hundred more to die—nearly fifteen hundred years from birth to death. Her downfall was the result of her insatiable greed for military glory, spoliation, and territorial aggrandizement. Shall we travel the same road and meet the same fate?

In my humble opinion the only sensible and reasonable solution of the Philippine problem is to restore to that unfortunate, unhappy people peace and order, and then let them establish their own government, stable and firm, of course, and let them become the architects of their own destiny, without involving ours, for it must be remembered that no civilized people ever struggled, fought and bled for liberty, and achieved it and founded free government but have ever had a fierce struggle to preserve and maintain it.

Every free people who have lost their liberty and wrecked their free institutions have usually done so by a forgetfulness of the cost thereof in blood and treasure, and in the attempt for territorial aggrandizememnt, urged on by success and the glittering prospects of empire, greed, and spoliation.

Mr. Chairman, liberty and the blessings of free government can only be preserved by frequent recurrence to fundamental principles.

Magna Charta was reaffirmed no less that two and thirty times by our English ancestors. The Declaration of Independence needs reaffirmation, and instead of reaching out for empire, shouting ourselves hoarse over the flag, it would be a good thing for us to have a real, genuine revival—a liberty revival—in which we might pause long enough to think over the blood and treasure and the sacrifices it cost our ancestors to establish free government, and, on the other hand, to consider what a crime we should commit against the Republic, our children, and our children's children if we suffer ourselves to pursue a policy which will be subversive of our liberties.

When the united Democracy shall assemble at Kansas City on the 4th day of July next to nominate the next President of the United States, we are going to have a regular old genuine liberty revival, and we shall again reaffim the declaration made by us in 1896 and the principles contained in the immortal Declaration of Independence.

Then we shall declare that this is a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," and that we intend to preserve it in its constitutional integrity, free from all foreign entanglements, as handed down to us from our fathers, and transmit it as a sacred heritage to our children's children.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph makes an appropriation for the contingent expenses of the Commanding General of the Army. It was this distinguished soldier who took Puerto Rico. He did not go in exactly at the front door and meet the distinguished gentlemen in shirts and other uniforms who were on the wharves to receive him, but at the back door. He had trouble in getting the other people who met him out of the way. He did not understand where they wanted him to land. The correspondents who had horses were in the several villages and cities before he could arrive. And yet when he rounded up the population, it is said by our Democratic friends that he proposed to commit the Government of the United States to a policy for the United States.

No man has contended on that side, or will contend, that in attempting to do so he was guilty of anything less than presumption. It was nothing less. No man will contend that he had any right, or authority, or law, or any order that would justify him in committing the United States Government to any demand that he made other than to demand and to accept the surrender of the Spanish army and to restore order on that island.

I can not understand how gentlemen who are disposed to be fair in business matters continually quote what this great soldier, it is said, attempted to do, or did do, in committing the Government. I do not know that he did. If he did not, I apologize to him.

Now, with reference to Puerto Rico. I have a letter here that I would like to have the Clerk read. I have only just received it. It is dated March 17. I ask the Clerk to read that part not crossed out; the other is personal.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO, March 17, 1900.

MY DEAR MAJOR:

* * * * * * *

We are watching with interest here the hurricane that the proposed 15 per cent tariff has raised and are wondering what it is all about. A 15 per cent tariff is not obnoxious to the people here; at any rate not to the planters and to the great body of the people, the only clamorers for out-and-out free trade being the men who have bought up most of the sugar and a good part of the tobacco.

I am creditably informed that the American Tobacco Company has absorbed the greater part of the tobacco interests of the island, and absolute free trade would mean that they stand to make a pocketful of money. This talk of the placing of the tariff at the behest of the trusts which control tobacco and sugar strikes us here as the most arrant rot, since these very interests are the ones that would profit most from absolute free trade. The people here take it that the United States is not going to appropriate money from the National Treasury for the purpose of running this island. Hence the money, about two and a half millions a year, must be raised either by a tariff or by direct taxation.

Under the present system there is not a cent of taxes collected on land or improved real estate. The insular revenues have come from the tariff and the municipal fund has come from taxes on the necessaries of life. Even under this system the planters have had to appeal for a suspension of process to save their lands from foreclosure, and the levy and collection at this time of a direct tax would practically mean the sale of the island under the hammer. Perhaps the holders of the mortgages have a voice in the clamor for the purpose of forcing the plantations into the hands of the sheriff.

The experience here has been that the removal of the tariff has not cheapened anything to the consumer. Acting under the demand for cheaper necessaries, the War Department removed the tariff from rice, bacon, beef, beans, and a number of other articles, but despite this removal of the tariff, not one of these articles sells any part of a cent cheaper in the stores to-day than they did with the tariff imposed, and whatever benefit has been derived from the abolition of those tariff dues has been divided between the wholesaler and the retailer.

* * * * * * * *

I am glad to know, through a recent published interview of yours, that you have a pretty thorough understanding of conditions here, and hope you will fight it out on the tariff line. I am utterly at a loss to understand the attitude that some of the Republican papers have taken on this question, but am confident that the people will come to understand it.

Mr. STEELE. The Clerk need not read the signature.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that that letter was from Indiana?

Mr. STEELE. The heading at the beginning of the letter shows that it is from San Juan, Puerto Rico, from a gentleman of absolute integrity, who is a brother to a member of this House.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. What is his name?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is he from Indiana?

Mr. STEELE. He is from Indiana, where all good men come from. [Laughter.]

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is ashamed to put his name in the RECORD.

Mr. STEELE. I am ashamed to have the gentleman make that statement.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the gentleman's name, if it is in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman says he wants to strike out the gentleman's name. Since it was not in, it does not matter.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PARKER of New Jersey having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. BENNETT, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last two words; the pending amendment is to strike out the last word.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything on this bill or on this amendment. I am not particularly anxious to strike out the last word; but since the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] has had read a letter before the committee as an argument in favor of a protective tariff to the people of Puerto Rico, in answer to that anonymous letter as far as the RECORD is concerned, I wish to say——

Mr. STEELE. I would like to show the gentleman the signature.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. What is the objection to putting it into the RECORD?

Mr. STEELE. I do not object; his name is Walter K. Landis.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Well, let "Walter K. Landis" go in the RECORD, then. [Laughter.] I would like to ask the gentleman what position he holds?

Mr. STEELE. He holds the position of a gentleman, and attends to his own business. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. What else?

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I understand he is a postmaster. Not only that, but he shows a great deal of sympathy for his friends in Indiana, who need sympathy at this particular time. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman yield until I have something read from a newspaper in Indiana?

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Yes, I will yield to anything from Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. This is from a newspaper in my own county.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. It is not from the Indiana Senator's speech delivered on free trade for Puerto Rico?

Mr. STEELE. No; it is not.

The Clerk read as follows:

The people of late have had a practical demonstration to the effect that metropolitan papers do not always reflect general public sentiment. The Puerto Rican tariff bill is an instance. Several well-known and influential newspapers jumped at the conclusion that the people were "dead against" the bill.

Just what inspired this conclusion is a mystery. They are now beginning to find out differently. The people approve of the course of President McKinley and his advisers. We have seemed to detect an overweening desire on the part of some newspapers to magnify the importance of this measure. These newspapers should put away their bogy men and cultivate a closer acquaintance with public sentiment.

It is a mistake to assume that the people are vociferously indignant and clamorously dissatisfied with the Puerto Rican tariff bill, and the attempt of several metropolitan papers to make it so appear is misleading, to say the least. While the people do not generally approve of a tariff rate between this country and Puerto Rico, they recognize that the measure is only intended as a temporary expedient in the interest of the poor people of the island, who receive direct and immediate relief.

These metropolitan papers reflect more their own opinions than the true sentiment of the Republican masses. In fact, some of these metropolitan newspapers that appear to be so deeply concerned for the dear people are about as far from a correct knowledge of the sentiments and desires of the common people as New York's codfish aristocratic four hundred.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. One moment; I did not understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] to give us the name of the paper.

Mr. STEELE. It is from the Fairmount News, published in Grant County, Ind.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. A county paper?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I notice that the article says that the people are in favor of the course of the President and his advisers. The inquiry I wish to propound to the Chair is, which course is that? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi propose that as a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. STEELE. It is the humane course.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I yielded to an interruption by my friend from Indiana, but I hope his newspaper article will be put in as a part of his remarks and not mine. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I think that is fair. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. This only shows, Mr. Chairman, the desperation to which these gentlemen are being driven. I understand this man Landis, a brother of Congressman LANDIS, of Indiana—and if I am not correct I am willing to be corrected—holds a position down there, under the Administation, probably a postmaster or something similar to that, and of course he is anxious to relieve his friends in Indiana and the representatives from that State, who are in such great distress at this particular time.

Now, as against the county paper which the gentleman has found in his State in favor of one or the other policies of the President, I cite him to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the Indianapolis Journal, and a great many other Western papers that have an immense circulation and which take a great deal of pains to ascertain the sentiment of the people. I think myself that that county paper will have a very difficult task even to convince the gentleman himself that he is not standing upon sinking sod in Indiana if he undertakes to vote for a tariff on Puerto Rico again.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I noticed in the papers a few days ago where the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CRUMPACKER, received a great reception in one of the cities in Indiana from the people of all classes because he had the courage of his convictions to vote against the tariff on the people of Puerto Rico. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I notice some very different receptions that gentlemen have received in Indiana who voted for a tariff on the people of Puerto Rico. But, coming to the point I intended to make, and that is this: Against this letter of a Republican postmaster endeavoring to help out the distressed Representative from Indiana I set the unanimous voice of every delegate who has come before the Committee on Insular Affairs from the island of Puerto Rico, representing all classes of industries—agricultural, mercantile, manufacturing, and everything else—who declare with one voice that they are in favor of free trade and want that and nothing else. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the informal amendments will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Contingencies of the Army: For all contingent expenses of the Army not provided for by other estimates, and embracing all branches of the military service, to be expended under the immediate orders of the Secretary of War, $200,000.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If anyone has any idea that I am in any distress on account of my vote on the Puerto Rican tariff bill, I would have him possess his soul in peace. I voted for the bill; I helped to frame it, and I never have tried to dodge a single bit of responsibility. On the contrary, I believed when the bill was completed that it was a humane measure. I believe it yet, and I do not hear gentlemen on the other side of the House propose anything better.

We have been charged, on this side of the House, with working in the interest of the trusts; and yet no man has pointed out, nor can he point out, how in any way the trusts can be benefited by the legislation that we propose. On the other hand, it would be a very great advantage to the people over there who have sugar and tobacco if they were to have a reduction of three-quarters of the duty on what they have to export.

We give them a reduction of 85 per cent, and Mr. Finney, consul from Great Britain, and a very few other gentlemen who own or control these articles, who were sitting in the gallery during the time the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was making his speech, and who led in the applause when he said something favorable to free trade, would be much benefited, and could afford to pay many dollars into the Democratic campaign fund, if you shall succeed in securing free trade for them.

As I said before, I have no apologies to make; and when the gentleman says his committee has heard from all classes of people, I would like to ask him whether it has heard from the man who can not read, who has never worn a pair of shoes in his life, whose only uniform is a shirt? Ninety per cent of the population of that island are people of that class. How is free trade going to benefit that class of people? It is not going to put bread into their mouths.

Every dollar collected in the United States upon importations from Puerto Rico and every dollar collected in Puerto Rico upon importations from the United States and other countries is, by the bill, to be placed in the hands of the President to help those poor people, those without shoes, without shirts, without education—absolutely destitute people on account of the privations of four hundred years of Spanish domination and misrule, and on account of a hurricane which swept the island last August.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STEELE. I would like to know what it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the gentleman think that the 15 per cent taxation contemplated by the bill which passed this House would help to clothe those people?

Mr. STEELE. Well, it would give them each one shirt, would it not?

Mr. RIDGELY. I think not.

Mr. STEELE. Why, a gentleman on your side has said that $750,000 would be collected, and a shirt of the kind those people wear would cost about 15 cents. Whatever the amount may be, it goes to feed and clothe those poor people and give them a start to become American citizens, with all that the words imply.

Mr. RIDGELY. If the gentleman is willing to give up 85 per cent of the tax collections, why not give up the other 15 per cent?

Mr. STEELE. Did the gentleman vote for the $3,000,000 proposition? I did.

Mr. RIDGELY. I voted against it on the final passage.

Mr. STEELE. Oh, you did. A great many gentlemen on your side voted the other way. They were more humane than you.

Mr. RIDGELY. You levy a tax on the Puerto Ricans and then ask us to vote it back.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I had not expected to participate in this discussion; in fact, I do not like to discuss a question that is not before the committee or the House. But some things have been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that certainly deserve some attention. He has stated here to-day that one reason why the Republicans have changed their position against free trade and in favor of a tariff upon the people of Puerto Rico is on account of the interest which one Mr. Finley would have in case those goods were admitted free.

Mr. STEELE. The vice-consul.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. The gentleman had better understand what he speaks about when he does speak. I have never seen Mr. Finley to speak to him or hear him speak except when he was before the committee. His statement was that he has been in business in that island for over thirty-five years, acting a part of the time as British consul or vice-consul. Now, I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact: That the President of the United States had had his officers all over that island investigating its condition for weeks and months before Congress convened, and he knew just as well on the day Congress met the necessity for revenue in that island and the needs of those people as he did after Mr. Oxnard had come before our committee and opposed free trade for Puerto Rico.

Now, the gentleman talks about this money buying shirts and food for the people of Puerto Rico. He knows better than to contend for one moment that these duties, collected as a tariff, are to be used to buy clothing for the people of Puerto Rico. I am surprised that a gentleman of experience in this House, a Representative here, should undertake to make any such contention as that. In the first place, this money will go to conduct the government of that island, if the people have a government; and according to the report of your own governor-general it will exhaust about all the money you can collect under that bill—yes, all of it, and more—to conduct the government and pay its expenses. All this talk about buying clothing and books and building schoolhouses is the merest "rot;" and gentlemen ought to understand it.

It is said that no other policy has been proposed than that embodied in the Puerto Rican bill passed by this House. Sir, another policy has been proposed; and if gentlemen will read the debates they will ascertain what it is. The policy that the people of Puerto Rico want is a good local government which will give them the power to raise their revenue by taxing property, instead of poverty, in the island of Puerto Rico. [Applause.] That is what they want, and if you will give them that they will be able to take care of themselves. If you undertake to feed them out of the contribution box you may expect to continue it as long as they are a part of the United States, in the language of a Democrat.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses at the headquarters of the several military departments, including the staff corps serving therein, except the department judge-advocates, being for the purchase of the necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, binding, maps, books of reference, professional newspapers and periodicals, and police utensils, $6,000, to be allotted by the Secretary of War, and to be expended in the discretion of the several military department commanders.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I was somewhat amazed to hear a distinguished Republican member of this House, and an ex-soldier, no doubt a gallant one, attack the Commanding General of the United States Army for having dared to offer terms to the people of Puerto Rico, who welcomed him in a friendly way when he arrived upon that island. Although I was merely a boy of 11 years of age, I remember that when Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox, and Grant made the magnanimous terms which he did, a thrill of generous pride went through the hearts of all Southern people, depressed though they were at that time.

Grant, I presume, had no authority to make any sort of terms as to the ultimate disposition of Lee and his army; but what sort of a government would it have been which would have repudiated the pledges of the victorious general under such conditions as that? And what sort of a government is it, Mr. Chairman, which would repudiate the generous promise of its commanding officer when he had gone to an island and tendered the protection of his government to those people and they had accepted it in a free and friendly spirit?

Mr. Chairman, I read in a paper to-day a quotation from a speech delivered by the President of the United States last fall in which he stated that in his judgment Puerto Rico was as much a part of the United States as the District of Columbia or Arizona or New Mexico. From that time to this I have seen nothing coming from him which indicated any change of heart or judgment upon his part. And if the gentleman has any evidence that the President now does not believe that Puerto Rico ought by right to enjoy all of the privileges of the District of Columbia or Arizona or New Mexico, I should like to have it produced.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What speech of the President does the gentleman allude to?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It was delivered, I think, in Peoria. I speak merely from memory, but I think that was the place.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was somewhere out on that electioneering trip.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It was on that electioneering tour; yes, and I will look it up this evening and print it in the RECORD, so that the gentleman from Iowa may see what the President's views were last fall.

On his campaigning tour of the West and Northwest, at Wankegan, Ill., on October 17, 1899, Mr. McKinley, speaking of the Philippine Archipelago, called it "a territory as much our own as Alaska or the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States." That means Puerto Rico also.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substantial amendment. I move to strike out "six" and insert "three." Three thousand dollars is the amount usually carried by this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three;" so that it will read: "three thousand dollars."

Mr. McRAE. That is the amount usually carried by this item, and unless there is some special reason for doubling it I do not see why we should do so.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that for the current fiscal year the estimates submitted were $6,000. The first appropriation last year was $3,000. Afterwards we passed a supplemental appropriation, giving them $3,000 more. The War Department reports that the increased amount is necessary on account of the largely extended field of operation. We have a great many more departments than we had before the war began. At that time the departments were all in the United States proper, and so were the department headquarters. We have now headquarters in Cuba, in Puerto Rico, in the Philippines, as well as those that we formerly had in the United States.

Mr. McRAE. You have mentioned no place yet which is outside of the United States.

Mr. HULL. Well, under the five-minute rule the gentleman can not get up any argument with me as to that. I am telling the gentleman where the departments are. They have been largely increased over what they were, and if we give this $6,000 now, I will say to my friend from Arkansas we are simply giving what we ultimately gave, as I remember, during the last fiscal year.

Mr. McRAE. During the last fiscal year, of course, you perhaps had a great deal more necessary expense than you will have in the next fiscal year. I hope that is true, at least. But let me ask if these departments have been increased 100 per cent.

Mr. HULL. In a note to the estimate for this item the War Department says:

The increased amount estimated for is made necessary on account of the establishment of new departments, namely, Cuba, Habana, Santiago and Puerto Principe, Matanzas, and Santa Clara, province of Habana and Pinar del Rio, the Pacific, Puerto Rico, and Texas.

In view of that statement, I do not think it would be just and fair to strike out the amount. It is a small amount anyway, and the Committee on Military Affairs was unanimously in favor of the item.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas withdraw his amendment?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know enough about it to insist upon my amendment, and so far as I am personally concerned the explanation of the chairman of the Military Committee is satisfactory. Therefore I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the informal amendment also will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, some time ago the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, filed a minority report in reference to a bill granting some of the public lands of Alabama to school purposes. One of the schools was a negro school and the other was a white school. In his minority report he states that he does not think the bill ought to pass, because Alabama has not properly cared for the education of the children of the State.

The gentleman from Iowa is my friend, and I am sure that he made the statement without any intention of doing an injustice to the people of Alabama; but I think the statement should not rest without a proper correction being made.

Alabama, like many of the Southern States, has labored under a great many misfortunes in the last thirty years. A comparison is made by the gentleman from Iowa between the amount of school tax in Iowa and the amount of school tax in Alabama.

There is no question that the State of Iowa has magnificiently taken care of the school children of that State; but I wish to call the attention of the gentleman and the attention of the country to the fact that in the State of Alabama 54 per cent of the people pay 95 per cent of the taxes, and that the result of the civil war placed upon the white people of the State of Alabama the education of a race of people who up to that time were uneducated and without property or means to educate themselves. The white people of the State have taken up this burden without complaint; and out of the public treasury, out of the taxes collected from themselves, have given equally, in proportion to population, to the colored children and to the white children of the State. I think it unjust to our people, when we have had these burdens to sustain, that we should be criticised because we have not been able to give as great educational advantages as some of our sister States have who have not had these burdens to carry.

I want to call attention to the fact that in the State of Alabama for the year 1898, the last one for which I could get the authentic figures, the total taxes raised and disbursed by the State were $2,242,894. The amount distributed for educational purposes was $1,018,086, which was an increase over the previous year of $191,000, the amount being 45 per cent of the total disbursements of the State. In other words, of the total moneys collected by taxation in the State 45 per cent has been paid for educational purposes and nearly half that amount has been paid out to the negro race in the State for their education, when they do not pay 5 per cent of the taxes.

Now, why has Alabama suffered? Why have we been unable to pay the same amount for our schools that the more fortunate States in the North have been able to pay? At the close of the civil war the public debt of the State of Alabama was $5,939,000. It remained that until the State was compelled to pass through the reconstruction period. When we came out of the reconstruction period and the white people of the State were once more placed at the helm of government, we came out with a bonded indebtedness placed on the backs of the people of that State of $38,381,000, and the bonded indebtedness of Iowa is only $245,000.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask my friend to let me put in the fact that these bonds have been paid, and we have over a million dollars in the treasury.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (to Mr. UNDERWOOD). That makes your argument a fortiori.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I congratulate the gentleman and congratulate the great State of Iowa; but I intended to show from these figures, that I take from the census of 1890, that the amount of indebtedness of Iowa was only 2 per cent of the debt of Alabama. Now, we are not at fault, the people who pay the taxes in Alabama are not in fault, for this indebtedness; the people who own the property, the people who control the State government, are not in fault for this indebtedness. We did not create it. It was placed as a burden on our backs without our consent and against our protest by the reconstruction government; but it was a debt created, and a debt we were bound to recognize and to pay. In Alabama out of 325,782 school children, 122,889 are negroes; in Iowa out of 538,576 school children, only 1,286 are negroes. That is a part of the burden that we are carrying and being taxed for it, and it is but proper that our people should try to make them good citizens and give them education.

It is not for their benefit, but for the benefit of our State, and I am not protesting against the fact that we are being compelled to take up these burdens and carry them, but where we do protest is that in our efforts to do so we are being criticised for not doing what the more fortunate States in the Union have done. Now, besides the fact that our indebtedness was increased 546 per cent in the State of Alabama during reconstruction days, the assessed value of real and personal property increased from $312 per capita in 1850 to $448 per capita in 1860. But in 1880, after the State had gone through the reconstruction period, we find that the per capita assessed value of real and personal property in Alabama had fallen to $97 per capita, and in 1890 it had only increased to $171 per capita, while in the State of Iowa in 1850 the per capita value of the property was $112, and in 1890 it had increased to $271.

In other words, under the reconstruction government in the State of Alabama, we were not only burdened with a tremendous bonded indebtedness, but it destroyed the value of the property in the State, and thereby decreased our ability to raise revenue for school purposes. The amount of debt was increased 546 per cent, and the assessed value of property was decreased 66 per cent.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman was quoted in a newspaper the other day as saying upon his return from Alabama that an account of the present prosperity of the State would read like a fairy tale. I would like to ask the gentleman if he substantially did say that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think in the history of the South there has been any greater prosperity at any time than now exists in the district I represent. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But that does not extend to the entire State. I represent a manufacturing district, and we all know that the manufacturing interests of this country are exceedingly prosperous to-day. A large portion of the State of Alabama is agricultural, and that portion of the State is not prosperous. The white taxpayers of the State did not create the present bonded indebtedness that we have to pay.

The granting of the unlimited right of suffrage to an ignorant class of people who were not qualified at that time to receive it or to properly exercise it was the instrument that brought about this condition. We have had to assume the burden as we found it; and I say, that being the condition, that the people of the United States, the people of this Government who were responsible for bringing about that condition in the Southern States, placing these people on our hands to educate and to take care of, should not criticise us for the amount of money expended for school purposes, but ought to be willing to do exactly what we have asked in the bill that my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] reports adversely on. They ought to be willing to give these public mineral lands for the education of these people.

The lands that the Government is asked to donate for school purposes under these bills are mineral lands, are not open to homestead settlement, and the masses of the people are deprived of their use under the general laws. It is not just to the State that they should be withdrawn from sale for any longer period and the development of the mineral resources of the State thereby retarded. The Government must dispose of them. If you put them up for public sale a few speculators, who know what is valuable land and what is not, will make all the profits, and but very little will go to the General Government. On the other hand, if you give them to the schools of the State the whole people will receive the benefit.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. How much of the $38,000,000 of indebtedness does the State of Alabama now recognize as a valid indebtedness?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It recognizes all that it has not paid, all excepting certain fraudulent bonds.

Mr. LACEY. I am speaking of those conceded to be genuine and that the State did not repudiate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Alabama has repudiated none of its indebtedness.

Mr. LACEY. I do not mean in the offensive sense.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Alabama has not repudiated any of its indebtedness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask one moment to answer the gentleman's question. The amount of indebtedness as it now exists, to give the accurate figures, is $12,413,196; but the gentleman must remember for the last thirty years we have been bearing this great burden. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear all the remarks of my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], but by the aid of the reporter I think I have gathered the full scope of them. I want in advance to disclaim any feeling against Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I acquitted the gentleman of that.

Mr. LACEY. I think my friend from Alabama ought to have sided with me and taken this report and have talked plain talk to the people of Alabama. My Congressional district, with 175,000 people, in 1897–98 paid as much school taxes as the whole State of Alabama. I only give this to illustrate the difficulties under which the school system of Alabama labors.

In 1875, smarting under reconstruction and goaded to desperation, perhaps, by the evils that they complained of, they adopted a constitution forbidding themselves practically to support the public schools. That was not the intention, that was not the purpose in view, but that was its effect. They provided in their constitution that they should levy for all school and State purposes not to exceed three-quarters of 1 per cent. What is the result? In the State of Alabama in the year 1897–98 the entire sum raised for public schools was only a shade over $800,000, only 46 cents per capita to the population, and each child that was sent to school only cost $3.50.

Let us take the State of South Dakota. She spent that same year $23.45 for every child in the public schools. She levied taxes on the people per capita of $3.15 for the support of the public schools, while the State of Alabama only levied 46 cents. It is not the fault, perhaps, of the people now; they are doing all they can under the constitution; but they have made it illegal to do for themselves that which they ought to do, namely, support their public schools.

But I want to say to the credit of the people of the city of Birmingham, in which the gentleman from Alabama lives, that they have disregarded the State constitution and have made an arrangement by which they levy, in spite of the constitution, money for the public schools. But it is a big city, and public opinion is strong, and they are enabled to override the narrow limits of the constitution. But the constitution is submitted to in the other towns, and the result is that while, with a negro population of nearly one-half, it is necessary to raise money to support two systems of schools, and they do not have but three-quarters of 1 per cent tax for the support of the State government and entire school system.

Now, that ought to be remedied. Four years ago the State of Alabama appealed to the Committee on the Public Lands for relief. We said, "Why don't you levy a school tax?" They said, "Our constitution won't let us." We inquired, "Why don't you amend the constitution?" They answered, "Oh, we can not." And there they sit holding their hands for twenty-five years with a provision that limits them to three-quarters of 1 per cent for a levy to support the schools of that State, a sum entirely inadequate for the purpose and well known to be insufficient.

There are public-spirited people there, but when an evil grows hoary-headed with age it becomes sacred, and the constitution being twenty-five years old, they have gotten used to this system and they do not realize the mistake that they made in thus binding themselves hand and foot. They hardly realize how badly they are off. They know the rate of illiteracy is high, but they fail to recognize the cause of it. It will remain so until they provide for local taxation for their schools, and to do this the State constitution should be amended. Congress can not help them. They must help themselves.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the rate of taxation for school purposes in the gentleman's district?

Mr. LACEY. My tax was about $3.60, more than 3½ per cent school tax alone in the city of my home, while the entire tax for schools and State expenses was only three-quarters of 1 per cent in the State of Alabama. Of course the expenses of the State must be paid and the schools must take the second place.

Mr. BERRY. Does the gentleman say that his tax was $3.50 on a hundred dollars?

Mr. LACEY. It is.

Mr. BERRY. The gentleman means 35 cents on a hundred dollars.

Mr. LACEY. No; the assessment is not on a full valuation; the tax was for the various school purposes, but was as I have stated. In the country districts the levy is lower, but the rate that I speak of is by no means unusual. When I explained to these gentlemen that a single district in Iowa paid more school taxes than the whole State of Alabama, they looked at me with amazement.

The same policy prevails in all the different States of the Northwest. And, sir, I have made this minority report in the kindest spirit, with the idea of calling the attention of the people of Alabama to the fact that they ought to take measures to procure a constitutional convention to amend their constitution, so that the different localities there can take care of their own affairs instead of asking Congress for relief. I am glad that my esteemed friend from Alabama has called attention to the matter. A little agitation may do some good.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I wish to state that on two occasions during the last five years we have attempted that. Last year various gentlemen, along with myself—and I think every single member of Congress on this floor from our State—stood out in favor of a constitutional amendment.

Mr. LACEY. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We went to the legislature to procure the calling of a convention, so that we could remedy this trouble. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And we were finally overcome in our efforts by the very people that we were seeking to benefit. We were defeated by Republicans in that legislature, elected by the negro vote of the State—representatives of negro constituencies that we were attempting to benefit. With some Democratic votes, they finally defeated our effort to have a convention. I agree with the gentleman from Iowa. He is right; and we will still attempt to accomplish what he says we ought to do.

Mr. LACEY. I can scarcely express my surprise at the intimation of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is blaming this trouble on the Republican party of Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. LACEY. That party has not been the controlling party in Alabama in recent years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not blaming the national Republican party, but I am blaming the local organization. The men who control the government there now want to give educational facilities and are asking to be allowed to do so; but the men who are to be benefited are refusing to let the thing be accomplished.

Mr. LACEY. My friend from Alabama and myself desire to accomplish the same thing in his State. Does he not think that the State of Alabama ought to adopt an amendment to its constitution so as to enable the localities to tax themselves to conduct their public schools?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We have been asking to do that, many of us.

Mr. LACEY. That is the point to which I wish to call attention—that for twenty-five years leading men of Alabama have been appealing to Congress for relief in this manner, instead of applying the medicine to the spot where the disease is located—in their State constitution, which in effect prohibits them from taking care of their own schools. Mississippi spends nearly twice as much in proportion to her population for public schools as does the State of Alabama. I say this to the credit of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] who I see is now rising to interrupt me.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the statement he made a moment ago; and I wish to ask him whether I understood him correctly. I understood him to say that Iowa levies for school purposes a tax of 3½ per cent. Did he not mean three and a half mills per hundred? He said three and a half dollars on the hundred.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly; that is what I meant to say; and the fact that the gentleman expresses surprise at the statement shows that he does not appreciate what we are doing in our State for education. These sums are not levied by the State. They are voted in the school districts by the people themselves.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman mean to say that if a man in Iowa has a 5 per cent investment three and a half of that 5 per cent goes to the school fund?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly. Are you surprised at that? My own home school taxes for years were about 3.6 per cent. What do you think of that?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Was property assessed at its real value?

Mr. LACEY. Our assessment usually has been about 40 per cent of the real value. Under a recent law it has been reduced to 25 per cent of cash value.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh!

Mr. LACEY. And in Alabama property is not assessed at more than 40 or 50 per cent of its real value.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In our State each man's property is assessed at what he swears he would take for it if he sold it—not what it would bring upon a foreclosure.

Mr. LACEY. In Illinois, Alabama, and other States the assessment is considerably less than the cash value of the property. In most of the States whilst ostensibly the valuation is assumed to be at full cash value, in actual practice it is assessed at much less and much personal property escapes altogether.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In your State do you tax personal property?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; everything.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And is not personal property assessed at its true value?

Mr. LACEY. That was formerly the case theoretically; but as a matter of fact the valuation has been only about 40 per cent until the present law has made it uniform at 25 per cent.

I do not claim any special virtue for Iowa; I am simply showing that when a locality is permitted to levy a tax on itself to support its schools it does not regard it as a tax any more than it regards a board bill or a wash bill as a tax. It is regarded as one of the ordinary and necessary expenses of the families that we should have public schools. We vote it upon ourselves in our municipalities; and in different localities there are different rates. I have given the rate in my own town. The aggregate taxation there for all school purposes is commonly over 3.6 per cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the aggregate amount of taxation?

Mr. LACEY. In my own city, a little over 6 per cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Sixty dollars on a thousand?

Mr. LACEY. A little over that. We do not expect to have educational advantages for nothing. The trouble with some of our friends is that they want to have all these things and not pay for them themselves, but instead, make their appeals to Congress. If a State desires to take any rank in these matters, it must bear the expense, and it is well worth the cost. If you will let the people of Alabama school districts tax themselves for their schools, they will soon make a different record.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean to say that the people of Alabama come here to Congress asking us to give away land and money to support their schools?

Mr. LACEY. No; they asked us to give lands.

Mr. PAYNE. To give lands in order to sell them to support their school system.

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, no; this was for certain special colleges.

Mr. LACEY. Not generally. This was for certain institutions which were specified. There is another bill pending to give the remainder of the land for the common schools.

Mr. PAYNE. Do they not put themselves in the same position that they think we are trying to put the people of Puerto Rico in, when we give money out of the Treasury to build schools down there?

Mr. LACEY. Let us not get onto the Puerto Rico question, because this is a serious matter.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to know the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. BERRY. I want to ask the gentleman, what is the tax duplicate of the whole State of Iowa? How much is the whole property that is returned to the State for taxation?

Mr. LACEY. I have not attempted to give that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I should like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERRY. I want to know what the tax duplicate of the State of Iowa is?

Mr. LACEY. I can not give it from memory.

Mr. BERRY. Can you approximate it? It is about $1,200,000,000, is it not?

Mr. LACEY. During the same year when Alabama spent $800,000 for school purposes, Iowa spent $8,451,000.

Mr. BERRY. Therefore the gentleman is mistaken in his statement as to the rate of taxation. The total must be ten or twelve hundred million dollars, and $36 on the thousand would give about $36,000,000 for the total; so the gentleman has made a mistake.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no. I pay my taxes every year, and I know what the receipts are, and it is nothing unusual. The fact that I pay 36 mills for school purposes is not a remarkable thing in Iowa, although it seems so to some of the gentlemen here.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You said 36 cents.

Mr. LACEY. No; three and six-tenths cents—three and six-tenths of a cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, well, that is different. That was the question I asked you. I wanted to know the figures.

Mr. LACEY. I told the gentleman that the entire tax of my city was over 6 per cent, of which over 3½ was for school purposes, and this has been the rate for many years. If our tax levy should be cut down so that our State and school tax in Iowa cities and towns would not exceed three-fourths of 1 per cent we would think that the public-school system had disappeared, and, in fact, the schools would close. If, as in Alabama, our school taxes only amounted to 46 cents per capita it would only pay about one-tenth of the expense of our school system.

Mr. BERRY. I was speaking about the total tax rate.

Mr. LACEY. It is over 6 per cent in my town.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Six mills?

Mr. LACEY. No; 6 cents on the dollar.

Mr. BERRY. Sixty cents on the hundred?

Mr. LACEY. No; $6 on the hundred. Six mills would not go very far toward sustaining a good common-school system.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman said the school tax was $3.60 on the hundred. I think he is mistaken about that.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no; not at all. My taxes last year in the city in which I live were a little over 60 mills, a little over 6 per cent on the valuation. Of that 6 per cent and some odd mills, 36 mills, or 3.6 per cent, were voted by the people of my town, or my school district, for school purposes—to support the public schools.

That is not remarkable in Iowa. That is not at all astonishing there. We regard it as a matter of course. All of the Iowa members here pay about the same amount of taxes in their towns in Iowa. Now, here comes my friend from Alabama, with his town bound hand and foot, so that it can not levy more than three-fourths of 1 per cent for school purposes and State purposes both. He thinks that it is a very remarkable thing that anybody should vote to tax themselves 3.6 per cent for school purposes. We pay over 6 per cent, including the other taxes, as I have several times explained to these gentlemen.

Mr. BERRY. You mean $6 on the hundred?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly, $6 on the hundred—6 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And $3.00 on the hundred for schools?

Mr. LACEY. Yes. Now, we do not complain of that. I did not expect to make any point on that. We simply vote this on ourselves; but here are towns of the same size as the one in which I live, towns in Alabama that under the constitution of Alabama have no power to vote one cent upon themselves for school purposes, and what is the result? The consequence is that they only levy an average in the whole State of 46 cents per capita, while the State of Mississippi levies 81 cents per capita—nearly twice as much per capita. And though in the State of Mississippi they spend $5.21 for every child in school, in Alabama they spend $3.59, and in the State of Iowa we spend $22.79 for every child in school.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, in the statement that I made I gave some later figures than those which the gentleman quoted. Last year the amount collected was 81 cents per capita, instead of 46 cents.

Mr. LACEY. My friend has some later reports than those which I was able to obtain. I have taken the last report from the Commissioner of Education, and I am glad to know that the amount is increased; but the fact remains that it can never be made anywhere near adequate so long as local taxes for school purposes can not be lawfully levied in that State.

I will print in my remarks the minority report which has caused this discussion. I commend the facts contained in it to the careful attention of the people of Alabama.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned can not agree with the views of the majority report on this bill.

Alabama is in very great need of educational facilities. The percentage of illiteracy is large, and no one can doubt the necessity for adequate provisions being made for the educational purposes in this State. The State has been applying to Congress for many years for national aid for its various educational institutions. The attention of the gentlemen seeking this aid has repeatedly been called to what appears to be the main difficulty in educational matters in Alabama.

Alabama is a fertile State with a delightful and healthful climate, abundance of timber, coal, and iron, with adequate rainfall and a prolific soil. The population of the State at the present time is probably near 1,800,000 souls. The State has been making great industrial progress, and the city of Birmingham has become the rival of Pittsburg herself. There is one great drawback to the State of Alabama which casts a cloud over her future, but which is an essential one for her people to remove. She has no adequate system of public schools, nor any method of providing sufficient revenue to support them. Nothing can supply this want but the action of her own people.

Under her constitution it is provided, "Separate schools for each race shall always be maintained by the school authorities." This policy of maintaining separate schools for the white and the black children is the policy of many of the former slave States, if not all of them. On this subject the people of those States are the best judges. They know best what is for the interest of both races, and no one outside the State has a right to criticise the plan adopted. This statement is not made in criticism, but only in order to call attention to the fact.

The population is nearly equally divided between the white and the black races, and as two complete systems of schools must be maintained it is evident that it costs the State necessarily much more, if not doubly as much, to conduct its schools as it does in States where no such distinction is made. In view of the fact that this method has been adopted in this State, it is evident that the allowance for schools should be greater than in those States where but one system is provided for both white and black together. But, on the contrary, not a sufficient allowance is made for the schools of one color alone.

The State does not seem to have sufficiently recognized the difficulties surrounding the subject of education, for in 1875 it adopted a constitution which has been in force for a quarter of a century and under which the State has bound herself hand and foot in the matter of providing funds with which to carry on a system of public schools. The following pages contain all the provisions of the constitution of the State of Alabama relating to this subject:

"ARTICLE II.—Taxation.

"SEC. 1. All taxes levied on the property in this State shall be assessed in exact proportion to the value of such property: Provided, however, The general assembly may levy a poll tax, not to exceed $1.50 on each poll, which shall be applied exclusively in aid of the school fund in the county paying the same.

"SEC. 2. No power to levy taxes shall be delegated to individuals or private corporations.

"SEC. 3. After the ratification of this constitution no new debt shall be created against or incurred by this State or its authority, except to repel invasion or suppress insurrection, and then only by the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of each house of the general assembly, and the vote shall be taken by the yeas and nays and entered on the journals; and any act creating or incurring any new debt against this State, except as herein provided for, shall be absolutely void: Provided, The governor may be authorized to negotiate temporary loans, never to exceed $100,000, to meet deficiencies in the treasury; and until the same is paid no new loan shall be negotiated: Provided further, That this section shall not be construed so as to prevent the issuance of bonds in adjustment of the existing State indebtedness.

"SEC. 4. The general assembly shall not have the power to levy in any one year a greater rate of taxation than three-fourths of 1 per cent on the value of the taxable property within the State.

"SEC. 5. No county in this State shall be authorized to levy a larger rate of taxation, in any one year, on the value of the taxable property therein, than one-half of 1 per cent: Provided, That to pay debts existing at the ratification of this constitution an additional rate of one-fourth of 1 per cent may be levied and collected, which shall be exclusively appropriated to the payment of such debts, or the interest thereon: Provided further, That to pay any debt or liability now existing against any county, incurred for the erection of the necessary public buildings or other ordinary county purposes, or that may hereafter be created for the erection of necessary public buildings or bridges, any county may levy and collect such special taxes as may have been or may be hereafter authorized by law, which taxes so levied and collected shall be applied exclusively to the purposes for which the same shall have been levied and collected.

"SEC. 6. The property of private corporations, associations, and individuals of this State shall forever be taxed at the same rate.

"SEC. 7. No city, town, or other municipal corporation, other than provided for in this article, shall levy or collect a larger rate of taxation, in any one year, on the property thereof, than one-half of 1 per cent of the value of such property, as assessed for State taxation during the preceding year: Provided, That for debts existing at the time of the ratification of this constitution, and the interest thereon, an additional rate of 1 per cent may be collected, to be applied exclusively to such indebtedness: And provided, This section shall not apply to the city of Mobile, which city may, until the 1st of January, 1879, levy a tax not to exceed the rate of 1 per cent and from and after that time a tax not to exceed the rate of three-fourths of 1 per cent, to pay the expenses of the city government, and may also, until the 1st day of January, 1879, levy a tax not to exceed the rate of three-fourths of 1 per cent, to pay the existing indebtedness of said city and the interest thereon.

"SEC. 8. At the first session of the general assembly after the ratification of this constitution the salaries of the following officers shall be reduced at least 25 per cent, viz, governor, secretary of state, State auditor, State treasurer, attorney-general, superintendent of education, judges of supreme and circuit courts, and chancellors: and after said reduction the general assembly shall not have power to increase the same except by a vote of the majority of all the members elected to each house, taken by yeas and nays, and entered on the journals: Provided, This section shall not apply to any of said officers now in office.

"SEC. 9. The general assembly shall not have power to require the counties or other municipal corporations to pay any charges which are now payable out of the State treasury."

"ARTICLE XIII.—Education.

"SEC. 1. The general assembly shall organize, establish, and maintain a system of public schools throughout the State, for the equal benefit of the children thereof between the ages of 7 and 21 years; but separate schools shall be provided for the children of citizens of African descent.

"SEC. 2. The principal of all funds arising from the sale of lands or other disposition of lands or other property which has been or may hereafter be granted or intrusted to this State or given by the United States for educational purposes shall be preserved inviolate and undiminished, and the income arising therefrom shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants or appropriations.

"SEC. 3. All lands or other property given by individuals or appropriated by the State for educational purposes, and all estates of deceased persons who die without leaving a will or heir, shall be faithfully applied to the maintenance of the public schools.

"SEC. 4. The general assembly shall also provide for the levying and collection of an annual poll tax, not to exceed $1.50 on each poll, which shall be applied to the support of the public schools in the counties in which it is levied and collected.

"SEC. 5. The income arising from the sixteenth section trust fund, until it is called for by the United States Government, and the funds enumerated in sections 3 and 4 of this article, with such other moneys, to be not less than $100,000 per annum, as the general assembly shall provide by taxation or otherwise, shall be applied to the support and maintenance of the public schools; and it shall be the duty of the general assembly to increase, from time to time, the public-school fund as the condition of the treasury and the resources of the State will admit.

"SEC. 6. Not more than 4 per cent of all the moneys raised or which may be hereafter appropriated for the support of the public schools shall be used or expended otherwise than for the payment of teachers employed in such schools: Provided, That the general assembly may, by a vote of two-thirds of each house, suspend the operation of this section.

"SEC. 7. The supervision of the public schools shall be vested in a superintendent of education, whose powers, duties, compensation, and term of office shall be fixed by law. The superintendent of education shall be elected by the qualified voters of the State in such a manner and at such times as shall be provided by law.

"SEC. 8. No money raised for the support of the public schools of the State shall be appropriated to or used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school.

"SEC. 9. The State University and the Agricultural and Mechanical College shall each be under the management and control of a board of trustees. The board for the university shall consist of two members from the Congressional district in which the university is located, and one from each of the other Congressional districts in the State. The board of the Agricultural and Mechanical College shall consist of two members from the Congressional district in which the college is located, and one from each of the other Congressional districts of the State. Said trustees shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and shall hold office for the term of six years and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified.

"After the first appointment, each board shall be divided into three classes as nearly equal as may be. The seats of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of two years, and those of the second class in four years, and those of the third class in six years, from the date of appointment, so that one-third may be chosen biennially. No trustee shall receive any pay or emolument other than his actual expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties as such. The governor shall be ex officio president, and the superintendent of education ex officio a member of each of the said boards of trustees.

"SEC. 10. The general assembly shall have no power to change the location of the State University or the Agricultural and Mechanical College as now established by law, except upon a vote of two-thirds of the members of the general assembly, taken by yeas and nays and entered upon the journals.

"SEC. 11. The provisions of this article and any act of the general assembly passed in pursuance thereof to establish, organize, and maintain a system of public schools throughout the State shall apply to Mobile County only so far as to authorize and require the authorities designated by law to draw the portion of the funds to which the said county shall be entitled for school purposes and to make reports to the superintendent of education as may be prescribed by law. And all special incomes and powers of taxation as now authorized by law for the benefit of public schools in said county shall remain undisturbed until otherwise provided by the general assembly: Provided, That separate schools for each race shall always be maintained by said school authorities."

Instead of permitting school districts and local authorities to tax themselves for the support of the public schools in the districts, the methods of raising money have been thus limited by the constitution. It will be observed that the total State levy for all purposes is only three-fourths of 1 per cent. (Const., Art. II, sec. 4.) Also a poll tax of $1.50 is provided, which, no doubt, like poll taxes generally in all the other States of the Union, is found very difficult to collect.

Out of this three-fourths of 1 per cent, the maximum tax levy, and the poll tax, together with a license tax in some counties, the public schools must be supported, subject, however, to some additions from other sources, such as the proceeds of sales of school lands, the interest on the surplus at 4 per cent deposited with the State by the United States in 1836, rents of a portion of the lands given by the United States or private individuals for the support of schools, and also escheats.

The meager allowance for the support of schools has been acquiesced in for a quarter of a century by the people of Alabama. Instead of endeavoring to amend the constitution so as to raise adequate funds by local taxation the National Government has been appealed to. The only wonder is that Alabama shows as good a record as she does in her school system with the very inadequate means which her constitution permits her to raise for that purpose.

The most useful system of public schools is that which does not attempt to take the children away from home and their parents to some distant place, but brings the schoolhouse close to the child where he can remain at home and continue to be a support to the family, having opportunities for education at a day school in the neighborhood. The child thus continues to be a producer and the family relation is kept up.

At night the children take home their books and writing materials, and the family residence becomes a night school for both old and young. Upon this system of education so much depends that no State is justified in neglecting it. So long as Alabama is under bondage by her constitution not to levy more than three-fourths of 1 per cent tax for all State purposes, first paying the expenses of the State and then applying the residue to school purposes, just so long will she be under the necessity of calling on Congress for aid and of appealing to individuals outside the State for assistance in carrying on her educational system. Until the limitation which prevents the State from furnishing adequate means for educational purposes shall have been removed, Congress can not be consistently asked to furnish that which the State, under its own constitution, forbids itself to supply.

The means for amending the constitution are ample, and the necessity for some amendment seems to be imperative. In fact, all the gentlemen who have been urging Congress to furnish this relief have recognized the fact that the necessity for a change is imperative in the organic law of the State in that respect. No mere outsider has a right to criticise or comment on the laws or constitution of any one of the States of the Union in which he has no personal concern; but when a State applies to Congress for relief on the grounds that it is so hampered by its own constitution as to be prevented from performing a great duty pertaining to the Commonwealth, it is no more than right and just that the difficulty should be pointed out, and in doing so it is with the friendliest spirit and with the greatest desire to see Alabama assume a progressive attitude in relation to the education of both white and black.

Congress, by aiding the State, by either appropriations of land or money, would be injuring rather than benefiting her people, because, in looking to Congress for assistance, they would be led to ignore the simplest of all propositions, viz, that of permitting themselves to levy local taxes for educating all the children of each community.

The minority discussed with the gentlemen present a like bill, years ago when the same proposition was presented for the first time, the necessity of the State making suitable provision for its schools, but nothing seems to have been done in that direction, though the propriety of the suggestion was admitted. The proposed land grant would probably only further delay the action of the State in making suitable arrangements for the support of its school system.

The people of Alabama evidently do not realize the position in educational matters which is enforced by the constitutional limitation referred to.

In appearing before the Committee on the Public Lands from time to time in the last four years, the delegations from that State asking for national aid have often manifested surprise at the suggestion that the State is not sufficiently helping herself in these matters.

A review of what is being done in a few of the other States in relation to common schools will render it obvious that the real need of Alabama is a method of raising sufficient revenues for the common schools of the State within the State.

The statistics of a few States North and South will show how the common-school system of the State of Alabama is suffering from limitations created twenty-five years ago and still retained in the constitution.

The expenditure per capita of population for all the public schools in the following States for the year 1897-98 was:

South Dakota	$3.15
North Dakota	3.66
Nebraska	3.18
Iowa	4.02
Kansas	3.00
North Carolina	.53
Arkansas	.94
West Virginia	2.36
Georgia	.84
Tennessee	.90
Louisiana	.71
Mississippi	.81
Alabama	.46

The actual expenditures of the following States for common schools in the year 1897-98 were:

South Dakota	$1,280,663
North Dakota	1,288,031
Nebraska	3,712,017
Iowa	8,451,504
Kansas	3,901,477
North Carolina	931,143
Arkansas	1,220,302
West Virginia	2,046,623
Georgia	1,758,106
Tennessee	1,690,750
Louisiana	956,888
Mississippi	1,165,840
Alabama	899,273

Average cost per capita per pupil of children in the public schools in the following States for the whole school year for all purposes.

South Dakota	$23.45
North Dakota	31.30
Nebraska	21.34
Iowa	22.79
Kansas	15.54
North Carolina	4.34
Arkansas	6.28
West Virginia	12.81
Georgia	6.31
Tennessee	5.00
Louisiana	7.25
Mississippi	5.21
Alabama	3.59

The above figures give a striking illustration of the results in Alabama of the constitutional prohibition of adequate support to the common schools.

South Dakota expended 50 per cent more for her common schools than Alabama, and yet Alabama has three times the population of South Dakota.

Mississippi has a majority of black population, and has less wealth and population than Alabama, and yet Mississippi expended 50 per cent more for school purposes than Alabama.

For each person living in Mississippi the tax for the common schools was 81 cents; in South Dakota, $3.15; but in Alabama, only 46 cents.

The actual average annual cost of each pupil for all school purposes in Alabama was only $3.59. In Mississippi it was $5.21; in South Dakota it was $23.45.

For these reasons we think the bill should not pass.

JOHN F. LACEY.
F. M. EDDY.

In addition to the foregoing reasons, I think all public lands subject to homestead entry should be reserved for those purposes.

F. M. EDDY.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. LACEY. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. SIMS. If a bond or note bearing 6 per cent——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I do not know but what we could use this time to good advantage.

Mr. HULL. Gentlemen have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. But we can not extend our questions.

Mr. HULL. The question under discussion between Alabama and Iowa having been settled, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for three days more in which to prepare for the RECORD my speech on the Loud bill. I have had some difficulty with my eyes, and in consequence have not been able to complete it within the five days allowed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he has had difficulty with his eyes for some days, and in consequence of that fact asks unanimous consent for three days in which to extend his remarks on the Loud bill, the time for leave to print on that bill expiring to-night. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1246. An act granting a pension to Charles A. Perkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1245. An act granting a pension to Oliver Domon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2290. An act granting a pension to James Richardson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2753. An act granting an increase of pension to David H. Morey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1601. An act granting an increase of pension to John Thornton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1603. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Kaump—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2539. An act granting an increase of pension to Capt. Milton H. Daniels—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 258. An act granting a pension to Coryden Bevans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3380. An act granting an increase of pension to Hamilton K. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2335. An act granting an increase of pension to Maj. John W. Blake—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2900. An act granting a pension to Hannah G. Huff—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 351. An act to increase the pension of Samuel S. White—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1400. An act granting a pension to William Lyman Chittenden—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 2764. An act granting an increase of pension to William Murphy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3200. An act granting an increase of pension to Luke H. Monson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2483. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Beard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2215. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert J. Koonce—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2276. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Ragland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2296. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. Sears—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 316. An act granting an increase of pension to Louann A. Perry, of Wallace, Kans.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3215. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew F. Dinsmore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1890. An act granting a pension to Sarah E. Tradewell—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1966. An act revoking and annulling the subdivision of Pencote Heights, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2926. An act to prevent dangers to navigation from rafts on the Pacific Ocean—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2870. An act concerning disbursing officers of the Subsistence Department of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3270. An act for the relief of Nathan S. Jarvis—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3249. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Charles C. Lee—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 3060. An act for the relief of James C. Drake—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1596. An act to equalize and regulate the duties of the judges of the district courts of the United States of Alabama—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Senate concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Oliver P. Morton, presented by the State of Indiana, to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of the most eminent citizens and illustrious statesmen of the Republic.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Indiana—to the Committee on the Library.

S. 1612. An act providing for the purchase of metal and the coinage of minor coins and the distribution and redemption of said coins—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 3380. An act granting an increase of pension to Hamilton K. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1939. An act authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3352. An act granting a pension to Sarah Kersey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. R. 72. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to appoint David Bagley as an additional cadet at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3129. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry McMillen;

S. 265. An act granting an increase of pension to Jane McMahon;

S. 1592. An act granting a pension to Jane E. Augur;

S. 1254. An act granting a pension to Catherine E. O'Brien;

S. 1713. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice S. Jordon;

S. 495. An act granting a pension to Ambrose J. Vanarsdel;

S. 343. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Freeman;

S. 195. An act for the relief of Louis Miller;

S. 39. An act granting an increase of pension to Caroline V. English;

S. 1752. An act granting a pension to James J. Wheeler;

S. 2346. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred Bigelow;

S. 2368. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Randall; and

S. 2882. An act to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and fouud truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 99. An act to establish a military post at or near Des Moines, Iowa; and

H. R. 9497. An act to amend an act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me.

OPEN DOOR IN CHINA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of March 24, 1900, reading as follows:

"Whereas the commercial community of the United States is deeply interested in ascertaining the conditions which are to govern trade in such parts of the Chinese Empire as are claimed by various foreign powers to be within their 'areas of interest;' and

"Whereas bills are now pending before both Houses of Congress for the dispatch of a mission to China to study its economic condition: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public service, such correspondence as may have passed between the Department of State and various foreign governments concerning the maintenance of the 'open door' policy in China."

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 27, 1900.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

And then, on motion of Mr. HULL (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting a communication from the file clerk of the House relating to the necessity of additional space to accommodate the files of the House, etc.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers in relation to disallowances in the accounts of Maj. H. M. Adams—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a communication relating to the necessity of an appropriation for protecting the Fort Caswell Military Reservation from storm tides—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for filling in land at Fort Point, Galveston, Tex.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for Army depot buildings at Philadelphia—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing submitting an estimate of appropriation for certain persons erroneously classified—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting a form of bill relating to the old court-house building at Baltimore, Md.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting an estimate of appropriation for lookouts in the temporary post-office building in Chicago—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John R. Henderson, administrator of estate of Michael C. Henderson, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Martha Noggle, administratrix of estate of Jacob Noggle, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Jacob A. Miller against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 216) for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National

Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 777); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KNOX, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 76) withdrawing certain lands on the island of Oahu, Hawaii, from the public domain, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 778); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. EDDY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6440) to amend the act of Congress approved May 14, 1880, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on the public lands, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 779); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 780); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2384) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the Territorial limits of the present State of Nevada, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 782); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EDDY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2977) to amend "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," approved February 8, 1887, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 791); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7945) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River," reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 792); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BARHAM, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7840) for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at Point No Point, in Chesapeake Bay, between Cove Point and Smiths Point, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 793); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2630) for the relief of the legal representatives of Merrick, Merrick & Cope, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 781); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2268) to carry into effect a finding of the Court of Claims in favor of Pamelia B. Finney, administratrix of T. C. Finney, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 783); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4693) for the relief of Sarah E. E. Perine, widow and administratrix of William Perine, deceased, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 784); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5091) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, of the Etna Works, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 785); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8282) for the relief of the Allaire Works, of New York, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 786); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4522) for the relief of Dr. Asa Wall, of Virginia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 787); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2724) for the relief of William B. Reaney, surviving partner of the firm of Reaney, Son & Archbold, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 788); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4061) for the relief of Hannah E. Boardman, administratrix of William Boardman, deceased, surviving partner of the firm of Boardman, Holbrook & Co., of the Neptune Works, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 789); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2650) granting an increase of pension to Katharine Taylor Dodge, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 790); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1017) for the relief of John M. Guyton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 794); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HOWELL: A bill (H. R. 10036) for the erection of a public building in the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HEATWOLE: A bill (H. R. 10037) regulating the issue of stamped envelopes by the Government—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DAYTON: A bill (H. R. 10038) to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10039) to authorize the Secretary of War to set aside a part of national cemetery at Arlington, Va., for the burial of deceased enlisted men and their wives—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 10040) to amend Title LXV of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to telegraph companies—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 10041) to regulate the pay and hours of service of attendants at the Government Hospital for the Insane, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H. R. 10042) to authorize the acquisition of square No. 229, in the city of Washington, D. C., and providing for a hall of records, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CURTIS: A bill (H. R. 10043) to establish and maintain, in connection with the Department of Justice of the United States, a division to be known as the Bureau of Criminal Information, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 216) for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers—to the House Calendar.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 217) providing for the printing of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LORIMER: A resolution (H. Res. 199) providing for the printing of hearings before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: A bill (H. R. 10044) for the relief of Mrs. S. F. Prestridge, of Selma, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CURTIS: A bill (H. R. 10045) for the relief of Patrick Larkin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10046) to pension Rosa Cox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10047) granting a pension to Paul Berg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10048) granting an increase of pension to James B. Haslet—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10049) for the relief of Elijah T. Hunt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAYTON: A bill (H. R. 10050) granting an increase of pension to Edward Madden—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10051) granting a pension to George W. Harrison, late a captain and assistant quartermaster and brevet lieutenant-colonel of volunteers in the Army of the United States—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10052) to reimburse the estate of Samuel Caldwell, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10053) granting an increase of pension to J. E. Wallace, of Rowlesburg, W. Va.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10054) granting an increase of pension to Bryson Dunn, of Reedsville, W. Va.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 10055) granting an increase of pension to Frederick G. McDowell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: A bill (H. R. 10056) granting a pension to David P. Watts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10057) for the relief of Mary A. Shufeldt—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARTLETT: A bill (H. R. 10058) granting a pension to George A. Alexander and John S. Alexander, the minor children of George A. Alexander, deceased—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10059) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Folds, of Butts County, Ga.—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10060) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Winfred M. Goins, of Barnesville, Ga.—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10061) for the relief of Henry C. Mix, of Macon, Ga.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10062) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Crotsenburg, widow of Lieut. Nick Crotsenburg, late second lieutenant of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: A bill (H. R. 10063) granting a pension to Samuel P. Cox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 10064) for the relief of Alfred S. Ruth—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GASTON: A bill (H. R. 10065) granting a pension to Mary J. White—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 10066) granting a pension to James Morris—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10067) for the benefit of the Harrodsburg Presbyterian Church—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10068) for the relief of H. Manwaring—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10069) granting a pension to Sarah T. Brewer—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10070) granting a pension to W. E. Grubbs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 10071) granting an increase of pension to Mary W. Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEATWOLE: A bill (H. R. 10072) to reimburse Hubert Nyssen—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KNOX: A bill (H. R. 10073) for the relief of Angus McVigor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H. R. 10074) granting an increase of pension to George Logsoon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LORIMER: A bill (H. R. 10075) for the relief of John Mullin—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10076) to increase pension of Susan C. Gilbreath, widow of Maj. E. C. Gilbreath, Eleventh United States Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 10077) for the relief of Peter Scott—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10078) granting a pension to Charles C. Jones, of Jackson, Ohio—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McALEER: A bill (H. R. 10079) for the relief of the personal representatives of John McCabe and Patrick McCabe, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'GRADY: A bill (H. R. 10080) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Judson Knickerbocker—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10081) granting a pension to Anthony Coleman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10082) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Oliver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10083) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Hugh McGuckin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 10084) for the relief of Nathan Shaw—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10085) for the relief of Isaac R. Maus—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10086) for the relief of John L. Benson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10087) for the relief of William Akerman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUPPERT: A bill (H. R. 10088) granting a pension to Oscar Dunlap—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 10089) granting an increase of pension to Charles Forbes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: A bill (H. R. 10090) granting a pension to Willard Harrop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WACHTER: A bill (H. R. 10091) granting a pension to Mary L. Tweddle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10092) for the relief of Patrick H. Philbin—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. YOUNG: A bill (H. R. 10093) granting a pension to Mary P. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10094) granting a pension to Louisa S. Hoepfner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 10095) to increase the pension of Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates, widow of Capt. George W. Yates, Seventh United States Cavalry—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: A bill (H. R. 10096) for the relief of George Kelly—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCUDDER: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 218) for the relief of Annie Birdsall, administratrix of the estate of John Birdsall, deceased—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of A. W. Decker and 22 citizens of Janesville, Iowa; Dr. C. A. Waterbury and 22 citizens of Blackhawk County, Iowa, in favor of the Grout oleomargarine bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of E. C. Buckner Post, of Eldora, Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARTLETT: Petition of the Chicago Federation of Labor, protesting against the passage of House bills placing a tax on process butter and otherwise regulating its manufacture and sale—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BOREING: Petitions of Grand Army of the Republic posts of Pineville and Tompkinsville, Ky., in favor of a bill locating a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOWERSOCK: Protest of the Merchants' Association of Illinois, against the passage of the Grout, Tawney, or other bills to increase the tax on butterine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Ottawa, Kans., in favor of Senate bill No. 1439, relating to an act to regulate commerce—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, report of the Commercial Club of Topeka, Kans., favoring cession of arid lands to the States—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BRENNER: Petition of Frank Foot and others, of Trenton and vicinity, Ohio, to amend the present law in relation to the sale of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BURKETT: Remonstrance of the Business Men's Association of Kearney, Nebr., against a parcel-post system—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of the Chicago Federation of Labor, against sundry bills taxing oleomargarine and butterine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of citizens of Freedom, Me., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BUTLER: Sundry petitions of citizens of the Sixth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of West Chester, Pa., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Brandywine Post, No. 54, Grand Army of the Republic, of Coatesville, Pa., favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHANLER: Resolution of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, relative to the policy of the United States toward the island of Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. CRUMPACKER: Resolutions of eight posts, Grand Army of the Republic, of the Tenth Congressional district of Indiana, in favor of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS: Petition of Lincoln Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, of Topeka, Kans., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7094—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT: Petition of Conyngham Post, No. 97, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAYTON: Papers and evidence to accompany House bill relating to the claim of Samuel Caldwell's heirs—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the estate of Elizabeth D. Gibson, deceased, late of Jefferson County, W. Va., praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of the estate of Barney Ott, deceased, late of Jefferson County, W. Va., praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: Papers to accompany House bill to increase the pension of Samuel P. Cox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to David P. Watts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of John E. Perkins Post, No. 95, Grand Army of the Republic, of Department of Wisconsin, in favor of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Petition of selectmen of the town of Orleans, Mass., asking for a survey of Nausett Beach and vicinity for the purpose of making Pleasant Bay, in the towns of Orleans, Harwich, and Chatham, a harbor of refuge for coastwise trade—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of J. C. Freeman Post, No. 55, Department of Massachusetts, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, favoring the passage of a pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 7835, to change the characteristic of Cape Cod light, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GROUT: Resolutions of the Federal Labor Union No. 7130, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., favoring the Federal ownership of Government lands and the building of storage reservoirs by the Government—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

Also, petition of the New York Zoological Society, urging the passage of the Lacey bill for the protection of wild birds and game—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Vermont Pharmaceutical Association, for the repeal of the tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of P. Houston and 40 citizens of Hamden, N. Y., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the Trades League of Philadelphia, Pa., approving the Senate amendments to the legislative bill respecting the Hydrographic Office, Navy Department—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, resolution of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for legislation to build up the merchant marine of the United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, protesting against the passage of bill extending the limit of time for holding live stock in transit from twenty-four to forty hours—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: Petition of Fred A. Elikofer and others, of Evansville, Ind., favoring the passage of joint resolution No. 33, relating to enlisted men in the service of the United States engaging in business or employment when the same shall interfere with local civilians—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of George W. Bohn and other citizens of Evansville, Ind., for the repeal of the tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of Grand Army of the Republic post of Petersburg, Ind., in favor of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of Upton Post, No. 14, of New Milford, Conn., Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HITT: Petition of Company D and Company G, Sixth Infantry, Illinois National Guard, in favor of House bill No. 7936, making an increase in the appropriation for arming and equipping the militia of the States and Territories—to the Committee on Militia.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Petitions of citizens of Dekalb, McHenry, and Sycamore, Ill., in favor of the Grout bill, taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. JACK: Petition of F. M. Brown Post, No. 266, Grand Army of the Republic, of Rochester Mills, Pa., favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McDOWELL: Resolution of Post No. 394 and Post No. 676, Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Anna M. Sheridan and 4 others, of the Newark (Ohio) post-office, for the passage of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the City Board of Trade of Newark, Ohio, for the passage of a bill for the equalization of the salaries of letter carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Price Russell and other druggists of Creston, Ohio, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MEEKISON: Resolutions of W. H. Doering Post, No. 247, and W. A. Slaughter Post, No. 568, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, in favor of House bill No. 7094, for the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: Papers to accompany House bill No. 9072, granting a pension to William F. Browning—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Petition of F. S. Rembe and others, of Chadron, Nebr., to amend the present law in relation to the sale of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. O'GRADY: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Judson Knickerbocker—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany House bill granting increase of pension to Lewis Oliver—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Hugh McGuckin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEARRE: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of William Ackerman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Hancock Post, No. 57, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Maryland, indorsing the bill to establish a Branch Home for Disabled Soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POWERS: Petitions of Mrs. S. J. Crittenden, Clyde R. Sumner, and others of Rutland and New Haven, Conn., against the Loud bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of E. H. Shipper and others of Ira, Vt., favoring the Grout bill relating to oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Vermont Pharmaceutical Association, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCUDDER (by request): Petition of A. J. Verkonteren, of New York City, expressing sympathy for the Boer Republic in its present war—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Florence W. Patten and other clerks of Jamaica (N. Y.) post-office, in favor of House bill No. 4351—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SPERRY: Resolutions of the Methodist Episcopal Church of South Meriden, Conn., protesting against the sale of liquor in our new possessions—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Baptist Church of Meriden; of the Baptist Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church at Yalesville, Conn.; and Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Meriden, Conn., favoring the anti-canteen bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Willard Harrop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WRIGHT: Petition of Ingham Post, No. 9, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers to accompany House bill No. 6232, granting a pension to Eliza J. Noble—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of House bill No. 9340, granting a pension to Charles Moyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Mary P. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ZENOR: Resolutions of Russell Post, No. 354, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

WIND RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with a lease for prospecting for coal within defined limits in Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and for mining such discoveries thereof, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

VAULTS, SAFES, AND LOCKS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect submitting an additional estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for vaults, safes, and locks for public buildings for the fiscal year 1900, $2,500, which it is desired to have added to the amount of $7,500, thereby increasing the sum to $10,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to resign my place upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. It meets on the same day the Committee on Commerce holds its sessions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the Chair appoint my colleague [Mr. BARD] to fill the vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will appoint the junior Senator from California [Mr. BARD] to the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Senator from Minnesota.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 39) granting an increase of pension to Caroline V. English;

A bill (S. 195) for the relief of Louis Miller;

A bill (S. 265) granting an increase of pension to Jane McMahon;

A bill (S. 343) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Freeman;

A bill (S. 495) granting a pension to Ambrose J. Vanarsdel;

A bill (S. 1254) granting a pension to Catherine O'Brien;

A bill (S. 1592) granting a pension to Jane E. Augur;

A bill (S. 1713) granting an increase of pension to Alice S. Jordon;

A bill (S. 1752) granting a pension to James J. Wheeler;

A bill (S. 2346) granting an increase of pension to Alfred Bigelow;

A bill (S. 2368) granting a pension to Mary A. Randall;

A bill (S. 2882) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts;

A bill (S. 3129) granting an increase of pension to Henry McMillen;

A bill (H. R. 99) to establish a military post at or near Des Moines, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 9497) to amend an act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Memphis, Tenn., praying for the construction of five or more Marsh movable jetties for the improvement of navigation in the Mississippi River during the season of low water; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of sundry churches of Maryville, Tenn., praying for the appointment of a chaplain to each regiment in the Army, and also to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which war referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUARLES presented the petition of Andrew Tate and J. H. Hellweg & Son, of Bayfield, Wis., praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Mankato, Minn., and a petition of the Red River Millers' Club, of northwestern Minnesota, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the reclassification of post-office clerks; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Grocers' Association of St. Paul, Minn., and a petition of the Retail Grocers and General Merchants' Association of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the manufacture and use of trade checks; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prevent the manufacture and use of trade checks; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Battery A, National State Guard of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to improve the armament of the militia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented memorials of the Farm Implement Publishing Company, of Minneapolis; the Graplin Sentinel, of Lake City; the Conference Examiner, of St. Paul; the Professional Barber, of St. Paul; Nya Tiden, of Minneapolis; the Northwestern Guardsmen, of Minneapolis; Der Wanderer, of St. Paul; the Messenger, of Stillwater; the News Gleaner, of Plainview, and the Broderbaaudet, of Kenyon, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FORAKER presented the petition of H. D. Robison and 19 other citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the establishment of an Army veterinary corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Sunday school of the Congregational Church of Norwalk, Ohio, and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Peru, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to limit absolute divorce in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Second Congregational Church of Oberlin, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors and opium in Hawaii; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

He also presented a petition of the Sunday school of the Congregational Church of Norwalk, Ohio, and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Peru, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the transmission of pictures and descriptions of prize fights; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Sunday school of the Congregational Church of Norwalk, Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution regulating polygamy, marriage, and divorce, etc., and granting the right of suffrage in the new possessions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Tekamah, Nebr., praying for the establishment of an Army veterinary corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Company D, First Regiment Infantry National State Guard of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to improve the armament of the militia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society of Kenduskeag, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3743) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Navy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3339) for the relief of Leonard Wilson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3476) for the relief of Mary A. Swift; and

A bill (S. 167) for the relief of the legal representatives of A. G. Boone.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3723) to enable John Collinson, a subject of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, to dispose of his right, title, and interest to and in certain lands situate in the Territory of New Mexico, reported it with amendments.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3302) for the relief of Riley Moutrey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3788) granting an increase of pension to James Williams, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3599) for the relief of the legal administrators of Daniel McLeod, deceased, of the South Brooklyn Works, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULBERSON (for Mr. MARTIN), from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3554) for the relief of W. T. Scott and others, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1163) for the relief of William Bushby, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3640) granting a pension to Mary Pollock; and

A bill (H. R. 205) granting an increase of pension to George C. Snyder.

ALFRED W. KENT.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3462) for the relief of Alfred W. Kent, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3462) entitled "A bill for the relief of Alfred W. Kent," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM POLLOCK.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2734) for the relief of the heirs of William Pollock, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2734) entitled "A bill for the relief of the heirs of William Pollock," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. HARRIS on the 24th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 4,500 copies of the work entitled "The Louisiana Purchase," by the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

LUCY E. BOARDLEY.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. WARREN February 24, 1900, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Lucy E. Boardley, widow of William Boardley, deceased, late a laborer in the Senate stables, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate paid to said laborer per annum, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLISON on the 10th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such hearings as may be had by the committee or its subcommittees in connection with appropriation bills pending before the committee, and to have the same printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

STENOGRAPHER FOR COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MCMILLAN, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report hearings upon matters that may be pending before said committee, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the necessary expenses of the inquiries already made by said committee be paid from said fund.

FOREIGN TERMS IN GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. MONEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 86) for the printing of English interpretation of foreign terms as to weights, measures, etc., occurring in Government publications, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that whenever in any book, document, or paper published at the public expense by any branch of the Government any term is used in a foreign language to express weight, measure, dimension, or value, there shall be inserted at the same place the equivalent term in the English language as spoken in America.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED B. CARTER.

Mr. MCLAURIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1135) for the relief of Alfred B. Carter, of Shelby County, Tenn., submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1135) entitled "A bill for the relief of Alfred B. Carter, of Shelby County, Tenn.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

HEIRS OF JAMES D. SULLIVAN, DECEASED.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3802) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of James D. Sullivan, deceased, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3802) entitled "A bill for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of James D. Sullivan," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

PEARL RIVER (MISSISSIPPI) BRIDGE.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The bill (H. R. 8063) to legalize and maintain the iron bridge across Pearl River at Rockport, Miss., was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on the 15th instant. At the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], who reported it, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3851) granting a pension to Mrs. M. G. Krayenbuhl; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3852) providing for an additional district judge in the districts of Minnesota and Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEWART (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3853) to cancel the assessment of water-main taxes on Brightwood avenue, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HANNA introduced a bill (S. 3854) granting a pension to Thomas Rossiter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3855) granting an increase of pension to Charlotte A. Reeder; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 3856) for the relief of Theodore B. Beaulieu; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 3857) for the relief of the heirs of Alexander Gordon, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3858) for the relief of W. L. Barnes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MONEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 3859) for the relief of the estate of William Roberts, deceased;

A bill (S. 3860) for the relief of the estate of W. T. Collins, deceased;

A bill (S. 3861) for the relief of the estate of Milton Crawford, deceased;

A bill (S. 3862) for the relief of J. C. Winters;

A bill (S. 3863) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet Miles;

A bill (S. 3864) for the relief of Mrs. C. V. Wilkins;

A bill (S. 3865) for the relief of Thomas M. Sigrest;

A bill (S. 3866) for the relief of the estate of Mary F. Birdsong, deceased;

A bill (S. 3867) for the relief of L. A. Whitehead;

A bill (S. 3868) for the relief of the estate of James E. Williams, deceased;

A bill (S. 3869) for the relief of J. E. Whittington;

A bill (S. 3870) for the relief of the estate of Thomas S. Maben, deceased;

A bill (S. 3871) for the relief of William F. Haralson;

A bill (S. 3872) for the relief of the estate of John Caruth, deceased; and

A bill (S. 3873) for the relief of the estate of M. T. Sigrest, deceased.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 3874) to increase the pay of the male laborers of the Government Printing Office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3875) granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Bell;

A bill (S. 3876) granting an increase of pension to Mary Phillips (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3877) granting a pension to Emma D. Goslin;

A bill (S. 3878) granting an increase of pension to William B. Smith; and

A bill (S. 3879) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Ganse (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3880) granting an increase of pension to Clara E. Colbath; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. DAVIS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for support and civilization of Nez Perce Indians in Idaho, including pay of physician from $1,000 to $2,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WASHINGTON TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted seven amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9047) to incorporate the Washington Telephone Company, and to permit it to install, maintain, and operate a telephone plant and exchanges in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In section 2, page 2, line 31, after the words "are authorized to prepare," insert the following:

"And provided further, That said Commissioners may authorize any company or corporation owning or operating a telephone or telegraph plant or system in the District of Columbia to construct conduits or extend its existing system of conduits under the streets, avenues, and alleys of said District, and to string upon any existing street or alley pole or poles owned or maintained by said company or corporation, or by the District of Columbia, such additional wires as may be necessary for the purpose of making house connections: Provided, That in any such conduit or conduits so constructed a duct shall be reserved for the use of the District of Columbia for its fire-alarm, telegraph, telephone, or other wires carrying low potential currents of electricity: And provided, That no additional pole or poles shall be erected by any such company or corporation upon any street, avenue, or public square within the fire limits of said city of Washington."

In line 7, section 3, after the words "in the city of Washington," insert the following: "and shall keep its exchanges open day and night for the use of its patrons."

In section 5, page 4, line 9, after the words "provisions and requirements," add the following:

"That is to say, if the notification of the acceptance of this charter, and if the stock books of said company shall not be opened for subscription within fifteen days after such acceptance, and notice thereof given as herein provided; if the provisions herein made for the holding of meetings, choosing of stockholders, electing of officers, and making of reports are not complied with; if within sixty days after the approval of this act the plans provided for in section 5 hereof shall not have been filed, and if within the period of fourteen months from the date of the approval of the said plans by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the exchange of said company, with not less than 1,500 telephones, shall not be in operation; if said company shall refuse or fail to furnish telephones at the rate herein provided, namely, not to exceed $48 for a telephone to be used for business purposes and $36 for a telephone at a residence, or if said company shall at any time neglect or refuse to furnish telephone instruments of a good quality and on metallic circuits only; if at any time said company shall fail to pay the taxes or provide the duct space herein mentioned for the District of Columbia, or if said company shall violate any of the provisions hereof relating to the issuing of bonds and stocks."

In section 7, page 5, line 6, after the words "city of Washington," insert the following:

"And shall continue to keep said books open for subscription to the stock of said company for not less than one month from the date of the opening thereof, and shall permit inspection by, and receive subscriptions from, any person or persons desiring to subscribe to the stock of said company."

After the words "business of the company," in section 9, line 8, insert the words "not inconsistent with this act."

Strike out section 11 of said bill and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 11. That the capital stock of said company shall be $750,000, and said company shall have the power from time to time to issue bonds secured by a mortgage of its entire property, rights, privileges, and franchises to an amount equal to the aggregate amount paid into the treasury of said company upon its capital stock at the time such bonds are issued, the aggregate of such bonds not to exceed $750,000: Provided, however, That before such bonds are issued the said aggregate amount so paid upon its capital stock shall be certified to by the officers of said company and by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the entire face value of said capital stock shall be paid into the treasury of said company in lawful money of the United States within one year after the organization of said company."

Strike out section 13 of said bill and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 13. That if at any time after the passage of this act the incorporators herein named, or the said Washington Telephone Company or its stockholders, shall sell, convey, or otherwise dispose of, to any person, company, or corporation whatsoever, except in trust to secure the payment of the bonds mentioned in section 11 of this act, any of the rights, privileges, or franchises granted herein; or if at any time, by sale of its telephone plant, capital stock, or otherwise, said company shall directly or indirectly be or become consolidated with or if said plant shall become the property of any other person, company, or corporation engaged in the business of furnishing telephone service in the District of Columbia; or if said company shall at any time cease to maintain and operate its said telephone plant or system independently of and wholly separate and apart from any other person, company, or corporation, all the rights, privileges, and franchises herein granted shall be and become forfeited and shall immediately cease and determine."

Strike out section 14 of said bill.

NOTES ON THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

Mr. HALE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 4,500 copies of Notes on the Spanish-American War, Office of Naval Intelligence, Navy Department, with accompanying papers and documents, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

REPORT OF CHARLES E. MAGOON.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 3,000 copies of the "Report on the legal status of the territory and inhabitants of the islands acquired by the United States during the war with Spain, considered with reference to the territorial boundaries, the Constitution, and laws of the United States," by Charles E. Magoon, law officer, Division of Insular Affairs, War Department, being Senate Document No. 224, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

MUZZLING OF DOGS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby directed to make careful inquiry and investigation as to the necessity of further continuing the muzzling of dogs in the District of Columbia, report to be made to the Senate at the earliest practicable day, showing when and by whom the order was issued, the alleged reasons for the order, and upon what ground it is being kept in force.

CLERICAL ASSISTANCE FOR COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I desire to say a word in reference to the resolution after it has been read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be authorized to employ additional clerical assistance in connection with the work of said committee, to continue until the close of the present session of Congress, provided that the aggregate amount so expended shall not exceed $500, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the reference of the resolution is made I desire simply to say that I have managed to get along with the present clerical force in the Committee on Pensions until it has become impossible to properly consider bills that have been presented unless some relief is granted.

I wish to state that there are before our committee about 1,700 Senate bills of a special nature and some 50 general pension bills, and there are before the House hundreds and hundreds of bills that will come over here for consideration. As an illustration, one Senator three days ago handed me 47 bills, which he said he would like to have looked up. Now, Mr. President, that means that we shall send to the Pension Bureau for 47 bundles of papers, each one of which will take any clerk several hours to properly examine, and with the present help it is an absolute physical impossibility to do what Senators are asking the committee to do.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; but inasmuch as I am a member of that committee, I wanted to make this explanatory statement, that the other members of the committee might understand the situation.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 68) granting to the State of Kansas the abandoned Fort Hays Military Reservation, in said State, for the purpose of establishing an experiment station of the Kansas Agricultural College and a western branch of the Kansas State Normal School thereon, and for a public park;

An act (S. 746) to authorize C. R. Dobbins to accept a gold watch awarded to him by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of his humane and gallant services to the shipwrecked crew of the British schooner Ashton, of Weymouth, Nova Scotia;

An act (S. 1740) to authorize C. E. Marr and E. H. Pierce to accept silver watches awarded to them by the government of the Dominion of Canada in recognition of their services in rescuing British soldiers; and

An act (S. 2354) enlarging the powers of the Choctaw, Oklahoma and Gulf Railroad Company.

BOARDING OF VESSELS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill received from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 5067) concerning the boarding of vessels was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. I recall the fact that the Senate has passed a bill identical in terms with that measure, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill. I shall then ask that the House be requested to return the Senate bill, that the vote whereby that bill was passed may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe from time to time and enforce regulations governing the boarding of vessels arriving at the seaports of the United States, before such vessels have been properly inspected and placed in security, and for that purpose to employ any of the officers of that Department.

SEC. 2. That each person violating such regulations shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be construed as supplementary to section 9 of chapter 374 of the statutes of 1882, and section 4606 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect thirty days after its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 733) concerning the boarding of vessels.

The motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9279) "making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Office of Auditor for the War Department: For the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn out and defaced rolls and vouchers in the Office of the Auditor for the War Department, $2,944.40."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For printing and binding for the War Department; namely, for publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion by the Record and Pension Office, $10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
S. S. BARNEY,
RICE A. PIERCE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON THE NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. STEWART. There is a bill on the Calendar providing for the adjustment of the rights of settlers on the Navajo Reservation, and it ought to be passed speedily. It is very short. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4001) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on the Navajo Indian Reservation, Territory of Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. STEWART. It will take but a moment and is quite an urgent matter. It is to adjust matters down there, and the Interior Department are very anxious to have it passed.

Mr. FORAKER. Before any other case is called up I wish to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That all that portion of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona lying north of 30° 30′ north latitude, and west of the one hundred and eleventh meridian, be, and the same is hereby, opened and subjected to the mining laws of the United States.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands claimed by actual settlers or persons to whom valid rights attach, who settled upon or occupied any part of the public lands of the United States prior to the date of the Executive order of January 6, 1880, extending the boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, and which were included in said Executive order, are hereby excepted from the operations thereof, and said settlers are hereby granted authority to establish their rights and secure patents for any of said lands to which they have a valid title under the public-land laws of the United States: Provided, That all that portion of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona lying north of 30° 30′ north latitude, and west of the one hundred and eleventh meridian, be, and the same is hereby, opened and subjected to the mining laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want at this time to ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken at some day and hour to be agreed upon on the Puerto Rican bill and all amendments that may be at that time pending.

If any Senator has any suggestion to make as to time I would be glad to have him make it. I understand that there are a number of Senators who desire to speak, some to-day and some have been intending to speak to-morrow. I do not want to cut anybody off; I want to give time for all the debate that is contemplated; but I should like an early day agreed upon if it can be done.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to say for myself that the earlier the day the better I shall be pleased in the matter. Therefore, I will suggest that the Senator indicate the earliest day at which he thinks he can present the measure for the vote of the Senate, asking his attention to the fact that he has not yet put the bill in the shape in which he desires to have the vote taken.

Mr. FORAKER. I have——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recall that some time last week when the colloquy was had between himself and various Senators, including the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], the Senator from Vermont then indicated that he would not desire to consent to a vote earlier than Thursday—to-morrow. If that is still the disposition of the Senator, I think we can agree on to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. As to putting the bill into the shape in which I wanted it voted on, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that all the amendments which the committee have proposed or amendments that they now intend to propose are printed in the bill as it is now on the desks of Senators. I expect to proceed as rapidly as we can to take votes upon those amendments. What I ask is that a time may be fixed when we can take a vote on the bill and all amendments that have been proposed or will be proposed prior to that time.

Mr. BACON. Will to-morrow suit the Senator?

Mr. FORAKER. It will suit me better than any other time; but I know it will not suit some of the other Senators who want to speak to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. I believe I can speak for Senators on this side when I say that they will be ready to-morrow at any hour the Senator will indicate.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator from Ohio will yield to me for a moment, I do not see a large number of my fellow-insurgents in the Chamber, and I will not venture to speak for them, but I am sure that they do not wish any unreasonable delay. There are several who wish to speak. I think it would be impossible for us to consent to a vote this week. I would suggest to the Senator from Ohio Tuesday afternoon next, which would be entirely agreeable to me and, so far as I know, acceptable to Senators on this side.

Mr. FORAKER. I would rather have Friday of this week fixed, but in view of what the Senator from Vermont says, I am willing to accept Tuesday, if that is the earliest date he thinks we can agree upon. I suggest that the vote be taken at 4 o'clock on Tuesday upon the bill and all amendments that are proposed and offered or notice given for prior to 4 o'clock on Tuesday.

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to give notice that I hope to address the Senate briefly to-morrow immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. BATE. I shall ask the permission of the Senate to be heard on Monday, immediately after the close of the routine business of the morning hour, upon the Puerto Rican bill, and also on Senate bill 2355, reported from the Committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a vote may be taken on the bill known as the Puerto Rican bill, and on all amendments of which notice may have been previously given, at 4 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon next. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TESTIMONY IN PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 103) providing for the introduction of testimony in behalf of the defendant in all preliminary hearings of a criminal nature.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that in all preliminary investigations of criminal charges by the courts of the States of the Union, and the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia, the accused shall be permitted to testify in his own behalf and to introduce and examine any witness in his behalf touching the matter charged against him.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOHN BIRDSALL, DECEASED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. PLATT of New York, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in response to the resolution of the Senate of March 12, 1900, calling for copies of correspondence in regard to the protest and claim of Mrs. Annie Birdsall, administratrix of the estate of John Birdsall, deceased.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 28, 1900.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado is in the nature of a substitute, as I remember, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment pending, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 26, page 23, insert:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to declare and publish proper rules and regulations whereby the auriferous deposits in Alaska which lie below the low-water mark of the ocean and its tributaries shall, if feasible, be open to exploration and development by citizens of the United States or those who have declared their intention of becoming such citizens, which said rules and regulations shall, so far as is practicable, be in accordance with existing statutes as applicable to placer mining and shall limit the area of each claim to the acreage now allowed by law.

The rules and customs of miners in the mining district nearest said deposits shall, when not inconsistent with such regulations, be recognized and shall govern the working of said deposits.

The authority of the Secretary of War respecting said auriferous deposits shall be limited to policing the same and to protecting navigation as he is now by law empowered.

Any grants or rights heretofore granted respecting said deposits by any authority are hereby declared void and of no further effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment which has just been read is offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes have it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Colorado who offered the amendment is not present.

Mr. BERRY. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. CULLOM. He is in the Marble Room.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the vote is announced, there are some things I want to say on this subject, and I will ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes. Yesterday I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that seemed to me to be clear, that there was no necessity for these permits.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator from Arkansas for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Simply for information. I was called out of the Chamber a moment ago. I understood that the amendment which I offered yesterday had been voted on in my absence.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was taken up and the vote was about to be taken when I took the floor. I do not understand that the vote has been taken.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the vote been taken, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not declare the result.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I took the floor in the absence of the Senator from Colorado, and I want to call attention——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I beg pardon of the Senator from Arkansas. It was only to get the information that I interrupted him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to a fact or two that I think ought to be borne in mind in connection with the question of giving these permits by the War Department. I called attention yesterday to the wording of the statute under which the Secretary of War claims the authority to issue these permits. I stated I did not believe that under this statute he had any authority whatever to issue the permits; that he had no authority to interfere with anyone who is undertaking to excavate these sands unless they were interfering with navigable waters somewhere; that the simple fact that it was along the coast was not of itself sufficient to authorize him to interfere with this work.

Now, a bill was introduced in the early days of this session which provided that section 10 of an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, etc., should be amended, proposing to amend the very section under which the Secretary now claims the authority to issue these permits. The proposed change in the language was as follows:

To provide for the leasing of ground, and granting exclusive privileges on same, for the purpose of extracting minerals from the beds of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable water, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States.

Any person or association of persons may apply to the Secretary of War for, and he, at his discretion, may grant a lease of ground, not to exceed 1,320 feet in length and 660 feet in width, extending below mean low tide, on the beds of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable water, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, for the purpose of extracting minerals therefrom.

Here, Mr. President, was a proposition to provide by statute that persons might excavate in the very places mentioned in the section. This bill was referred to the Secretary of War. He returned it to the Committee on Commerce, by whose order the bill had been referred to him for an opinion. His indorsement is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, February 21, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the chairman, Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, inviting attention to the accompanying report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated February 3d, instant, and the foregoing opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, dated 8th instant.

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

The opinion of the Chief of Engineers is a remarkable paper, but the indorsement of the Judge-Advocate-General is equally remarkable, and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to both. As the opinion of the Chief of Engineers is first in point of date, I shall first read that. It is addressed to the Secretary of War, and is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, February 3, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office of a letter, dated the 30th ultimo, from the Senate Committee on Commerce inclosing, for the views of the War Department thereon, S. 2745, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, "A bill to amend section 10 of an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1899."

The object of this bill is to confer on the Secretary of War the power to lease to persons and corporations the ground or soil on the beds of any port, harbor, navigable river, or other navigable water of the United States.

It would appear that under the Constitution the power proposed by this bill was not conferred upon the legislative branch of the Government. The jurisdiction of Congress over the navigable waters of the United States proceeds from section 8 of the Constitution, which provides, inter alia, that Congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." This jurisdiction does not appear to extend to the ownership or control of the soil under navigable waters except in so far as such control is necessary to the exercise of the above power.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan (3 Howard, 212), announced the following conclusions:

1. "The shores of navigable waters, and the soils under them, were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively."

2. "The new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States."

This doctrine has been considered and affirmed by the court in subsequent cases, and extends to the whole body of any navigable water in the United States. In the case of Rundle et al. vs. Delaware and Raritan Canal Company (14 Howard, 80-90) the court says, in regard to the Delaware River, that "below tide water the river, its soil and islands, formerly belonged to the Crown; above tide water it was vested in the proprietaries of the coterminous provinces, each holding ad filium aquæ; since the Revolution the States have succeeded to the public rights, both of the Crown and the proprietaries." Similar principles have been advanced in regard to Chattahoochee River (Howard et al. vs. Ingersoll, 13 Howard, 381), and to the Potomac (Georgetown vs. Alexandria Canal Company, 12 Peters, 91), and to the Ohio (Pennsylvania vs. Wheeling Bridge, 13 Howard, 519), and they apply to all other navigable waters of the United States.

It would appear, therefore, that the several States hold the rights of property in the shores and beds of navigable waters within their respective boundaries, except in so far as they have alienated such rights to individual citizens. In some States the riparian proprietor holds a fee simple in the soil to high-water mark, in others to low-water mark, and in still others to the middle of the channel of fresh-water rivers. Congress has the power to regulate and control the exercise of this fee in so far as may be necessary to conserve the public rights of navigation and commerce, but it would seem that the power to regulate commerce can not operate to divest either the States or the individual proprietors holding by grant from the States of their property rights in the soil on the beds of navigable waters.

The question at issue seems to be one that should receive the careful consideration of the law officers of the Department.

The letter from the committee, with its inclosure, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Nobody will deny that in these cases referred to by the Chief of Engineers, as, for instance, that of the State of Delaware, where the State acquired the rights of the Crown before the organization of the United States Government, these rights never went to the United States Government; that they were in the hands of the State from the organization of the State; but that by no means applies to a case like that of the Territory of Alaska, where there is no State and never has been a State, and where the Government of the United States is the absolute owner of the property, with all the other rights which belong to it, and which they can manage as they see fit.

This bill was sent for report to the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army. This is the paper to which I especially wish the attention of the Senate. The indorsement is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, concurring in the views of the Chief of Engineers as expressed in inclosed report, dated February 3, 1900, so far as the waters situated within the limits of any State are concerned.

It is understood, however, that the proposed legislation is intended principally to provide for the leasing of ground under water adjacent to the coast near Cape Nome, Alaska, for mining purposes, applications for leases having already been filed; and with reference to such lands Congress has the power to authorize their leasing, Alaska being a Territory under the exclusive legislative authority of Congress.

The bill purports to authorize the Secretary of War to lease limited areas "below mean low tide on the beds of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable water, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States for the purpose of extracting minerals therefrom."

The bill would not, in my opinion, authorize the leasing of land in shallow water along the shore of Alaska at places not covered by any of the terms used.

G. N. LIEBER,
Judge-Advocate-General.

That is exactly the point I made on yesterday—that the law did not cover the shore line for 2 miles away from the margin of the mouth of the river, and that the pretended grant of authority by the Secretary of War was a usurpation and conveyed no power whatever to those people. But the injury of it, the harm of it, is that those people might claim, under the semblance of authority, that they have the right to keep other people out of this work, and that they have the sole use of this ground for a distance of 2 miles.

I believe the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] will fully cover this case, and will provide for making regulations by the Interior Department to conform to the present mining laws, which will prevent any such usurpation as this, and which will give justice to all the claimants having a right to work along those shores. For that reason I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the authority cited in the letter read by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is in perfect harmony with the law declared by the United States Supreme Court, which I attempted to announce yesterday. It has never been contended anywhere that the soil under navigable waters belongs to the United States. It was held in the Seattle tide-land cases that the United States could not alienate tide lands, because they were held by the Government in trust for the future State. The same identical situation, from a legal point of view, obtains with reference to the district of Alaska. The lands below mean high tide on Bering Sea, or any other part of the coast of Alaska, do not belong to the United States; they are held in trust by the Government of the United States for any State or States that may hereafter be organized in that district or from its territory.

The Senator assumes that the Secretary of War had no right to issue any permit to or to relieve any person from the penalty because some of the land described in the permit was remote from the mouth of a certain river, which presumably would be an entrance into the interior of the country for navigation. But, Mr. President, "navigation" is a broad term. The identical stretch of water over the land embraced within the permits is and has been used steadily for navigation purposes along the coast at Cape Nome. The conditions seem to be that a vessel must anchor about 1 mile distant from the low-tide line, the water not being deep enough to admit a deep-draft vessel to a point nearer the shore. What happens then? The anchor of the ocean-going steamer is dropped, the vessel comes to rest, the lighters are moved out over this stretch of shoal water from the shore, and the cargo of the vessel is landed by means of the lighters. The water between the vessel and the shore is as much used for navigation in connection with that cargo as is the deep water where the vessel is anchored.

Well knowing that this lighterage system was a necessity on that coast, the Secretary of War, with no violence, assumed that the law required him to keep that portion of the coast free for this necessary navigation; but at the same time he concluded that whatsoever mining operations citizens of the United States thought proper to prosecute might be prosecuted without injuriously affecting this navigation or the landing of goods by the lighterage system, and permits were granted, as heretofore stated, merely and solely for the purpose of relieving citizens from penalties.

It may be that the construction by which the act is applied to these waters is a strained one, but out of a superabundance of caution a citizen making an investment and going to that distant coast to dredge for gold would want to feel that every precaution had been taken for the purpose of avoiding conflict with the criminal statutes of the United States.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Does not the Senator's amendment take this authority away from the Secretary of War, revoke all the concessions he has given, and do all that it is claimed by my colleague the Secretary desires to accomplish in the premises?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the amendment——

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator to have the amendment read. There is some misunderstanding about it.

Mr. CARTER. There are two amendments pending. The amendment I had the honor to offer, perfected by the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], provides, in substance, that, subject only to such limitations as may be necessary to prevent artificial obstructions to navigation, the miners may, under such rules and regulations as they themselves may prescribe in organized districts, temporarily occupy these waters for the purpose of exploration and location, until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator have the amendment read, and then all will understand it? There is some confusion about it now.

Mr. CARTER. In one moment, if the Senator will indulge me. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], on the other hand, looking to the same end, attempts to reach the point in another way. He would have these rules and regulations made, not by the miners on the ground, familiar with and facing the hard conditions to be overcome and grappled with, but he would have these rules and regulations made by the Interior Department—a Department certainly not any more familiar with the conditions than the Senate or the other branch of Congress—these rules and regulations to be prepared in this city and forwarded 8,000 miles to govern conditions with which no individual in either House of Congress nor in any Department at Washington is sufficiently familiar to prepare rules and regulations to govern.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator a question right there.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want, if I can, to understand the purpose and effect of these proposed amendments.

The amendment of the Senator from Montana, as I understand it, proposes that these mines shall be worked under such reasonable rules and regulations as the miners in organized mining districts may have heretofore made or may hereafter make. Is there to be any fixedness about this arrangement? What miners are to fix it, and how long is it to remain fixed?

Mr. CARTER. Until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Until otherwise provide by law. Then, what number of miners are necessary to establish this arrangement?

Mr. CARTER. We went over that proposition at some little length yesterday. The miners' meeting and the miners' organized districts are as old as gold mining in this country. In the early days of California thousands upon thousands of our people went over the plains, across the Isthmus, and around the Horn, and settled upon that gold-bearing coast. There was no law on the statute books of the United States whereby they could prosecute their mining enterprises. Discoveries were made. Men came in from different sections, from every part, indeed, of the country, and they, moved by the necessities of their situation, conferred, and, conferring, they brought order out of chaos. Resolutions were passed, set rules were fixed, the size of claims determined, and the conditions under which those claims could be held were specified. These constituted the miners' meeting. The miners' meeting embraced the creek, the gulch, or the district in which the members of the meeting were engaged in mining. They did not attempt to legislate for a gulch beyond the hill, in which other men were engaged in prosecuting work, but permitted the men over there to legislate for themselves as their condition might require.

It so happened that the varying conditions of topography and climate required different rules and regulations in different districts. The miners acquainted practically with the conditions, well knowing the purposes to be subserved, made a system of law, which was finally crystallized into the statutes of the United States almost bodily through the efforts of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], first placed upon the statute books in 1866, and thereafter somewhat amended in 1872. This law then placed upon the statute books, which has been tried in the crucible of experience for more than a generation, permitted miners to still continue to legislate in organized districts; and no evil, in so far as my information extends, ever resulted from that license granted the miner to legislate as he thought best within the restricted limit prescribed by the laws of the United States.

Now, the question arises, How will the situation on the coast of Bering Sea near Cape Nome be disposed of?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Is there any place within the United States or any of its Territories where the miners can to-day make the mining laws, or are they not governed by the general mining laws made by act of Congress?

Mr. CARTER. They are not governed by the general mining laws of the United States except as to the maximum to be embraced in a claim. Within the limits prescribed by the laws of the United States they may, in the organized districts, enact any sort of rule or regulation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to ask the Senator from Montana if miners in a mining district may legally evade the provision of the general mining laws which requires an annual expenditure upon a claim?

Mr. CARTER. I have stated that, subject to the provision of the mining laws——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Ah, of course.

Mr. CARTER. That, subject to the provisions of the mining laws of the United States, the miners may legislate as they please. For instance, the Federal statute provides that a quartz-mining claim may be 1,500 feet in length and 300 feet in width on either side of the center of the vein or lode. The miners in an organized district may prescribe rules whereby the quartz vein may be limited to 200 feet in length and 50 feet on either side of the vein or lode, but they can not provide that a claim may be 1,600 feet, or even 1,501 feet, in length; they can not provide that it may be 601 feet in width, but they may provide that it may be only 590 feet in width.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. May I be permitted to ask the Senator another question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not get an answer to the question I asked the Senator before. As I understand the proposed amendment, it is that there shall be no limitations whatever on the power of the organized miners in Alaska?

Mr. CARTER. On page 3352 of the RECORD the Senator will observe the amendment as finally perfected, the Senator from Nevada in that behalf having added a further proviso:

Provided, That the rules and regulations established by the miners shall not allow the location of mining claims larger in area than placer claims under the laws of the United States.

The law of the United States restricts a placer mining claim to an area of 20 acres, but does not prescribe its exterior boundaries or fix any set rule in that behalf.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I had not noticed that proposed amendment. I was reading the original amendment as proposed by the Senator from Montana, and I am obliged for the information the Senator now gives me.

We were informed yesterday that a large number of Laplanders had gone over to this particular country and had taken possession of it. If those Laplanders should get together and organize a mining camp and resolve that nobody should enter there except Laplanders and those who went there in charge of reindeer, they having absolute authority to legislate, it seems to me they would be able to bar out the balance of creation.

Mr. CARTER. Not necessarily.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas a further question. Suppose the miners upon the land, constituting the majority of the people of a mining district, came in conflict with the people who were mining with their dredges upon the water, and the miners upon the land should vote that there should be no mining up there under any rule or regulation, or should establish prohibitory rules, how, then, would that country be open to occupation unless the Secretary of the Interior established proper rules and regulations for such mining not inconsistent with those which the miners of the district might make?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are numerous difficulties of that kind which might arise, that I should like to have the Senator explain.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] can answer the last question.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator that the amendment itself provides that the parties must be citizens of the United States or persons who have legally declared their intention to become such.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will ask the Senator whether, under his amendment, the miners in the mining districts must be citizens of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. There is no necessity for that, because a person not qualified to make a location will have no say or part in the miners' meeting. A necessary qualification for a voter in a miners' meeting everywhere has been that the person voting shall be qualified to exercise the right of a locater under the law.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Montana, I believe, has explained to the Senate that a miners' meeting is called by a notice being given, and that notice has to state the qualifications of the miners of that district?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I wish to state, if the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will permit me, that in his very full and interesting description of the primary conditions which confronted the pioneer miners of the West that that was one of the requisites. A notice was posted in a conspicuous place, upon a tree or a bowlder or some other natural object, embracing a certain district—it might be known by the name of Grubstake Canyon or Grizzly Flat or Pikes Peak or any other euphonious name—describing the boundaries of it. Representative men, miners in that locality, would post a notice, and the miners who were located there or living in the camp would go to the meeting. The first action of the meeting, after being called together, was to adopt a series of resolutions.

As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] said yesterday—he having been a pioneer miner in California—those miners' meetings were composed of men who were, many of them, able lawyers, merchants, manufacturers, men of prominence in their homes in the States from which they had come out to the far West in search of golden treasure. The meeting was organized by the election of a president and a recorder. They adopted certain by-laws and rules and regulations to govern the district, after designating it by name. The recorder was elected, and he kept minutes of all the proceedings of the meeting, the record of every claim, which had to be described by metes and boundaries, so that there could be no question as to the right of the locator. If there was a large influx of people into that particular mining district, a certain number of miners might assemble together and modify or change the size of the claims. So every notice of a mining location was recorded in a book which had been properly prepared and submitted by the recorder for the approval of the miners' meeting.

I venture to say, Mr. President, without fear of contradiction, that in the early days of the far West, in California, in Nevada, and in Arizona, there were fewer contests and the rights of individuals were as sacredly guarded and as well protected as they are to-day in communities where courts exist. The people who composed those miners' organizations, as I stated before, were representative men, who came there with an honest purpose in view, with a desire that every man should have a fair deal; and I venture to say that in the Cape Nome country, where we have been trying to provide a civil government for the people and to give them proper laws for their government, to-day, under the miners' régime, there is law and order now prevailing.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], I have but a word to say, and it is all I am going to say about these amendments. I think the Senate ought to understand the situation as to these amendments. To me personally it makes not the slightest difference which of them may be adopted. As a man more or less familiar all my life with mining, I am only desirous that in the best way, in the most orderly fashion, the gold deposits about Alaska shall be open alike, and without discrimination, to citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such; and under the amendment which I have offered as a substitute for that of the Senator from Montana there is not the slightest interference in the world with the action of the miners, with the resolutions of the miners' meetings, or with the rules and customs of the miners' districts.

The difference between the two amendments is stated in a word. The Senator from Montana declares that this ground, the soil under this water, shall be open to exploration and occupation, and that the rules governing this mining shall be such as are made by the miners in pursuance of their customs in the mining districts where they are situated. My amendment puts the initiative upon one of the Executive Departments of this Government and says that first the Government of the United States shall make proper rules and regulations governing the taking of mineral from under the waters of the sea, and that the rules and customs of miners in those districts, when not inconsistent with those rules, shall be uniformly recognized by the Department. My amendment goes further and declares that all grants or assumed grants are void and that the power of the Secretary of War shall be limited to policing the soil and fulfilling the obligations he owes under the law as to dredging and excavating in channels.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Speaking as to that provision, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that next to the last word in the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado the word "further" is used, and it occurs to me that it should be stricken out. It says:

Are hereby declared void and of no further effect.

"Further" should be stricken out.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will spend a moment upon that. My theory about these permits of the Secretary of War under which they become, to my mind, justifiable or excusable is this: There was a technical statute. The Secretary has no more authority to authorize mining in the waters of Cape Nome than I have or the Senator from Mississippi has.

There is a statute empowering him with certain jurisdiction to protect the dredging and excavation of soil in certain parts of the sea. There might be a technical violation of the statute in case prospectors went to work there without the authority of the Secretary of War. For that reason he gave, as I understand, and as I hope and believe, to all responsible people alike the license, the statement that whatever they did there in the way of excavation would not be deemed and held a violation of the statutes of the United States. To that extent it was justifiable, and beyond that it did not go. But of course he could not confer a right to mine nor could he confer an exclusive right to dredge upon that ground. There is no question about that.

But, Mr. President, going back a moment, we all want the same thing. There is no answer to this amendment of mine that I hear except two: First, that it takes so much time to promulgate the rules here and send them to Cape Nome; and next that this Department of ours, the Interior Department, which makes rules and regulations as to the taking up of land for railroads, which makes rules and regulations as to excavating and mining for coal, which declares the rules and regulations under which the whole area of the public land is dug into and excavated and treated, is incompetent to deal with the Cape Nome district as against a nondescript population of nonresidents and all sorts of people, gathered together thousands of miles away from our jurisdiction, and that it is safe for us to intrust the mining of soil under the navigable water to men in a mining district without reference to such reasonable rules and regulations as the Department may establish.

Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will not be through for four or five minutes, if the Senator from Nevada is standing up with the expectation of succeeding me.

The fact is this: You pass this amendment as the Senator from Montana has it, and the miners of that district will have the sole and exclusive authority to declare the rules and regulations under which the soil under the waves may be excavated. It is presumed they will do it right; but great litigation is going to follow this action. All mining districts are a fruitful field for litigation. Hostility may develop between those mining in the waters of the ocean and those upon the high land above. The Interior Department has already been called upon to render two very important decisions upon entirely new questions growing out of our rights, one respecting the laying of a tramway along the coast of the sea, and the other as to rights below high-water mark of those seeking to take up sand. With these questions they are already dealing.

I confess I am shocked and ashamed when I hear Senators object to yielding to one of the great Departments of this Government the duty of making reasonable rules and regulations for dealing with the public lands on the ground that an $1,800 clerk may do it, or on the ground that the Department does not know as much as we do, or on the ground that the Department does not know as much as some miners 8,000 miles away in Alaska know. Mr. President, this Government under every Administration is well and intelligently administered. We have at the head of our Departments men competent to deal with these questions, men who deal with them, or ought to and do, and seek to, in the spirit of our institutions; and we belittle ourselves when we as a coordinate branch of the Government denounce different Departments as if they contained incompetent men and were unfit to give intelligent thought to great questions which arise and to deal with subjects which are intrusted to them.

There will be no delay. We pass this amendment and say the Interior Department shall make the rules and regulations, and what will they do? They will say each area shall be limited to not more than 20 acres by an individual or 160 acres of area by an association. That is the existing law. They will then make provision as to the anchoring of boats, as to the delivery of cargoes, as to the general transaction of mining business there. They will promulgate general rules which will be applicable to the whole district, not to one mining district but to all of them, and then, subject to those regulations, the miners of the district will make such reasonable rules as they may require.

Let me make a further suggestion. These mining districts are small in area. There is going to be great litigation to come. Suppose one mining district is 8 or 10 miles long and joins another 8 or 10 miles, and opposite there is excavation in the waters of the sea, and suppose the regulations differ on important points. Is it not best for the stability of mining, is it not best for the treatment of the soil of the United States, the excavation of these deposits, that we should have in the first instance one general set of rules and regulations declared by a responsible Department of this Government which is charged by law with dealing with this public property, rather than to leave it in its entirety to the floating and changeable and uncertain view of men who in one district may have one policy and in another another? If, as frequently happens, hostility should develop between the two sets of miners; if, as frequently occurs between placer miners and lode miners, you should have between those who mine under water and those who mine upon the land differences, our Department will say, "You can all mine under these general rules and regulations, and, subject to them, the miners of your mining district may establish such rules and customs as they see fit."

Mr. President, that is all there is in this amendment. To my mind I can not see why anybody should object to its adoption. You are dealing with navigable waters, and you are proposing to let the miners in a mining district make all the rules and regulations they want concerning them. There can be no delay caused by the adoption of this amendment. There can only be help, there can only be the furthering of that which we all desire—the peaceful and the lawful and the speedy taking from the waters and soil of our country of such precious metals as by their production will add to the prosperity of our country. My amendment is nothing to me. I do not care to interfere with the conduct of the bill by the Senator from Montana; but I do know that men who are going to invest money out there, men who are going to risk their lives seeking for the precious metals, will be far better fortified if they have the rules and regulations of the Government of the United States to start them in their mining than to trust to the fluctuating and uncertain decisions of changeable gatherings of men along the shores of Cape Nome.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Montana as modified read. There appears to be a misunderstanding about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the amendment is read, I wish to ask a question of some one familiar with this matter. I desire to ask it before the Senator from Nevada proceeds. I will ask him to explain this. As I understand the proposition of the Senator from Colorado, it is to have the Secretary of the Interior make certain general regulations under the law, and that under those the mining organizations there can fix whatever rules they please, subject to the law and the regulations of the Interior Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Whereas the Senator from Montana proposes that the regulations made by the miners themselves shall be absolute, except, I think, he says they shall be subject to law and they shall not be changed until they are changed by law. Suppose, in case of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Montana, there should be a body of men get together in one place in one of these mining districts and they should adopt one set of regulations, and a short distance away in the same locality another body of men should get together and adopt a set of regulations totally different; which one of those is to govern?

Mr. STEWART. Let me have the amendment read, and then I will explain that. I hope attention will be given while the amendment is being read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 26, page 23, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, further, That subject only to such general limitations as may be necessary to exempt navigation from artificial obstructions, all land and shoal water below mean high tide on the shores, bays, and inlets of Bering Sea, within the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be subject to exploration for gold and other precious metals by citizens of the United States, or persons who have legally declared their intentions to become such, under such reasonable rules and regulations as the miners in organized mining districts may have heretofore made or may hereafter make governing the temporary possession thereof for exploration and mining purposes until otherwise provided by law: Provided, further, That the rules and regulations established by the miners shall not allow the location of mining claims larger in area than placer claims under the laws of the United States; and all permits heretofore granted authorizing any person or persons, corporation or company to excavate or mine under any of said waters are hereby revoked and declared null and void.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Now have the other amendment read.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I ask for the reading of the other amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then we can compare them.

The SECRETARY. Amendment proposed by Mr. WOLCOTT as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CARTER; at the end of section 26, page 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to declare and publish proper rules and regulations whereby the auriferous deposits in Alaska which lie below the low-water mark of the ocean and its tributaries shall, if feasible, be open to exploration and development by citizens of the United States or those who have declared their intention of becoming such citizens, which said rules and regulations shall, so far as is practicable, be in accordance with existing statutes as applicable to placer mining and shall limit the area of each claim to the acreage now allowed by law.

The rules and customs of miners in the mining district nearest said deposits shall, when not inconsistent with such regulations, be recognized and shall govern the working of said deposits.

The authority of the Secretary of War respecting said auriferous deposits shall be limited to policing the same and to protecting navigation as he is now by law empowered.

Any grants or rights heretofore granted respecting said deposits by any authority are hereby declared void and of no further effect.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the miners have been allowed to make rules and regulations for fifty-two years. They were, until 1866, allowed to make rules and regulations without any limitation of law whatever. After Congress acted and confirmed their rights as then existing, it made a maximum claim and provided a minimum amount of work to be done to hold possession of it. But that was all that was done, except to allow them to get patents. But the rules and regulations as to the size of claims, within the maximum, and the amount of work necessary to hold the claim, above the maximum, has been left to them up to this time. The conditions which it is supposed might happen, the outrages that might be committed, if they have ever been committed, are very rare. I think the Senate would be very much astonished to witness the deliberation of a miners' meeting. There is a common law understood by the miners that no meeting shall be had until full notice is given.

I should hate to be one of a mining community that would attempt to get up a meeting without having the invitation extended to all citizens of the United States there. It would be a very dangerous proceeding. They are careful about it, and it is the common law that the notice shall be full and complete; and I have known them to meet, and, on the suggestion that the notice had not been sufficient, they would adjourn, even in the hottest contest, to have them all present. They would discuss at length, with as much deliberation as you do here in the Senate, the rights of the parties. It has been going on for fifty years, until the miners have become expert legislators with regard to these matters, and I undertake to say that the result of their legislation over this most complicated subject has been most satisfactory.

Now, the Land Department have had to deal with rectangular formations. They have had more difficulties than the miners have in carrying out their regulations. We appropriated for the last forty years, I think, an average of $200,000 for special agents to go through the agricultural regions and adjust things. See the difficulty you had in adjusting the swamp-land claims and the litigation and the scandals you had about it; and you are constantly having it. The system of allowing the miners to make their own rules and regulations and allowing the local courts to decide upon them has worked so admirably in the United States that our laws and regulations have become proverbially the best that ever existed in any mining country.

Now, in this case we are following the precedents of fifty years. The question was discussed in 1866 whether it was safe to allow the miners to legislate. The reply was that "they have legislated and a million men live in those mining regions whose rights depend upon the legislation, and nobody complains. States have been formed and rights of property have been preserved. All we ask of you is not to interfere with the system." Then they wanted to bring it here and have it administered in the Department; but when the fact was brought to the attention of Congress that the miners had done so well, they agreed to let well enough alone and let them continue. In this case the citizens of the United States are allowed to make rules and regulations. If they are unfair rules, they will call a miners' meeting and discuss them very carefully. They are very careful to preserve vested rights. There is no complaint that miners have ever trampled upon vested rights when there was a deliberate meeting. The more excitement there is the more care is always taken to adjust matters to the satisfaction of everybody. I believe we had better not inaugurate the policy of having any other rules for mining—any rules made here—because, if you establish it in this case without much thought, you may interfere with a system that has worked well for fifty years.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then the Senator, I suppose, is opposed to keeping in the word "temporary" in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Montana. It says:

Under such reasonable rules and regulations as the miners in organized mining districts may have heretofore made or may hereafter make governing the temporary possession thereof for exploration and mining purposes until otherwise provided by law.

The Senator would like to strike that out and leave it as a permanent arrangement?

Mr. STEWART. I will say, in explanation of that, that the land to which this applies does not belong to the United States. The United States is only a temporary occupant of it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. To whom does it belong?

Mr. STEWART. It belongs to the State, or is held in trust by the United States for the future State. It is only a temporary right that the United States has. I suppose that is what was in the mind of the Senator. I do not think that will make any practical difference. They will go on until it becomes a State, until the owner has a right to legislate—that is, the State. They will go along under the temporary trusteeship of the United States. So long as the temporary trusteeship of the United States remains in this land, this temporary law will continue. I suppose that is what he had reference to. That will answer the purpose so far as that is concerned.

This amendment confines the size of claims within the maximum provided by the statute, that they shall not exceed the amount allowed in other cases. They can not make them larger so as to monopolize the land by spreading the claims along the coast, so that a few men may get control. They will undoubtedly make it less when they discuss it. When you get ten or fifteen thousand men there, who have come to work, they will divide it up equitably without robbing anybody. When they get together you can trust them; and if you make rules and regulations which have to be interpreted and go out there——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Suppose there should be an exceptional case where they did not do that.

Mr. STEWART. There might be an exceptional case where the Secretary of the Interior would make a mistake in his regulations. He generally makes them right, I know, but he may make a mistake.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They can be revised.

Mr. STEWART. He has not been able to make rules and regulations to avoid scandals in the Land Department.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That does not answer my question. Suppose there should be an exceptional case and that some bad miners should get together who would deliberately do wrong; does the Senator think they should be above law and should not be restrained in any way?

Mr. STEWART. Such a case has never occurred to my knowledge. Where a majority of the miners in a community of ten or fifteen thousand get together their self-interests will make them good. I have known violently bad men to be there, but there is among the American people a public sentiment in favor of fair dealing that compels them to act about fair. If a few men undertook to be bad, it would be a very uncomfortable neighborhood for them to live in. They would deal with them in a way that would be uncomfortable. Questions like this come up all the time, and the miners have solved them. I do not think you had better change the method. This is an innovation. Leave it there, within the limit prescribed for the maximum claim, and you will never hear of any trouble there. It will be settled and settled squarely.

Mr. QUARLES. I do not rise, Mr. President, to discuss the general subject of the mining laws, because I am not familiar with them; but among the many men who have their attention turned toward this great, wonderful district are constituents of mine, who are investing large sums of money this winter in machinery which they propose to take to this district during the coming season. I ask in behalf of those men that when they reach this mining district there may be some settled, intelligent rule which will guide their action and protect their interests. I am totally opposed to having those men, when they reach this country, left to the erratic tribunal known as a miners' meeting, for two reasons.

I quite agree with what has been said, that as to the ordinary work of mining, with which these men are familiar, according to their rough sense of justice, they generally arrive at a correct conclusion, but the theory of my friend the Senator from Montana is to turn over to them a subject-matter with which they are not familiar. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that here is an entirely new scheme of mining, with which, so far as I am advised, these miners are not familiar. It is surf dredging. If that has been done before, and there are any precedents or rules or history with which these men are familiar, I am not so advised. You are seeking to turn over to that primitive and erratic tribunal, a miners' meeting, an entirely new jurisdiction. It is not within their experience. They have handled the spade and the pick and the rocker. They can control that kind of mining, but the mining that is under consideration now is to be carried on by expensive and intricate machinery—the steam dredge, the electric crane; and I know of another apparatus which is to run upon a track along the shore and reach out a hundred feet into the ocean and there, by the sucker principle, draw up the sand and carry it back to the shore. There are hundreds of schemes of that kind which may or may not be feasible, but they will all be there this spring.

I wish to ask my good friend if he is disposed to turn that subject over to a miners' meeting and let them legislate in regard to the operation of machinery and the conflicting rights of these men with different machines, about which they know nothing? I submit, Mr. President, that the proposition of my friend the Senator from Colorado is the more intelligent and the safer. I ask to have some definite rule formulated by the head of this Department that has control of all mining matters, and let the men who go there with machinery have some definite fixed line of jurisdiction and of regulation, and then according to his scheme the minor details are to be regulated by the miners. But let the general fundamental principle, which regulates the rights of these men and which is valuable, be controlled by central authority.

Let me suppose a case, Mr. President. My first proposition is that these men, by reason of their experience or their training, are not competent to take original jurisdiction of this new subject. There is another proposition.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that the great body of the miners who have gone there, many of them quite as intelligent as Senators here—I have known many—when they see the situation will be as well qualified to judge how much ground is necessary, and how it shall be located, and how to work these things? They are all interested in having this ground worked. Do you not think they can provide for it? They have provided for many more difficult things. As to machinery, the Senator thinks they are not accustomed to great enterprises.

Instead of organizing for them and granting privileges to them, he had better go around the country and see what enterprises have been carried out under arrangements which they have made and the facilities they have afforded, which have been reasonable and wise, much more so than any regulations they could possibly make here. It might be possible that regulations might be made here by which a man would allow his friends who were going out with machinery to monopolize a whole lot when they got there. I could give some examples of what I have seen in the way of machinery. I have seen machinery, in 1849, built here and taken around the Horn. It would go out to California and would go up the rivers. I think the machinery and works there will be invented on the ground. That always has been the case. They will make inventions there. The new inventions and new appliances that are made outside by persons who have not seen the ground do not meet the emergency. All such attempts have failed so far. They have fifty years of failure. It might be possible that arrangements could be made to protect them, but when they got there with their machinery probably it would not be good for anything.

Let them go there and they will find their rights of property protected. They will have the miners behind them to protect them. There will be no trouble about that at all. Millions and millions have been invested under regulations of miners. The great mines of the whole country were located and provision made for working them by miners. They always made their regulations to suit the emergency before Congress legislated, and I do not see why they can not be trusted in Alaska. A better population, a wiser population, a smarter population than have gone there in the last six months and are going there this spring never before went to a new country. Those who are going there are the very best people, and they will be able to meet the emergency better than you can meet it here. For men to sit down in a back parlor and make arbitrary regulations without seeing the ground and knowing the necessities, it seems to me is unreasonable, in view of what has occurred.

You might make regulations here that would fix it up very well for one man, but he would be the only one you would have in view. You would fix it up for one fellow so that he would have a good show when he got there, but he would be the only one who would have it. It is an ex parte matter when you do so. When they go to the Interior Department and want regulations made, it is ex parte; but they can make no ex parte regulations on the ground. I do not want any ex parte regulations made to take property away from people there. I do not want regulations made here. The Secretary of the Interior will have the best intentions, but, knowing nothing about it, a person who comes here and suggests and gives information will have the inside track, and he will try the case without hearing the other side of it. I want them to try their cases when all parties there participate. I do not want to have any ex parte disposition made of these mines.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, it is said that necessity knows no law. That is the foundation of the miners' meeting. There is no code; there is no tribunal that is accessible; and therefore in a rough way the men control these matters under regulations which they understand. But in order intelligently to frame the rules which the Secretary of the Interior will be called upon to formulate, there is involved a knowledge of the operation of machinery which these miners have not.

When the Senator from Nevada interrupted me I was about to make this suggestion. It is well known that there will be from 20,000 to 30,000 people rushing into that district this spring. These miners can not be in session all the time in their miners' meeting; they can give only a limited time to legislation. I submit to you, Mr. President, that these miners are going to be overwhelmed with questions that will arise within the limits of the ordinary scheme of mining which will require them to devote their whole attention that can be taken from their ordinary labor to these ordinary questions.

Now, suppose these gentlemen with their machinery arrive there and the miners see fit to have no meeting, what are you going to do about it? They are a self-constituted body. You can not convene their meeting. They simply tell you that they have business on hand to such an extent that they can not take up this subject. What are these men going to do? Have they to sit there all summer and await the pleasure of these men?

Mr. STEWART. No——

Mr. QUARLES. Manifestly not, Mr. President. Before these men take their machinery to Alaska there ought to be some rules and regulations which they can understand and they can build their machines with reference to the regulations. I am heartily in favor of the substitute introduced by my friend from Colorado.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this is a subject on which I think I am entitled to at least express my view, having been engaged in mining for over forty years and having gone to the home of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] before there was any city there.

Now, in regard to this miners' meeting to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers, if he ever attended a miners' meeting he will find men there—just as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] said—men with as much ability and as well versed in law as some gentlemen on the floor of the Senate. He will find them attending that meeting with a determination to have justice. He will find those rugged miners with six-shooters, perhaps, in their belts, who have gone there to see that every man is protected in what they believe to be his rights, after due notice has been given and posted that there will be a meeting of the miners at Bobtail Gulch or Gregory Lead, as the Senator knows so well in his own State. I have attended miners' meetings at that gulch.

I want to say that the miners in those meetings go directly to the point. They do not discuss constitutional questions. They say, "We have come out here, and here is Jim Brown, who came with me. Now, then, the law provides that we may have a water claim here; we may have a placer-mining claim here, or a lead claim consisting of so many feet under the law." But at the miners' meeting called, where the secretary takes an account of all the proceedings, the meeting will say, in place of 20 acres, for example, "We will divide it up into 10 acres, because there are so many of us here and we want to be fair; 10 acres is more than Brown can work."

Now, Mr. President, whether you enact a law here under the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, or whatever law you may enact here, it will matter not to these rugged miners in Cape Nome. They will meet in their miners' conventions and they will enact a law there that will regulate whatever may be the wishes of a majority of the miners of that district, regardless of anything that we may enact here, until the camp becomes older and comes under the jurisdiction of the courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I should like to make one observation in reply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and I shall occupy but a few moments. I agree with him perfectly that we are all struggling to obtain the best possible results.

I regret that in the comment which I thought proper to make upon the lack of knowledge possessed by the Departments of the Government, the lack of knowledge existing here, that it would be better to transfer this subject to a local self-government than to attempt, in ignorance, to deal with it, he assumed that I thereby sought to cast a reflection upon the great Department of the Government. No such intention obtained, I am sure, on the part of any Senator upon this floor. No one has greater respect for the patient, capable, working force in the Interior Department. I know pretty nearly every one of the many men dealing with the land laws and the rules and regulations both in the General Land Office and the office of the Secretary. I encountered men in that Land Department capable of rendering profound and able opinions from the Supreme Bench or any other law tribunal in this country. They happened by the fortunes of politics to drop into a Department groove, and they never have been able to get out.

But, Mr. President, that does not answer the question. They have not the knowledge of the situation. I object to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, first, because it will lead to a conflict of jurisdiction between the civil authorities and the War Department, in that it gives to the Secretary of War the policing of these waters. I object to it because it extends to all the shore line of Alaska. The amendment I have presented is confined to the shore line of the Bering Sea. The application of this law to southeastern Alaska, where vast enterprises have been built up and now exist and are being prosecuted, would lead to many hardships and controversies. I object to it because it takes no account of the men who in the early days of that Cape Nome camp, hazarding life and at great personal inconvenience, went forward and developed that coast, so as to make it an inviting field for enterprise and enterprising men all over the country.

The propositions presented are simple indeed. The proposition of the Senator from Colorado makes all this system of rules departmental government. The rule would be made in Washington and sent forth 8,000 miles to govern conditions concerning which the writer of the rule had little or no knowledge. The other proposition, the amendment I have had the honor to present, gives the right and transfers the making of the rule to the men who have to deal with the hard conditions that will confront our citizens at Cape Nome.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Now let us vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Montana a question. There seems to be here a wrong impression, and that is that these miners are to make laws contrary to the laws of the United States. I want to know if that is in contemplation by the amendment he has offered, or whether it is that they are to make their local laws subject to all the laws of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, and will suggest an amendment, with the permission of the Senator from Colorado, which will take but one moment. I will strike out the words "allow the location of mining claims larger in area than placer claims under the" and insert in lieu thereof the words "be in conflict with the mining laws of;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the rules and regulations established by the miners shall not be in conflict with the mining laws of the United States; and all permits heretofore granted authorizing any person or persons, corporation, or company to excavate or mine under any of said waters are hereby revoked and declared null and void.

Mr. STEWART. That will cover it.

Mr. SCOTT. That covers it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course that does not touch the substitute. We vote first upon the substitute and then upon the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS rose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I hope we may have a vote. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I want to say one word. This is a very important question. It is a new phase of mining that has never occurred before. I know my friend is impatient.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is nearly 2 o'clock.

Mr. STEWART. And we can not get a vote after that time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. However, go ahead.

Mr. PERKINS. I have an object lesson here. I want to show you where we are dredging now. But it is 2 o'clock, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I appeal to the Senator from Ohio to just let us have a vote on this substitute; that is all.

Mr. BERRY. Let us have the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. PERKINS. I wanted to say merely a word or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to yield for any speech, but I am willing to yield for a vote to be taken—simply for a vote.

Mr. BERRY. Let us vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business, without objection, will be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of taking a vote on the pending amendments. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BERRY and Mr. STEWART called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. He is absent, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If I had a right to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], but I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. As he is absent, I will have to withhold my vote. If I were at liberty, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator that we transfer our pairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. However, I do not know how the Senator from South Carolina would vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would vote "nay" if I had a chance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call will proceed.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANNA (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HANNA. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. They are engaged at the present time in a hearing on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator was not understood at the desk.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. They are engaged in public business at the present time.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with that Senator, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. McBRIDE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. As he is absent, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I vote "nay" under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HEITFELD. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In the absence of a quorum, I take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] so that I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. In order to make a quorum I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WELLINGTON. I suggest, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] has withdrawn his vote, that we exchange pairs. He is paired, I understand, with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. I suggest that if we transfer those pairs mutually, we can both vote.

Mr. HEITFELD. Very well. I vote "yea."

Mr. WELLINGTON. I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT of New York. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bard,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Spooner,
Clay,	Gear,	McComas,	Taliaferro,
Davis,	Heitfeld,	McMillan,	Wolcott.
Fairbanks,	Kean,	Mason,
Foraker,	Kenney,	Morgan,
Foster,	Lindsay,	Quarles,

NAYS—28.

Allen,	Deboe,	McCumber,	Sewell,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Nelson,	Shoup,
Bate,	Frye,	Perkins,	Stewart,
Berry,	Hansbrough,	Pettus,	Tillman,
Carter,	Harris,	Platt, N. Y.	Turley,
Clark, Mont.	Hawley,	Ross,	Wellington,
Clark, Wyo.	Kyle,	Scott,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—38.

Aldrich,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Rawlins,
Allison,	Cullom,	McLaurin,	Simon,
Baker,	Daniel,	Mallory,	Sullivan,
Beveridge,	Depew,	Martin,	Teller,
Burrows,	Hale,	Money,	Thurston,
Butler,	Hanna,	Penrose,	Turner,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Vest,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	Warren.
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Cockrell,	McBride,	Proctor,

So Mr. WOLCOTT'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORAKER rose.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator from Ohio to yield for a moment that the formal question on the amendment we have been discussing may be submitted to the Senate. If it is to lead to a roll call I shall not insist on the question being put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being House bill 8245.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. FORAKER. The roll call had been ordered upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama providing for the coinage of silver and gold. I ask that the amendment may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, after section 7, to add the following:

SEC. —. That any citizen of the United States who shall deposit for coinage, at any mint in the United States, silver bullion of the value of not less than $100, estimated at the rate of 371¼ grains of pure silver per dollar, and at the same time and as a part of the same deposit shall also deposit gold bullion for coinage of equal or greater value, estimated at the rate of 23.22 grains of pure gold per dollar, shall be entitled to have such gold and silver bullion coined in such lawful denominations of gold and silver coins of the United States as he shall designate, and after such deposit none of said bullion shall be withdrawn as bullion from such mint, but such gold and silver bullion shall be coined and the coin shall be delivered to the depositor, his or her assigns or legal representatives, in discharge of the certificate of deposit issued for such deposit.

The superintendent of such mint shall issue to such depositors certificates of deposit, in accordance with this act, and shall refine and coin such bullion of gold and silver for and on account of such depositors in the same manner as if the same was owned by and was coined on account of the Government of the United States, and the charges for refining and coining such bullion shall be the same as are lawfully made in such cases.

No gold or silver bullion shall be deposited for coinage under this act that has been coined or manufactured as an article of commerce, or that is not the product of mines in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the adoption of the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and I have agreed to transfer our pairs; so that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], who has a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], will stand paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and the Senator from Illinois and I will be at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. WETMORE (when his name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], is unavoidably absent. A pair for him has been arranged with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURROWS. I am advised that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], with whom I am paired, if present, would vote as I shall upon this proposition. I therefore take the liberty of voting, and vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] that we transfer our pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], which will allow both the Senator from Delaware and myself to vote.

Mr. KENNEY. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Under that arrangement I vote "nay."

Mr. KENNEY. I vote "yea."

Mr. MASON. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Mississippi has not voted.

Mr. MASON. I have a general pair with that Senator. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT. I inquire of the Chair whether the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SCOTT. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McBRIDE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMON], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I am generally paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]; but I understand that the pair has been transferred, so that the Senator from Indiana stands paired on this vote with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. That leaves me at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to inquire if any pair has been announced with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that no pair has been announced with the Senator from New York.

Mr. PROCTOR. Then I will transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allen,	Clark, Mont.	Heitfeld,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Clay,	Kenney,	Stewart,
Bate,	Culberson,	Money,	Turley.
Berry,	Harris,	Morgan,

NAYS—33.

Baker,	Frye,	Lodge,	Quarles,
Bard,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Ross,
Burrows,	Gear,	McComas,	Sewell,
Clark, Wyo.	Hale,	McCumber,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Nelson,	Wetmore.
Fairbanks,	Kean,	Perkins,
Foraker,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.
Foster,	Lindsay,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—39.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Allison,	Depew,	Mason,	Teller,
Beveridge,	Elkins,	Penrose,	Thurston,
Butler,	Hanna,	Pettigrew,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.	Turner,
Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Pritchard,	Vest,
Chandler,	Jones, Nev.	Rawlins,	Warren,
Chilton,	McEnery,	Scott,	Wellington,
Cockrell,	McLaurin,	Simon,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Mallory,	Sullivan,

So the amendment of Mr. MORGAN was rejected.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] wants to speak on the bill now under consideration, and before offering any more amendments I yield to him that he may address the Senate.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator from Minnesota will permit me a moment, I wish to give notice that at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks I shall move an executive session.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am so desirous that a vote be had upon this bill at the earliest day possible that I have thought it better to address the Senate this morning with much less preparation and much less at length than I otherwise would. This fact will cause me to omit, as I might not have done, some discussion of the constitutional questions involved in this debate, and many other matters which, in my judgment, are auxiliary and collateral to the subject as I shall now consider it. Indeed, so far as I am concerned, I do not think, Mr. President, that any argument on my part is necessary concerning those constitutional questions. I am content, for the present at least, and in this connection, to rest my views upon the almost judicial deliverances upon that subject of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. ROSS].

I shall try, Mr. President, with all temperateness of expression, and certainly with temperateness of feeling, to submit to the Senate my views upon this matter as it now stands. It is an important question, and, in my judgment, it is a nonpartisan question. No remark that I shall make will have, intentionally, the least tinge of partisanship in my endeavor to adjust a most unfortunate complication into which this measure has fallen.

Mr. President, I shall speak more particularly to what is known as the House bill, which is embedded in and has become a part of the bill for the civil government of Puerto Rico now under consideration. That bill provides that a tariff rate of 15 per cent as between the United States and Puerto Rico, both ways, of the present tariff duties shall be levied. It also provides that internal-revenue taxes shall, upon goods exported from Puerto Rico to the United States and vice versa, be levied at the ports of entry.

It can not be denied, Mr. President, that at the time this bill was reported elsewhere a tide of public opinion and dissent set in against the very principle upon which it is based. That dissent began with surprise; it progressed to remonstrance; and from thence it went to indignation. It was not the protest of the members of any party. The dissent did not coincide at all upon party lines. It came from every walk of life; it was communicated through every avenue of thought; and it is based upon this principle, that as to Puerto Rico there should be an unrestrained freedom of commercial intercourse; that as to Puerto Rico, considered as Puerto Rico, under the particular circumstances of the case and what has taken place in regard to that island, there should be free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States.

Mr. President, upon that particular contention there is in this body and elsewhere an infinite variety of opinion, not only as to the two opposite views, but as to the minor shades and collateral controversies that darken the entire subject. It has been asserted and denied that we have the right to legislate by way of imposing tariff duties as proposed, and all sorts of questions, all sorts of arguments, all sorts of objections have gathered around this controversy and obscured it with words.

I gave notice this morning of two amendments which I intend to propose to the pending bill in regard to this House measure. I shall only explain one of them at present, and that amendment is this: The creation of Puerto Rico into an internal-revenue district; no stamp tax to be levied in that district; 15 per cent of the internal-revenue tax to be laid in that district upon all taxable articles, with the exception of distilled spirits and tobacco and the manufactures thereof, upon which internal-revenue taxes shall be levied in Puerto Rico; that there shall be free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States, and that the law shall continue until the 1st of March, 1902.

Whatever may be said as in contention upon the other part of the subject, whether, considering Puerto Rico as a dependency or as a colony or as a part of the United States, we can or can not levy tariff duties as between that island and us, there can be no doubt whatever upon this general principle, that, so far as internal-revenue taxes are concerned in Puerto Rico, no such question can arise under the abstract and inherent power of this Government to levy them.

Now, Mr. President, why insist, I submit in all candor, that a tariff shall be levied and that no other mode of taxation shall be employed? Why, when dealing with the question of revenue and taxation, do some of our friends here seem to close their eyes to the consideration that there may be another way of solving this difficulty and of raising the revenue which will relieve Congress and the country entirely from the considerations which have vexed the minds of everybody, a way of doing it, indubitably constitutional in its general theory, however it may be subject to exception as to its details? It seems to me that a proper consideration of the subject ought to incline everybody——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator object to an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I must decline to yield, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. It is just for an inquiry.

Mr. DAVIS. I must decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Why, Mr. President, insist upon a tariff by a bill which by its very terms is so temporary and ephemeral as to expire in less than two years from this day? Why insist upon the perpetration of a measure of this character, which is agitating public opinion and has divided public sentiment, when it would be far better to let all things alone and allow existing conditions to continue?

I can not see why there can be any objection to the course proposed by the amendment which I shall introduce at the proper time. It certainly would, in my opinion, go very far to satisfy and appease the protests which have been made against the proposed measure. As to Puerto Rico itself, I undertake to say that it would be acceptable, because when the delegates from that island were here before the committee, whose report I hold in my hand, protesting against a tariff and pleading for unrestrained freedom of commercial intercourse, upon this very question of internal revenue the following proceedings took place, as will be found on page 179 of the report. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] was examining one of the delegates from Puerto Rico, Mr. Larrinaga.

Mr. PERKINS. What effect do you think the application of our internal-revenue laws to the island would have? We have a tax upon alcoholic spirits, and you make a great deal of rum, and there will probably be breweries established there, and there is a proprietary and stamp tax. Do you think the people would like that system?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Yes, sir; we would accept it. Our people are conscious of their duties, as well as of their rights, and they would only think it fair.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you now impose any tax on distilleries?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Yes, sir; there is a tax levied.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you remember what it is?

Mr. LARRINAGA. I could not tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. Our tax is $1.10 per gallon. Your rum would be taxed at that rate if our internal-revenue system were applied as here. Could it stand that tax?

Mr. LARRINAGA. The feeling of the people, I believe, is that it would be right.

So that, if I interpret the signs of the times correctly, as to this country there is the utmost disapproval of this measure by a very large majority of the exponents of public sentiment, to say the least; and as to the island of Puerto Rico itself, its representatives were here, and their declaration in answer to the direct question was that they would be content with the internal-revenue system, applying, as it does, in large part to distilleries, which are already there, and which were licensed under the laws of Spain.

Mr. President, Puerto Rico came to this country under peculiar circumstances. It cost the United States $3,000,000 to disarm the insurgents in Cuba and to buy their guns. It did not cost us a dollar to disarm any army in Puerto Rico, for there was none of the natives; nor were we called upon to pay a dollar for any arms whatever. The people of that island welcomed the American Army as those who went before them welcomed the Spanish discoverers, with rejoicing and with every expectation and hope. From the moment of the landing of our army, commencing with General Miles's proclamation, down through all the official declarations upon the subject, they have been promised the rights and immunities of American citizens, and our plain duty has been declared to be to give them free commercial intercourse with the United States, with no wall of customs duties intervening.

The bill which passed the Senate a few days ago in respect to the government of Hawaii imposed no tariff duties between that island, which we erected into a government, and the United States. It, too, is a semitropical island; it has the same range of agricultural productions as Puerto Rico. If there is any reason whatever to impose a tariff upon the products of Puerto Rico, there was the same reason for imposing a tariff upon the products of Hawaii. Wherein lies the difference? Wherein, on principle—both of them being outlying possessions of the United States, call them what you will—is the situation as to Puerto Rico different from that of Hawaii?

Why, Mr. President, this whole project and conception of imposing tariff duties upon the dependency of Puerto Rico self-generates objections wherever it is considered, and they also spring from every point of cotemporary history. I hold in my hand the convention entered into between the United States and Great Britain for reciprocity between the British West India Islands, six in number, and the United States—islands lying in the same sea with Puerto Rico, raising the same products, and having in a great degree the same character of inhabitants. In this treaty article after article in a long schedule, in schedule after schedule as to the several treaties, is put upon the free list, so that the English subjects of Jamaica, the Barbadoes, and the other islands can import into the United States the very articles upon which the United States proposes to levy its duty in the interchange of commerce between this country and our own people in Puerto Rico.

Mr. GALLINGER. The treaty has not been ratified.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend the Senator from New Hampshire remarks that the treaty has not been ratified. I did not say that it had been, but I might feel inclined to ask, Is it proposed to reject these treaties in order to justify the infliction of this tax upon Puerto Rico? It was the view of those intrusted primarily with the duty of negotiating treaties not long ago that it was fair negotiation and enlightened statesmanship to put many articles of produce of the British West Indies colonies upon the free list, and in direct and absolute contradiction of those views it is the view of those who are advocating this particular House bill that a course of conduct as to Puerto Rico directly the contrary shall be taken.

Mr. President, there have been all sorts of arguments to sustain this bill. At first it was charity. That argument has been taken away by the passage, since this measure passed the House, of the bill appropriating $2,095,000, the accumulations of existing conditions up to January 1, to the use and benefit of the island of Puerto Rico, and of subsequent accumulations while that law remains in force.

It has been said that this may be a precedent as to the Philippines, and that we must now inflict injustice upon the inhabitants of Puerto Rico because, forsooth, at some time, perhaps years hence or perhaps sooner, when rebellion is crushed in those islands and the authority of the United States is established, there may be some difficult questions of that kind in dealing with the Philippines. Mr. President, sufficient unto the day is the evil and also the good thereof. I would not wreak or work an injustice upon Puerto Rico by any such contingent remainder of apprehension as to the Philippines.

It is said that American labor and American industry need protection by this legislation as against Puerto Rico. It is too small to consider. But, Mr. President, if it is needed, what protection to American labor or American industry is 15 per cent of the Dingley rates upon any theory on which any protective tariff was ever framed? When the question of the Philippines comes to be considered, I do not care by what party in power, the interests of American labor will be protected so far as any apprehension can be entertained from that source.

Puerto Rico is 700 miles from our coast; the Philippines 8,000 miles. Puerto Rico is an actual and geographical dependency of the American continent; the Philippines belong to Asia. Puerto Rico can enter our political system. In the Philippines we have laid our hands upon the wealth and commerce of the Orient; and in less than twenty-five years, in my opinion, we shall see a return therefrom over that great ocean and upon the Western coasts of this continent that will put to confusion and refute every objection that has ever been made to that acquisition. When the time comes to adjust and settle the relations of this country to the Philippines, the rights of American labor will be protected by any party that may be in power.

Mr. President, how inconsistent this whole subject-matter seems when we consider it in detail? I understand, and I think I am reliably informed, that the provisions of the coasting laws of the United States are extended to Puerto Rico, so that all commerce between this country and that dependency must be done in vessels enrolled, licensed for the coasting trade, and owned in the United States. While we compel products from here carried there and products from there brought here in such ships of the United States, to submit to this proposed tariff imposition, we still retain and claim the advantage, and we will not yield it up, that our coast marine shall have the exclusive privilege of carrying taxed articles from a dependency of this country to the States, from us to our children and from our children to us.

It has been said, Mr. President, that it is very necessary to get a decision of the highest court of the land upon the question of the inequality of taxtion which arises under all the bills which have been presented on this subject. I agree. I think it is very important that such a decision shall be had as soon as possible, and hence in the amendment which I shall at the proper time lay before the Senate those questions are raised as is in the House bill in a variety of shapes. My amendment provides that there shall be no stamp tax; that the percentum of internal revenue tax shall be only 15 per cent as to everything except tobacco, and the manufactures thereof, and rum. The case can be as easily raised under one act as under the other, so that no advantage is possessed by the House bill in that respect over the amendment which I shall have the honor to propose at a very early day.

Mr. President, I think I could be as firm as anybody against a sudden, convulsive, transitory public opinion, but when the opinion of the public, whose servants we are, is heard, through every organ of expression, week after week, and swelling in intensity, volume, and indignation, and speaks with intelligence to us, it will be well for us to hear it, for it will make itself heard. It is said that this subject is not understood. Mr. President, it is well understood. It is in vain that any man can claim—he need not lay the flattering unction to his soul—that the editors of the great journals throughout the land do not understand the subject just as well as we. It is futile to pretend that the mass of the people throughout the country do not understand a subject so simple as this. They understand perfectly well the difference between building up a wall, which bars commercial intercourse between this country and one of its dependencies, and a system of taxation such as I shall propose, which, with no difference except in degree, imposes on Puerto Rico the same system or the same principle that is imposed in the United States.

Mr. President, in my opinion there is one thing which has contributed and will contribute more than anything else to the strength and earnestness of these admonitions that we have been receiving from a people who do understand this subject and understand it well. There are two subjects of scientific taxation out of which all civilized nations—the United States included—derive the most of their revenue to-day. Those articles are distilled spirits and tobacco. In the House bill there is not the imposition of a tithe of a mill upon either of those articles while they remain in Puerto Rico. Tobacco and rum, the greatest and most fruitful subject of taxation, while they remain in Puerto Rico are absolutely untaxed. The subjects of taxation which bear the heaviest burdens of our United States, State, and municipal governments there, of all the places in our dominion, go absolutely scot-free of any taxation whatever. What is the exchange for it? Fifteen per cent taxation on everything else that goes to Puerto Rico from the United States or comes to the United States from Puerto Rico.

It is so simple and easy to reverse that entire policy and way of doing things and make rum and tobacco in Puerto Rico bear the weight of taxation, as they do here and elsewhere throughout the civilized world, and make communication between Puerto Rico and the United States as to all goods exported or imported free, as it is between the United States and Alaska—it is so easy to do it, it would relieve the situation so completely in every way, that I am surprised and shall be surprised if the suggestion does not commend itself to the calm and deliberate reflection of everybody.

Mr. President, what will the good people of this country say and what are they saying and what have they a right to say concerning the bill of the House as it is presented in the body of this bill for the civil government of Puerto Rico? As to Puerto Rico, they say free rum; but tax the flour out of which is made the bread that people eat—we condemn it. They say free rum; but tax their clothing—we condemn it. They say free rum; but tax their boots and shoes—we condemn it. They say free rum; but tax the medicines which minister to the sick—we condemn it. When you consider, drawing the contrast between these systems sharply, as I do, that one is a system bitterly contested in this particular instance and upon grounds on which all parties profess to have the greatest confidence, and the other is established upon a principle at least which no one seems inclined to dispute; that one subject is a difficult method of taxation and the other the simplest known of all civilized fiscal processes; that the moral sense of the American people will be satisfied by placing the traffic on rum upon the same ground in Puerto Rico as in the United States, and that it will not be satisfied if it is not so done; that the yield of revenue from the taxation of rum alone upon the rates of our internal-revenue taxation, that island producing 1,500,000 gallons a year, would be over a million five hundred thousand dollars annually, while no living man can tell how much or how little this tariff imposition will yield; when it is a matter of more than doubt whether the imposition upon goods going from the United States is not an export duty, and therefore forbidden by the Constitution; when with those contrasts it would seem perfectly certain that the American people would approve the internal-revenue system instead of the other, it does seem to me, Mr. President, that as a matter of considerate judgment they will not and we ought not to hesitate a moment which way to act.

Mr. President, I have said about all I want to say on this bill. It has been imperfectly said, inadequately said, but it has been said with the most thorough and unalterable conviction that what I have said is right, absolutely right, right not in a party sense, but politically, morally, and economically right. In my judgment, the only course that can be logically or wisely pursued under present conditions is to abandon this pernicious mockery of a tariff between Puerto Rico and the United States and return to the path of plain duty and pursue it to its logical and beneficial consequences.

Mr. MASON. I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, after the routine business, I shall submit some remarks upon the pending Puerto Rican legislation.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Porto Rico, and for other purposes, be reprinted with rearrangement of sections and amendments to be proposed by Mr. FORAKER on behalf of the committee.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 29, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 28, 1900.

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS IN THE MARINE CORPS.

William Garland Fay, a citizen of New York;
Robert Yancey Rhea, a citizen of Kentucky;
Frank Jacob Schwable, a citizen of Ohio;
Eli Thompson Fryer, a citizen of New Jersey;
Thomas Holcomb, jr., a citizen of Delaware; and John P. V. Gridley, a citizen of Pennsylvania.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. John M. Orchard to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy from the 18th day of February, 1900 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. Commander Richard G. Davenport, promoted.

Lieut. John N. Jordan to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy from the 9th day of March, 1900 (subject to the examinations required by law), vice Lieut. Commander Edward B. Barry, promoted.

Commander Henry W. Lyon to be a captain in the Navy from the 27th day of March, 1900, vice Capt. Charles S. Cotton, promoted.

Lieut. Augustus F. Fechteler, to be a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, from the 27th day of March, 1900, vice Lieut. Commander Herbert Winslow, promoted.

Christian Joy Peoples, a citizen of California, to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy, from the 27th day of March, 1900, to fill a vacancy existing in that grade.

THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY.

Second Lieut. Samuel B. McIntyre, Thirty-seventh Infantry, to be first lieutenant, vice Sleeper, promoted.

The nomination of Second Lieut. Alvin K. Baskette, Thirty-seventh United States Volunteer Infantry, for promotion to be first lieutenant, same regiment, is withdrawn, and the nomination of Second Lieut. Samuel B. McIntyre for promotion in his place is made for the reason that it is found upon a revision of the records that Lieutenant McIntyre, having the same date of appointment as Lieutenant Baskette as second lieutenant, had longer prior service under commission, and is therefore entitled to seniority and to promotion in advance of Lieutenant Baskette.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Stuart F. McClearn, of Massachusetts, to be collector of customs for the district of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, to succeed Charles H. Bateman, whose term of office will expire by limitation March 31, 1900.

Isaiah J. McCottrie, of South Carolina, to be collector of customs for the district of Georgetown, in the State of South Carolina, to succeed A. McP. Hamby, jr., resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

Emma Hapgood, to be postmaster at Marysville, in the county of Yuba and State of California, in the place of Charles Hapgood, deceased.

J. W. Harvey, to be postmaster at Monrovia, in the county of Los Angeles and State of California, in the place of J. F. Banning, whose commission expired February 1, 1900.

James L. Moorhead, to be postmaster at Boulder, in the county of Boulder and State of Colorado, in the place of E. L. Coates, whose commission expired February 24, 1900.

Thomas Quinney, to be postmaster at Waynesboro, in the county of Burke and State of Georgia, in the place of J. L. Fulcher, whose commission expired February 13, 1900.

A. W. Fletcher, to be postmaster at Highland Park, in the county of Lake and State of Illinois, in the place of William M. Dooley, whose commission expired February 18, 1900.

Fred H. Atwood, to be postmaster at Rumford Falls, in the county of Oxford and State of Maine, in the place of G. W. Stearns, resigned.

F. Horton Johnson, to be postmaster at Vineyard Haven, in the county of Dukes and State of Massachusetts, in the place of F. Horton Johnson, whose commission expired March 13, 1900. (Reappointed.)

Oliver P. Kendrick, to be postmaster at West Brookfield, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Oliver P. Kendrick, whose commission expires April 23, 1900. (Reappointed.)

Edmund W. Nutter, to be postmaster at East Bridgewater, in the county of Plymouth and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Edmund W. Nutter, whose commission expired February 13, 1900. (Reappointed.)

William H. Pierce, to be postmaster at Winchendon, in the county of Worcester and State of Massachusetts, in the place of Martin McCabe, whose commission expires April 6, 1900.

E. O. Dewey, to be postmaster at Owosso, in the county of Shiawassee and State of Michigan, in the place of Charles Lawrence, whose commission expires April 8, 1900.

Walter W. Harrington, to be postmaster at North Branch, in the county of Lapeer and State of Michigan, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Bernard Monnich, to be postmaster at Hooper, in the county of Dodge and State of Nebraska, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Gilbert W. Randall, to be postmaster at Newman Grove, in the county of Madison and State of Nebraska, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

William Royer, to be postmaster at Seward, in the county of Seward and State of Nebraska, in the place of F. G. Simmons, removed.

Charles W. Russell, to be postmaster at New Brunswick, in the county of Middlesex and State of New Jersey, in the place of C. D. Deshler, whose commission expired March 11, 1900.

Merrill Hosmer, to be postmaster at Potsdam, in the county of St. Lawrence and State of New York, in the place of Patrick Hurley, whose commission expired February 11, 1900.

Herbert Lloyd, to be postmaster at Chapel Hill, in the county of Orange and State of North Carolina, in the place of W. N. Pritchard, whose commission expired March 3, 1900.

Charles A. Hartley, to be postmaster at Pomeroy, in the county of Meigs and State of Ohio, in the place of W. H. Huntley, removed.

Daniel G. Engle, to be postmaster at Marietta, in the county of Lancaster and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of T. J. Buchanan, whose commission expires April 23, 1900.

Henry F. Hershey, to be postmaster at Steelton, in the county of Dauphin and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of E. M. Daron, whose commission expired January 9, 1900.

Henry D. Ruth, to be postmaster at Lansdale, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of W. L. Diehl, whose commission expired January 9, 1900.

William D. Williams, jr., to be postmaster at McDonald, in the county of Washington and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Boyce Rankin, resigned.

J. K. P. Marshall, to be postmaster at Cleveland, in the county of Bradley and State of Tennessee, in the place of F. P. Kanestor, whose commission expired February 24, 1900.

James I. Carter, to be postmaster at Arlington, in the county of Tarrant and State of Texas, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President on and after January 1, 1900.

Charles P. Ziegenhals, to be postmaster at Bastrop, in the county of Bastrop and State of Texas, in the place of Durant H. Bell, whose commission expired February 13, 1899.

Henry J. Goddard, to be postmaster at Chippewa Falls, in the county of Chippewa and State of Wisconsin, in the place of G. B. McCall, whose commission expires April 23, 1900.

WITHDRAWALS.

Executive nominations withdrawn March 28, 1900.

Second Lieut. Alvin K. Baskette, to be first lieutenant, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Infantry.

Rufus Pryer, to be postmaster at Newman Grove, in the State of Nebraska.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PLACER MINING IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 9294 be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands. There is some misunderstanding as to its terms.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that House bill 9294 be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the title be reported.

Mr. LACEY. It is a bill to limit placer mining.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill 9294, to limit placer mining claims in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. LACEY. The question was raised in the committee——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman if we did not consider this bill the other day?

Mr. LACEY. No; this is a bill to limit the number of claims that may be taken up. It is not the bill that was up the other day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have a reprint of bill 9310. There has been one reprint already, which has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for reprint of House bill 9310.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the title be reported, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9310 extending in the district of Alaska the placer-mining laws to lands reserved from sale in sections 1 and 10 of an act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there has already been one reprint, and that reprint has been exhausted. I ask for a reprint of the bill as it passed the House; and it would be well to enlarge the number of copies on account of the demand for this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think we ought to have a reprint of the bill to the extent of 500 copies. The demand made upon me for the prospective mining laws of Alaska has been very great.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reprint to the extent of 500 copies.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill of 500 copies. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDING SECTION 1176, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 911, to amend section 1176 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"Every soldier, sailor, and marine of the Union Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who is now, or may hereafter be, pensioned for rupture is entitled to receive, free of expense to such soldier, sailor, or marine, a single or double truss of such style as may be designated by the Surgeon-General of the United States Army as best suited to his disability."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALES OF OTOE AND MISSOURIA LANDS.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3207) approving a revision and adjustment of certain sales of Otoe and Missouria lands in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say to the House that no time is it more important for the House to be in order than when unanimous consent is being asked for. The Chair asks members to cease conversation.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the revision and adjustment of the sales of lands in the late reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, to which more than three-fourths of the adult male members of said tribes have given their consent, by an instrument in writing dated the 20th day of November, 1899, and now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby approved and confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to carry the same into full force and effect as to all delinquent purchasers of said lands, their heirs and legal representatives, in the following manner, to wit: The Secretary of the Interior shall cause notice to be given to said purchasers, their heirs and legal representatives, respectively, of the amounts of the deferred payments found to be due and unpaid on their respective purchases under the adjustment hereby confirmed; and within one year thereafter it shall be the duty of such purchasers, their heirs and representatives, respectively, to make full payment in cash of the amounts thus found to be due by them, severally, and in default of such payment within said period of one year the entry of any purchaser so in default shall be forthwith canceled and the lands shall be resold for the benefit of the Indians at not less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case at less than $2.50 per acre, as provided in the act under which they were originally sold. Upon making such complete payment within the time so fixed each purchaser, his heirs or legal representatives, shall be entitled to receive a patent for the lands so purchased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some explanation.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. This bill, Mr. Speaker, is merely to approve a settlement which has been made between the settlers and the Indians. A controversy has been pending as to the price that should be paid for the lands for about sixteen years. At two or three different times Congress has passed an act approving the settlement, subject to approval by the tribes, but the tribes would never approve the settlements offered until lately.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is to lead to debate, I shall object to it. I do not care to make the objection now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again appeals to the House. The gentleman from Kansas has been sick and is not able to make himself heard, and it is an important matter for the House to understand.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this is the second or third time that Congress has passed an act authorizing these settlers to make a settlement with the tribes as to the sale of these lands. These settlements have always been subject to the approval of the tribes, and the tribes have never given consent until this time. Now they have given assent by three-quarters of the adult members of the tribes. It is a controversy that has been pending for sixteen years. It is a settlement that has the approval of the Department, and all that the bill provides for is to authorize the Secretary to approve the settlement and carry it out. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] is familiar with the controversy, and I desire to yield time to him.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, retaining the right to object, I want some arrangement made as to time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN].

Mr. FLYNN. In the first place, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill does not involve any charge on the Treasury of the United States. The facts are that the Otoe and Missouria Indians in 1883 sold their reservation in the States of Nebraska and Kansas to certain settlers. The reservation had been appraised at $256,887.07 and put up at auction. One of the worst scandals known to the history of the Land Department was inaugurated there. Almost everybody connected with the transaction, except the Commissioner of the General Land Office, was afterwards sent to the penitentiary. The settlers, although the appraisement was only $256,887.07, bid the property up to $516,851.52.

Afterwards, when they refused to pay the amount they had bid, they claimed that the Commissioner of the General Land Office was present and told them to bid whatever they liked and they would get the land at the appraised value. Accordingly their bids went up to twice the appraised value. As I have stated, when the time for settlement came, many of the settlers refused to pay what they had bid, claiming that the Department had told them they could get the land at the appraised value, no matter what they had bid. This matter has been pending since 1883. The Indians were sent to Oklahoma. They were unable to get all their money. The land has been exempt from taxes in Nebraska and Kansas since 1883. Some of this land, I understand, is now worth forty or fifty dollars an acre.

Some time ago Congress passed an act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to see whether a compromise could be made between some three hundred and odd settlers and the Indians. The Secretary at various times undertook to make a compromise, but was unsuccessful. Last November a compromise agreement was entered into between the representatives of the settlers and the Indians. This bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to approve that agreement, whereby the Indians will obtain, in addition to what they have already received, about $110,000. That is the whole of this proposition in a nutshell.

In the Committee on Indian Affairs the gentleman from Iowa gave notice that he was not satisfied with the proposed settlement. The facts are these: The purchase price, according to the bids, was $516,851.52; the appraised price was $256,887.07; the amount paid on the purchase price already is $360,117.27; the amount of interest already paid is $75,000, which would give the Indians in the settlement about $546,000, or $20,000 more than the land was auctioned off for. The gentleman from Iowa contends the Indians should have every dollar that was bid, with interest thereon from that time.

As a Representative of the district in which these Indians now reside, I for one say, "Yes; I would like to let them have the full amount of principal and interest. But they have been kept out of much of the interest and principal since 1883; and if we hang up this settlement now we do not know whether they will ever get the money." As a representative of the Indians who reside there and whose land was sold, I believe that under the circumstances the Secretary of the Interior has made the best settlement that was possible. I was ordered to report the bill and am here with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] to advocate the passage of this act, which has already passed the Senate.

Mr. MERCER. Has the Interior Department fully concurred in this report?

Mr. FLYNN. This bill was drafted in the Interior Department. I never saw it until they sent it to us, asking that it be introduced and passed.

Mr. MADDOX. Has there ever been any question about the appraisement?

Mr. FLYNN. No. The question arose over this proposition. As I have stated, the land was appraised at $256,887.07 and was bid in at $516,851.52. Some of the settlers who bid it in refused afterwards to pay what they had bid, claiming that the Commissioner of the General Land Office was there and knew the rascality of some of the Government officials connected with the sale and told the bidders to bid whatever they liked and it would be made right.

Mr. MADDOX. What did the "rascality" consist in.

Mr. FLYNN. As I understand, some officials told the settlers to bid what they liked, and if they would pay $10 on every one hundred or two hundred their bid would be reduced accordingly.

Mr. MADDOX. Was the amount bid a fair price for the property?

Mr. FLYNN. That is a debatable question. The settlers contended that they bid regardless of what the land was worth, believing that the appraised value, which was fair, would be the price at which they would ultimately get the land.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Allow me to say that I live in the locality where this transaction occurred, and I can say that the appraisement was higher than the market price of the same kind of land at that time anywhere within 50 miles of it.

But the settlers went upon the land for the purpose of buying it and getting the advantage of the long-time deferred payments which were to follow. When they went and occupied the lands, as they supposed, to have the advantage of being settlers at the time that they would bid at the sale—when they went to the sale they found that some kind of an agreement had been made between the land officers and some sharks, some other men with money, who were to bid against the settlers for the purpose of running up the price on them.

Mr. MADDOX. Is this bill unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. It is a unanimous report, except the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. MADDOX. Does it come from the Committee on Public Lands or the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. FLYNN. Indian Affairs.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. It comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Now I ought to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] a question. I understood the gentleman to say that the reason they bid more than it was worth was that it was understood that by making a side bid to an officer they could have the bid reduced.

Mr. FLYNN. No.

Mr. SIMS. Ten dollars on the side, was the gentleman's language.

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman did not understand me exactly. I have been told by a gentleman who handled this case in those days that there was great anxiety to secure this land. There was competition in the bids, and, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] said, the land was bid up higher than any land within fifty or a hundred miles of it, with an understanding that no matter what they bid they could get the land at the appraised value, which was presumed to be fair.

Mr. SIMS. By paying something to these officers?

Mr. FLYNN. No; they came out under a proposition where it was stated that on the side they were told by some gentlemen who were around there that if they would hand in ten or twenty dollars, their bid would be reduced.

Mr. SIMS. Reduced one hundred dollars for every ten.

Mr. FLYNN. That was my understanding of it.

Mr. SIMS. And that they acted upon that idea.

Mr. FLYNN. Well, they have not paid these Indians since. I do not know what idea they acted on.

Mr. SIMS. Are these gentlemen coming in here with clean hands to complain of a bargain which they tried to avoid by indirection and bribery?

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Different people are concerned now.

Mr. FLYNN. The contention was that no matter what happened at the time, the Commissioner of the General Land Office was there in person and told them to go on and bid what they liked, with the understanding that they could afterwards secure the land at the appraised value, which was presumed to be a fair value.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] whatever time he thinks he will need—five or ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to have the attention of the House briefly. The matter involved in this bill does not concern the Government of the United States in dollars and cents, but it concerns the honor of the Government. This House is, in part, the guardian of these Indians. This proposition is that after men bought certain land at public auction, entering into a written contract to pay the bid price per acre for that land, now the written contract with the Indians is to be treated as null and void, and the land is to be taken away from the Indians and given to these people on an appraisement made seventeen years ago.

That is the proposition, and it is said that it is this or nothing. The settlers say that they had a verbal arrangement with the Commissioner of the General Land Office by which they were to bid on this land, and that after bidding it in they were not to pay for it, or were only to pay for it what it was worth; that it was to be made right with them in some sort of a way. The Commissioner of the Land Office says he made no such arrangement. He denies it absolutely.

These men have for seventeen years occupied this land. They never have paid a dollar of rent on it; they never have paid a cent of taxes on it; they never have paid a cent of interest on it; they never have paid a cent of principal on it, beyond the original partial payments. They have held up these Indians for seventeen years and refused to carry out their contract, and they now come in after all this lapse of time and present an agreement which they forced the Indians to make, to scale the contracts down, the Indians being in Oklahoma and the understanding being that it was that or nothing.

Mr. FLYNN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LACEY. In a moment. Now, my friend from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] has stated time and again that he has a letter which will prove that the Commissioner of the Land Office made this sort of an arrangement. I call on him to read that letter to the House. I have thus far been unable to obtain it. I do not understand why these Indians should not have the contract price. In the first place, the land was put up at public auction, and some cattlemen came in and bid the land up with straw bids so as to prevent the land from getting into the hands of settlers and thus enable them to graze the land. That sale was set aside. It was a fraudulent sale. I am told that some men that bid there were sent to the penitentiary for conspiracy. But, be that as it may, that sale was set aside and nobody is complaining of it now. The property was put up again, was bid in at public auction, and these men bought it at public sale, and they got away from the other bidders by overbidding them. They took possession of the land. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] says the land to-day is worth forty or fifty dollars an acre. It was bought for from five to fifteen dollars an acre. They have had it seventeen years without rent. I desire to have the Clerk read a letter in this connection——

Mr. FLYNN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question while that letter is being sent to the Clerk's desk?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman, I know, does not want to misstate any facts. He has stated to this House that they have not paid any principal or interest. I desire to correct that statement.

Mr. LACEY. I do not say the whole of them. I say these settlers who are asking this relief have not paid anything.

Mr. FLYNN. One moment.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.
Mr. FLYNN. About $360,000 has been paid already——
Mr. LACEY. Yes.
Mr. FLYNN. Paid by the people who bid this land in, and if this settlement is accepted the Indians receive an additional $111,000 from those settlers.
Mr. LACEY. That merely illustrates another thing in this proposition. Some of the purchasers have paid for their land. They have paid $360,000 on their bids. They have gone on and carried out their contracts in good faith. Are we to go back now and pay them back the $360,000 that these settlers who have stood by their agreements have paid? If we let these settlers out who have paid nothing, should not the Treasury reimburse the other men who have paid in good faith and stood by their bids? Why, certainly.
Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me——
Mr. LACEY. It seems to me that proposition only shows the greater reason why this bill ought not to pass.
Mr. FLYNN. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa another question.
Mr. MADDOX. Have not about two-thirds of the settlers paid the price which they agreed to pay?
Mr. LACEY. Not two-thirds, but this amount has been paid. A considerable number of them have lived up to their contracts and have paid the amount of their bids. A large number of others have absolutely refused to pay anything and have appealed to Congress——
Mr. MADDOX. And this bill is to authorize them to settle, is it?
Mr. LACEY. These Indians, unfortunately, are not voters. They live down in Oklahoma and have nobody to represent them. The settlers are on the land——
Mr. FLYNN. I represent them to the best of my ability.
Mr. LACEY. What I mean is that they have nobody to vote for them here. My friend, as a Territorial Delegate, can not vote.
Mr. FLYNN. May I ask the gentleman another question?
Mr. LACEY. Certainly.
Mr. FLYNN. I know the gentleman wants to be fair, and the gentleman is fair.
Mr. LACEY. I thank the gentleman.
Mr. FLYNN. How are these Indians whom I represent going to get their money if this settlement is not approved?
Mr. LACEY. Put the land up and sell it again.
Mr. FLYNN. Yes; but the Nebraska delegation, with all its votes, will be here resisting it on behalf of the settlers who now occupy this land. I have no vote myself, and the Nebraska delegation, with the votes which they will be able to command, have power enough to defeat any kind of a settlement. It is true a Delegate has no vote, and the gentleman from Iowa knows that we can not pass this bill through here with a Department recommendation in favor of it on any other kind of a basis. I say these Indians have been out of this money since 1883, and it is about time for them to get it.
Mr. LACEY. Do you not think they ought to have it?
Mr. FLYNN. How are you going to give it to them unless you do it in this way?
Mr. LACEY. Take the land and sell it to others who will pay for it.
Mr. FLYNN. That is a good thing to talk about, but it takes votes to pass a bill.
Mr. LACEY. It will not get my vote to pass this bill, to take this money from these Indians.
Mr. STEELE. I just want to know of the gentleman, if this is a pernicious bill and he knew it, why did he not object to it when unanimous consent was asked?
Mr. LACEY. I want it considered; I want the House to vote it down, and give notice to these people that a white man must stand by his contract even with an Indian. Now I ask that the letter be read.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I want a little time.
Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like the House to hear this letter. It is not a mere formal matter.
The Clerk read as follows:

BEATRICE, NEBR., March 17, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: In my morning paper I have noticed your dissenting report in the Otoe Indian land matter, which has been long pending for settlement in Congress. Your report in the morning paper is as follows, to wit: "Having examined the original evidence and the papers on file in the matters involved in this bill, I can not concur in this report, and believe that the Indians should have the benefit of the contracts made by them at the public-land sales."

In my opinion, your report is eminently just and correct. I attended that land sale. I was quite anxious to buy a quarter section of the Otoe land. I attended the sale, I think, every day that it was held, and it was held several days. There was a conspiracy entered into on the part of certain men to take advantage of the Government in the sale of this land, but that was a secret conspiracy, and there were not many involved in it. There was nothing said at that time by any of the Government officers nor the land commissioner that would lead any bidder to believe that he would get his land for less than he bid. The reason I did not buy was because there were others there who outbid me and offered more for the land than I thought it was worth. These bidders who were so anxious to deprive others of the right of buying and paying for the land should be compelled to pay the price of their bids, with interest. These bidders who purchased the land had full knowledge of what they were doing, and I have never had a particle of sympathy for the men who crowded other bidders out at that sale and got the lands, and who have been constantly kicking since on the price they bid.

There is a land speculator in this city who bought the 160 acres where the agency buildings stood, at sheriff's sale, for $100. That is all that land has cost him up to date. He bought it nearly six years ago, and has had the benefit of the crops upon the land since, which probably amount to $250 per year. He has never paid the Indians or the Government a dollar of the money which the original bidder at the public sale agreed to pay. This man is very anxious to have the Indians' debt scaled down, that he may get this land for a nominal price. I mention this instance as probably an extreme case, but there are doubtless others where speculators seek to take advantage of the circumstances.

I have no financial interest in this Otoe land matter in any manner whatever, but I am personally cognizant of the facts I herein detail, and believe that justice will be done as soon as the Congress of the United States give these Otoe land settlers and speculators to understand that they must abide by their contracts that they made at the public sale. Excuse the liberty I take in addressing you upon this matter, but I believe your course in the Otoe land matter is correct, and I take pleasure in commending you for it.

I am, yours, truly,

E. O. KRETSINGER.

Hon. Mr. LACEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

P. S.—The statement of the majority of the committee that the sale was controlled by a drunken mob is the purest rot and has no substance of foundation to rest upon.

Mr. SIMS. Can I suggest a question to the gentleman?
Mr. LACEY. Certainly.
Mr. SIMS. Can not this bill be now amended and provide for the sale of the land in case they do not pay this debt, with interest, within a stipulated time?
Mr. LACEY. I think it ought to be so amended; and I think it ought to be recommitted with instructions to bring in that kind of a bill, and I will move to recommit with that instruction.
Mr. SIMS. I knew you were on the committee.
Mr. LACEY. I want to read the statement on which this bill is founded, on page 6 of the report.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I do not want the gentleman to use all my time, because I have been generous in giving him time.
Mr. LACEY. Perhaps the Chair will recognize me in my own right.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not understood to have stated whether he yielded specific time to the gentleman from Iowa or such time as the gentleman desired.
Mr. LACEY. Such time as I desired.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I said I would yield him ten or fifteen minutes.
Mr. DALZELL. Five or ten minutes.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. Five or ten minutes.
The SPEAKER. Then ten minutes was the limit of the time. The gentleman from Iowa has had thirteen minutes.
Mr. LACEY. I want to be recognized in my own right in opposition to this bill.
The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. In reply to what has been said——
Mr. LACEY. I would like to have the gentleman give me time to read what he founds his claim upon.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I will give the gentleman five minutes more, if he will make his whole case in that time, so that I can reply to it.
Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this involves——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes more.
Mr. LACEY. This bill involves for these Indians several hundred thousand dollars of money that belongs to them. I am yielded five minutes now in which to state their rights on this claim seventeen years old. I shall read from an affidavit on which the majority report has founded substantially the whole basis of the claim:

During the sale affiant heard said McFarland publicly announce that the said bidding was too high; that the Government did not want only the appraised price of the lands, and to all who were buying with the intention of making homes the Government would exact only the appraised price of these lands. Affiant further states that at the noon recess of the sale he talked personally with Mr. McFarland, and McFarland told him if he was desirous of purchasing a home on these lands to go ahead and bid it off at any price; that the Government would exact only the appraised price of the lands, as that was all they were worth. Affiant further says that he purchased a piece of said land and was influenced to do so wholly by the statement of said McFarland.

Now, the letter that has just been read states that Mr. Kretsinger went there to bid on the land, and he was outbid by these parties. He says that one tract of land there is worth $50 to $60 an acre that a man has paid only $100 for, and wants to be released now, and have it limited down to the appraised price of seventeen years ago. Just think of it! Land in Nebraska, Indian land, that has been sold in a public auction, now to be adjusted at the appraised value of seventeen years ago. Seventeen years ago Nebraska was a wild Western State. That is 1883. To-day Nebraska is thickly populated. A large majority of gentlemen on that side of the House turn their faces toward Lincoln, Nebr., when they get up in the morning and pray. [Laughter.] Nebraska has grown to be a great political and financial center, and yet they propose to take this land from the Indians at what it was appraised at in 1883 and give it to the men who during these seventeen years have not paid any taxes, because the land is in the Government; paid no interest, because they have repudiated the contract; have paid no rent, because they owned the land themselves. That is the proposition that this House is called upon to indorse, and now the question is, Will they do it?

Mr. MCRAE. Under what Administration was this fraud done?

Mr. LACEY. There is no fraud.

Mr. MCRAE. What is it then?

Mr. LACEY. They are trying to get a fraud under Mr. McKinley's Administration through this House. Here is the fraud: They are asking to release these men from their contract, take the money away from the Indians and give it to these gentlemen in Nebraska, and release them from a written contract made in 1883, a contract purchased on a purchase, a second purchase at that, in the open market at public auction.

Mr. MCRAE. Does the Department recommend this?

Mr. LACEY. The Department recognizes it in this way: It says that this has been hanging on for a long time; that the settlers have refused to pay; the Department has been against it, but as they have gone around and got 80 per cent of the Indians finally to consent, holding up their hands this way, that they had better close it up and be done with it. It is just as a judge of a court once said, when the jury brought in a verdict taking another man's farm away from him, "That verdict is set aside. It takes 13 men to steal a man's farm in Pennsylvania." It takes 356 men in this House to take this land away from these Indians and release these settlers from their written contract made in 1883; and I give notice that I will demand a yea-and-nay vote upon this proposition.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-one minutes remaining.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the conclusions reached by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] are rather surprising to me when I consider the history of this transaction. Under the conditions when these lands were opened—that is, the main portion of the reservation—settlers were authorized to take them at their appraised value. When the lands in question were opened up for settlement, they were appraised by a board, one of whom was an Indian, and appraised at a price that was so satisfactory that the Indians held a jollification after the appraisement.

When the settlers selected these homesteads they understood that they would be allowed to take them at the appraised value, as had been done when the first part of the reservation was opened; and yet it was held by the Land Office that the Commissioner had a right to direct the public sale, which he did as to this remnant of 42,000 acres of the reservation. That order was made. When the sale came under which this controversy arose, they were assured—as the Committee on Indian Affairs has more than once announced—they were assured by the parties in charge of that sale that in order to protect their rights on the land they had already selected and settled that the Government would never demand more from the purchasers than the appraised value. That has led to a great deal of delay, there being about one hundred delinquents now.

I find, in referring to this sale, this statement in the report of the committee. After having recited the general history of the transaction, it goes on to say:

> It would seem, therefore, that up to a short time before the date of sale the parties intending to become settlers upon the land had reason to suppose that if they could become settlers they would be exempt from the necessity of entering into competition with others for the purchase of the lands, and it would be reasonable to suppose that they made arrangements accordingly, supposing that the appraised value would be all they would have to pay.
>
> In addition to these facts it appears that when the lands were put up at public auction the sale was controlled by a mob of disorderly, intoxicated, and irresponsible persons; and the intending settlers seeking to secure lands of their selection, and on which they had previously made settlement in accordance with the spirit and purpose of the law, were brought into unfair competition and serious menace from the mob which had gathered for the purpose of speculation and making trouble, and not for the purpose of making actual settlement of the lands through bona fide purchase.

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask my friend from Arkansas if he believes that story?

Mr. LITTLE. I believe it from evidence in my possession.

Mr. LACEY. Notwithstanding the Commissioner denies it.

Mr. LITTLE. I have never seen any denial by the Commissioner.

Mr. LACEY. That has not been printed in the report.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not write this report, and I only give the facts in it. I think the committee as a rule can be trusted in its written reports. Now the report continues:

> It also appears the Commissioner of the General Land Office was present at the sale, endeavored as best he could to protect the bona fide intending settlers, and assured them, in his official capacity, that no advantage would be taken of the excessive bidding, and that in the end the Government would make a fair and reasonable adjustment, and exact no more from the purchasers than the real and appraised value of said lands. The settlers relied upon these assurances, made the bids necessary to secure the lands, entered upon them, and have reduced them to a high state of cultivation. The community in which they reside is one of the best improved in southern Nebraska. Farms have been opened, schoolhouses, churches, villages, roads, and bridges have been built. The improvements alone constitute more than one-half the present value of the land.

Mr. SNODGRASS rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. SNODGRASS. What was the object of a competitive sale if it was to go at a minimum price?

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman did not catch my meaning. The Commissioner directed a public sale of the entire remnant of 42,000 acres. The settlers had selected it understanding that it would go under the general law as the other land had before. Then, when this order of sale was made, these lands were put up and sold, these bona fide settlers of homesteads were confronted by these unusual and extraordinary bids for speculative purposes, which would result in the loss to them of their homesteads and give nothing to the Indians except to defeat sale.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does not the advance price go to the Indians if collected?

Mr. LITTLE. I will meet that in a moment; my time is short. Now, this controversy has stood in the way of final settlement for seventeen years. The settlers of these lands have made their first payment and are anxious to settle on fair and equitable terms. It has harassed Congress at every step on both sides of the question, and it has reached a point where the settlers who have gone on the lands and improved them can not pay for them if they want to. Acting upon these assurances and information, they have from time to time applied to Congress, and from time to time payments have been extended up to this time.

In order to reach what was believed to be a just settlement, what I believe to be absolutely honest to the Indians as well as to the settlers, they have finally reached the settlement approved of in this bill, and that is, that the settlers pay to the Indians the appraised price, which was $6.42 an acre, plus 25 per cent, making $8.02 per acre, together with 5 per cent from the date of the sale, which is more than the land is worth to-day if put on the market. This proposition has been submitted to the Indians, and out of eighty-eight or eighty-nine of them, all save some three, four, or five have signed the agreement, and the agreement is here printed in the report.

That agreement is the basis of the bill. That agreement has been assented to by all the settlers except some seven or eight. Not only that, but it has received the indorsement of the Indian Department and of the Secretary of the Interior; it has also met the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, excepting only the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SIMS. If these lands were put up now and sold would they bring the contract price with legal interest?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not believe they would.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose we should offer these settlers six months in which to pay up, on the condition that if they did not the land should be advertised and sold?

Mr. LITTLE. That is substantially what the bill does. If the amounts agreed to in the compromise are not paid within twelve months the lands are to be sold. Many of these lands have been mortgaged.

Mr. ZENOR. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], let me say that the amount bid upon these lands was in excess of the original value of the land.

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly. I was about to say many of these lands are under mortgage now for the improvements, and exclusive of the improvements they would not bring, in my opinion, anything like the amount of the bids.

Mr. SIMS. With the improvements, would they not?

Mr. LITTLE. Possibly in some instances they might.

Mr. SIMS. These men put their improvements on the land at their own risk, taking their chances.

Mr. LITTLE. That is where my friend is wrong.

Mr. SIMS. They have been occupying these lands without paying rent or taxes.

Mr. LITTLE. These purchasers acted upon an assurance which they believed guaranteed them the lands at the appraised value. The Indians themselves, as I have said, have agreed to this arrangement.

Mr. SIMS. Have the purchasers and occupants of this land paid any interest on the amount which they contracted to pay?

Mr. LITTLE. This bill charges them with 5 per cent interest from the date of the contract, being about seventeen years.

Mr. SIMS. Without this bill, what would they pay as interest?

Mr. LITTLE. Five per cent.

Mr. SIMS. Then how are they damaged?

Mr. COX. As I understand, the money which the settlers propose to pay will go to the Indians.

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly; and the Indians have agreed to this bill.

Mr. COX. Who, then, is kicking against carrying out this agreement?

Mr. LITTLE. Nobody except the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COX. Oh, well, he is always kicking. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. The fact is that this bill is agreeable to everybody interested. Neither the Indians nor the gentlemen who represent them on this floor make any objections. On the other hand, they are all heartily in favor of it.

Mr. FLYNN. In reply to what the gentleman from Iowa has said, let me say that I drew this report——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] has expired. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] is recognized.

Mr. LITTLE. If I can not have more time, I will ask the privilege of printing in the RECORD the letter of the Secretary of the Interior on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on this subject. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 15, 1900.

SIR: By act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 568), the Secretary of the Interior was authorized and directed to revise and adjust, on principles of equity, the sales of lands in the late reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, made at the land office at Beatrice, Nebr., in May and December, 1880, under the act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat., 380), and in his discretion, "the consent of the Indians having first been obtained," to allow to the purchasers of said lands, their heirs and legal representatives, rebates of the amounts respectively paid or agreed to be paid by such purchasers, the amount of the rebates, however, not to be such as to reduce the price of the lands below the appraised value thereof at the time of the sale.

The circumstances and conditions preceding, attending, and following these sales are set forth with reasonable accuracy and fairness in committee Report No. 2198, made to the House of Representatives on H. R. 12141, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, and also in the exhibits incorporated in Senate Document 132, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

Under the act of March 3, 1893, repeated but unavailing efforts have been made by the succeeding Secretaries of the Interior to revise and adjust these sales on principles of equity, so as to extend the benefits thereof, as contemplated by the act, to both the full-paid and the delinquent purchasers, their heirs and legal representatives. These efforts have been repeated so often and have been so uniformly unsuccessful that it may be safely said that there is no possible hope of making any revision or adjustment of the sales, with the consent of the Indians, which will include both classes of purchasers. According to the terms of the act the consent of the Indians is indispensable to any revision or adjustment thereunder.

In 1896 the then Secretary of the Interior adopted a plan of revision and adjustment of these sales, with the consent of the Indians, which was, however, expressly confined to the delinquent purchasers, and did not extend to those who had made full payment. The question arose as to whether such a partial revision and adjustment conformed to the act under which the Secretary of the Interior was acting, and this question was referred to the then Assistant Attorney-General assigned to this Department, Mr. Lionberger, who, on December 20, 1896, rendered an opinion adverse to said plan of revision and adjustment for the reason that it did not include in its benefits all those purchasers who clearly come within the purview of said act.

November 20, 1899, a revision and adjustment of these sales as to the delinquent purchasers was consented to by the Indians in an instrument in writing, which is in terms as follows:

"We, the undersigned adult male members of the Otoe and Missouria tribe of Indians, having been assembled in council this 20th day of November, 1899, at the Otoe subagency, Noble County, Okla., in response to the request of James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, for the purpose of considering a proposition for the settlement of differences with the delinquent purchasers of lands in our late reservation in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and being fully advised by said Indian Inspector McLaughlin as to our rights and interest in the premises, do hereby agree to a settlement of said differences on the following basis:

"I. The original appraised value of said lands, together with 25 per cent of such appraised value, shall, for the purposes of this settlement, represent the purchase price of said lands.

"II. Interest shall be computed on the purchase price so ascertained at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, simple interest, from the date that interest should be computed under the original act of Congress providing for the sale of said lands to date of payment.

"III. From the amount so ascertained to be due in each instance shall be deducted all payments heretofore made on said lands, both on account of principal and interest, together with simple interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from date of payment until date of final payment, and the balance remaining after deducting said payments and interest thereon, as aforesaid, from the purchase price, with interest thereon as aforesaid, shall be considered the amount still due from said settlers and purchasers in each instance.

"IV. All computations to be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and we fully authorize the adjustment of the matter on the basis as above set forth, and as provided by the act of March 3, 1893.

"V. It is further understood that this agreement and compromise shall apply only to the purchase money now delinquent, and that we will in no event agree to any further adjustment or refunding of any money whatever to those who have paid the full amounts due on their purchases made at the sale of said lands."

This is signed by 73 adult male members of the tribe out of a total of 88, which is more than the three-fourths required by the customs of the tribes and the regulations of this Department. Of the adult male members of the reservation at the time all but 6 signed this instrument.

This plan of adjustment does not include the full-paid purchasers, and I do not feel authorized to give it my approval and carry it into effect, considering the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, and the opinion of the former Assistant Attorney-General, in which I concur. I believe, however, as before stated, that no plan of adjustment which includes the full-paid purchasers will ever be consented to by the Indians, and I further believe that the fact that an adjustment as to the full-paid purchasers can not be effected ought not to be permitted to stand in the way of or to prevent an adjustment as to the delinquent purchasers.

It is now more than sixteen years since these sales occurred, and good administration as well as fair dealing toward the Indians and the delinquent purchasers requires that the matter shall be adjusted so far as they are concerned, so that the Indians may receive the moneys to which they are entitled and the purchasers receive title to the lands. The plan of adjustment consented to by the Indians, November 20, 1899, provides that they shall receive from the delinquent purchasers the original appraised value of the lands with 25 per cent added thereto, and with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum.

Representatives of this Department, who have inspected the lands and made diligent inquiry with respect to their appraisement and value, believe that this is a reasonable and equitable settlement both for the Indians and the delinquent purchasers. I have had two conferences with delegations from the tribes, and after careful consideration of the matter believe that the best interests of all concerned will be subserved if this plan of adjustment between the Indians and the delinquent purchasers is authoritatively adopted and carried into effect.

This controversy, so long pending, should be closed without further delay. While under the act of March 3, 1893, the consent of the purchasers was not made a condition to the revision and adjustment thereby authorized, it is worthy of consideration that about 110 out of a total of 123 delinquent purchasers have joined in proposing this adjustment and stand ready to comply with its terms, if it be approved. The remaining delinquent purchasers insist either that they should receive title to the lands without making any payment at all or upon the payment of the original appraised value, with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum for three years. It thus appears that the Indians and the delinquent purchasers have, with practical unanimity, consented to this plan of adjustment.

I therefore respectfully transmit herewith a draft of a bill, confirming the revision and adjustment to which assent has thus been given, and earnestly recommend that it receive your favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, if I can be heard for a few moments, I think I can save a good many inquiries.

If I had thought that this bill would precipitate such a discussion as we are having, I would not have interrupted the progress of the military bill this morning with this question. I am very sure that my friend from Iowa has widely mistaken the facts and has received a great deal of misinformation on this subject or he would not have made the statement which he has made.

I live within 10 miles of this land. There are 110 or 111 actual settlers upon the land. Ninety of them are the men who went on the land before the day of the sale, thinking that each one of them would be allowed to buy 160 acres at the appraised price, or not less than the appraised price, and that they would thus be enabled to make their homes there. They are still living there, occupying the same land.

When the land was offered for sale, they were met by the men who wrote the kind of letters that the gentleman from Iowa had read to you—bidding against them, running the price of the land up from $6 to $17 or $18 an acre when there was not a quarter section of wild land within 50 miles that would have brought that price at that time. The Commissioner of the General Land Office came to the sale and suspended it for two days, endeavoring in some way or another to relieve the settlers from the competition of those gamblers who were bidding against them. But the conspiracy between the officers of the local land office and the speculators who were bidding against the settlers was close and strong. The speculators continued to run up the price upon those settlers; and I believe it to be true (because I have heard more than twenty men say that they heard the statement made) that the Commissioner of the General Land Office told the settlers that he could not help them at that time, but that they should go on and bid upon the land, and that they would be able to obtain relief from the Government.

Mr. SIMS. If the speculators had bought the land, would they not have had to comply with the terms of the sale, so that the Indians would have got the same amount of money?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. No; that was not the purpose at all. The successful bidders would have acquired an inceptive right to complete the purchase; but the deferred payments were to run for a long time, during which the successful bidders would have been holding presumptively the title. But many of these settlers who bid for the land had gone upon it some time before and erected their little homes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would these speculators have also got their improvements for nothing?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. They would have got their improvements for nothing, of course. That was a part of the game.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I should like to continue this story without interruption, with all respect to my friend.

Mr. COX. All right.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. And when I have finished my statements, if any inquiry is to be made, I will answer it if I can.

The settlers made their first payments at the time of the sale. Some of the settlers who bid at that time made all their payments and completed them, and have obtained their lands at about the appraised price. They completed their payments and obtained their title, some for one reason and some for another; but these remaining settlers, upon whom the price was extortionately run up by the false bidders at the sale, have remained upon their lands from that day to this, contending every day during all these sixteen years that they were entitled to have that land at the appraised price and the interest due upon it. Three different times Congress has authorized them to make that kind of a settlement with the tribes, subject to the approval of the tribes. This time they have made their settlement with the Indians without the authority of Congress or without any act of Congress directing it.

Mr. LACEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Now, I did not interrupt the gentleman with questions, and I do not care to be interrupted until I get through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas declines to yield and so stated some time ago.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. This time they have made their agreement with the tribes, and 77 out of 83 adult members of the tribes have signed the agreement. The settlers are to pay the appraised price for the land and 25 per cent more, and they are to pay 5 per cent interest upon that sum from the date of sale down to the date of payment. By that payment the Indians come within $45,000, in round numbers, of getting as much as they would have got if the settlers had paid up at the date of sale.

Mr. DOLLIVER. On their bids?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. On their bids. It is that close to it now.

Mr. LACEY. But they lose seventeen years' interest.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Upon that $45,000 they lose the seventeen years' interest, and that is the question of equity and justice for which the gentleman from Iowa stands here contending. These Otoes and Missourias were taken from that reservation down to one of the best reservations in the Indian Territory and given 123,000 acres of the best land in it, and located there. I think they are one of the four richest tribes of human beings on the face of the earth to-day. They do not pay their debts to others, but that is outside of the record in this case. I am unable to induce them to pay the men that built their houses upon their reservation in Kansas, but that is outside of the record. The whole question here now is whether this settlement shall be approved, by which these settlers pay the appraised price on the land and 25 per cent more than that, and pay 5 per cent interest upon that sum from the date of sale down to this time, or whether we shall go without a settlement and open another contest which shall last until time shall determine it in the future. That is the whole of it. Seventy-seven out of 83 of the adult members of that tribe are satisfied with this settlement, after sixteen years of controversy over it, after having the matter explained to them in every direction by their friends and by their enemies.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question now?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. As I understand this controversy, it is this: Before this land was sold the Government required it to be appraised.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. It brought more than the appraised value?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. And the purchasers are trying to get the land at the appraised value, and not at what it brought at the sale. Is that the case?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. That is what they have been trying to get it at, but under this settlement they now pay 25 per cent more than the appraised value and interest on that amount.

Mr. LACEY. The treaty required the land to be appraised.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. And the Indians accept this settlement.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Now, based on that—I take it the gentleman is a lawyer?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Is it not a fact that in every State of the Union, before land is sold at public outcry, it is required to be appraised, generally at two-thirds of its value so that if at the sale it does not bring the appraised value the court, upon its own motion or the motion of the person holding the title, will set aside the commissioner's report of sale?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. That is the general procedure under the statute of a State, but this was under a treaty with the Indians.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I understand; but the procedure generally followed the practice of the State, did it not?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Except that this was prescribed by a statute which directed the sale. This sale was under a statute of this Congress.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. By whom was the land appraised?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. By appraisers appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, one of whom was selected by the tribes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. And two by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. And they appraised the land?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. They appraised the land.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. And the property having brought more than its appraised value, the holders of the title, squatters as they were, are now trying to avoid the purchase price. Is not that the fact, boldly stated?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. No.

Mr. SIMS. They are trying to avoid all above the appraised price.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Trying to avoid all over the appraised price?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. These are the settlers who were entitled to go onto the lands under the act which authorized the sale.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Did any of these gentlemen who went upon the lands before the sale have any right there?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes; they had the inceptive right of settlers under the act.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Had they the right to go on this land?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Land belonging to the Indians authorized to be sold under the act of Congress.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes; and they were admitted to the lands.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Before they were sold?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes; and under this settlement the Indians will receive within $45,000 of the amount that was originally bid. The Indian inspector has been with the tribe and explained the entire matter to them until it is satisfactory to them. The settlement is satisfactory to the Department of the Interior, satisfactory to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, satisfactory to the tribes, and satisfactory to the settlers. No one objects to it except the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. Now I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and then I desire to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I will take but a moment to say what I have to say upon this subject. Some six or seven years ago I spent about two months in the vicinity of the lands in question. At that time I heard a very great deal about this sale. I admit that the information I received was hearsay, but I believed what was said to me at the time, and I give it to the House for what it is worth.

One of the gentlemen who was one of the bidders at this sale in speaking of the matter referred to the attempt of certain gentlemen, himself among others, to bid up the price of these lands at the sale. I said to him, "What was your reason?" He said, "First we were to bid, and if the land was given to us at the price we bid it would give us the prior right and an opportunity to make a deal with the settlers and occupants of the land later." He further said to me that there was an understanding between the register and receiver of the land office in charge of the sale and these speculators that they were to run up the price of the land, and then if the poor settlers, the men who occupied and had improved the land, anxious to save their holdings and their improvements, should become fearful that they would not be able to obtain their lands and should implore them not to run the price above what they (the settlers) could afford to pay, they would say, "There is no record being kept by the men who are making this sale of the price at which the lands are bid in. After the sale is over, if you bid a higher price than the appraised value we will see to it that the land goes to you at the appraised value, provided you pay us $10 for every $100 that you bid above the appraised value."

That was the general talk in the community while I was there. Nobody denied that that was the condition of affairs. I talked with a number of men who were in this conspiracy; and the men in charge for the Government of the United States in this fraudulent sale went to the penitentiary from matters connected with it, and several of the men who had to do with this attempt to run up the price of this land without any idea of paying it and keeping it themselves also went to the penitentiary for their participation therein. The question before the House is simply this: Will you do justice by the settlers and occupants of these lands; will you give them the lands at the appraised price and 25 per cent more and interest for sixteen years, or will you compel them to pay the exorbitant price drawn from them by a lot of speculators and bummers who were present at this sale, every one of whom should be in the penitentiary?

Mr. ZENOR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.
Mr. ZENOR. Do you not know it to be a fact that at the time this sale was made the cattlemen wanted the lands for three or four months for the grazing of cattle, and they only paid $1, and that was simply to cover the pretended sale; was not that true in every instance in which these lands were sold?
Mr. MONDELL. That was a part of the general conspiracy on that sale by the Government.
Mr. LACEY. That was the first sale, and was set aside.
Mr. MONDELL. I am speaking of the second sale.
Mr. COX. What was done about that second sale?
Mr. MONDELL. They never got any title.
Mr. ZENOR. I will ask the gentleman whether or not there was a sale made of this land and subsequently set aside by the Government? I understood the gentleman from Iowa said that a sale was set aside.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. It was never set aside.
Mr. LACEY. The first sale was not carried out.
Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; the first sale was carried out. There never has been any sale set aside. The men that I talked with were there at the time the only sale was going on. The land commissioner came there and suspended it for two days trying to prevent these frauds upon the settlers, and finding that he was unable to do it, he let the sale go on.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska.
Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple proposition. The men who settled upon the lands in question ask for this bill; the Indians, or a large majority of them, interested in these lands ask for this settlement. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Hitchcock, has carefully examined this matter and recommends action at once. I quote his words in a communication sent to Congress February 14, 1900:

It is now more than sixteen years since these sales occurred, and good administration, as well as fair dealing toward the Indians and the delinquent purchasers, requires that the matter shall be adjusted, so far as they are concerned, so that the Indians may receive the moneys to which they are entitled and the purchasers receive title to the lands. The plan of adjustment consented to by the Indians November 20, 1899, provides that they shall receive from the delinquent purchasers the original appraised value of the lands, with 25 per cent added thereto, and with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum. Representatives of this Department, who have inspected the land and made diligent inquiry with respect to their appraisement and value, believe that this is a reasonable and equitable settlement both for the Indians and the delinquent purchasers. I have had two conferences with delegations from the tribes, and after careful consideration of the matter believe that the best interests of all concerned will be subserved if this plan of adjustment between the Indians and the delinquent purchasers is authoritatively adopted and carried into effect.

This controversy, so long pending, should be closed without further delay. While under the act of March 3, 1893, the consent of the purchasers was not made a condition to the revision and adjustment thereby authorized, it is worthy of consideration that about 110 out of a total of 123 delinquent purchasers have joined in proposing this adjustment and stand ready to comply with its terms if it be approved. The remaining delinquent purchasers insist either that they shall receive title to the lands without making any payment at all or upon the payment of the original appraised value with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum for three years. It thus appears that the Indians and the delinquent purchasers have, with practical unanimity, consented to this plan of adjustment.

I therefore respectfully transmit herewith a draft of a bill confirming the revision and adjustment to which assent has thus been given, and earnestly recommend that it receive your favorable consideration.

His predecessor, Hon. C. N. Bliss, also investigated this whole subject, and favored legislation of this character. Writing to Congress, January 28, 1899, he said:

In response to your request you are advised that this Department fully appreciates the desirability of an early settlement of the long-standing controversy respecting the lands. If such a result can be obtained, the best interests of the local community, the settlers, the Indians, and the General Government will be conserved.

Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, and the same language as above quoted was used in the Senate report. This bill has passed the Senate of the United States, and by our favorable action it will go to the President of the United States and soon become the law of the land. It will be a Godsend to those settlers who have been fighting so many years for this relief.

The Committee on Indian Affairs of this House has made a favorable report upon this bill and urges its passage in the following language:

The contention is already of nineteen years' standing, and there is every reason why the latter should now be closed up. It is right that the purchasers should acquire their titles and that the Indians should have their money. A generous concession has been made by the tribes and your committee is assured that the settlers and the legal representatives now in possession will concur in a final adjustment under the provisions of this bill. The amendment herewith reported is intended to furnish the specific details for carrying out the settlement and fixes a suitable period within which the same may be accomplished.

The period of one year was the time named in the former act, known as the "Paddock bill" (27 Stat., 568), and seems reasonable in view of the suggestions made by the settlers that many of them will be obliged to obtain the purchase money by mortgage upon their tracts of land, and that recourse to the courts will be necessary to clear the title of certain supposed liens, which in fact are not such, in order to make it a merchantable title upon which money can be secured.

The object of the proposed bill is to give the Secretary of the Interior a form of judicial power to settle these controversies, so that he may act advisedly; that testimony may be taken, and a competent attorney may be appointed by the Secretary to appear and look after all the interests of the Indians in the hearings, and to present their case on that testimony and any other competent to the issue. The General Government owes a duty to these Indians, to the community where the land is situated, and to the settlers to adjudicate this matter in accordance with the rule of right. We believe that the proceedings authorized by this bill will bring about that result.

These lands are not in the district which I have the honor to represent; but they are located in part in Kansas and in part in Gage County, Nebr.
Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?
Mr. MERCER. Certainly.
Mr. LACEY. Whose district are they in?
Mr. MERCER. The Nebraska land is situated in the Fourth Congressional district, represented by Mr. STARK, my colleague, and the Kansas land in the district represented by Mr. CALDERHEAD.
Mr. STARK. I am right here.
Mr. MERCER. I will say, Mr. Speaker, as has been said before, the Commissioner of the Land Office holding office at the time the public sale took place reported that bona fide bidders were being interfered with by speculators, and he assured those who did buy in good faith at the time they were buying that if they were imposed upon by excessive bidding he himself, as the representative of the Government, would protect them when the time for settlement came, and the Secretary of the Interior——
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. MERCER. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the settlers that paid in full for the land at this auction, and who exceed the number affected by this bill, can not come here and claim a reduction based upon this proposition?
Mr. MERCER. They have been contending for such a settlement, I understand, for a good many years.
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The men who paid in full. If you remit to these men, will they come in here and ask for a refund?
Mr. MERCER. I am informed that the Department is opposed to such action. But these settlers in question have settled upon this land, have built homes, have built outbuildings, have plowed the soil, have planted crop after crop, and they have a certain vested right in these lands, a vested right that should be protected by Congress; and when the settlers and the Indians and the Interior Department and the Senate of the United States and the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives all ask for this legislation, why should you hesitate a moment?
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few minutes.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I move the previous question.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks for the previous question.
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I ask the gentleman to yield a minute or two minutes of his time to me as a member of the committee.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I will give you a minute. I withhold the request for the previous question for a minute.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the demand for the previous question, and yields the gentleman from New York one minute.
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I can not support this bill as a member of the committee. This bill is intended to relieve a party or a number of men who bid at a sale from the obligation of their contracts. The Department and these Indians have finally consented to this compromise, because after seventeen years it has been impossible for the Indians to get anything out of them; and driven to the last resort, they are compelled to take what they can get. Such a proposition I can not give my assent to. More men bid at this sale and paid the amount that they bid at that auction than are included within the provisions of this bill for relief.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I will extend your time a little if you will allow me to ask you a question.
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Certainly.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. Does the gentleman understand that under the provisions of this bill the settlers pay the appraised price and 25 per cent additional?
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. There are only 111 affected by this bill, and there were, as I understood, nearly 200 men who bid at this sale.
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.
Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I understood the gentleman to yield to me more time if he could ask me a question.
Mr. CALDERHEAD. I think, Mr. Speaker, I must insist on my motion for the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were 87 ayes and 12 noes.

So the previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this bill be recommitted with instructions to report back a bill for an immediate resale of the lands.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were 11 ayes and 89 noes.

Mr. LACEY. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Three gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are denied. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were 104 ayes and 13 noes.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. CALDERHEAD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a report of the agreement of the conferees on the pension appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin reports an agreement by the conferees on the pension appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read the report.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of pensions, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, limits the number of examinations to be made by boards of medical examiners to not exceeding 20 on any one day, as proposed by the House, instead of 10, as proposed by the Senate, and makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On amendment numbered 6: Restores the provision requiring examining surgeons to state the rating which in their judgment applicants are entitled to, and which was proposed to be stricken out by the Senate, and leaves in the bill the provisions proposed by the Senate defining the duties of examining surgeons and requiring that the reports of special examiners shall be open to inspection.

On amendment numbered 7: Strikes from the bill the provision proposed by the House requiring the Commissioner of Pensions to furnish all necessary blanks to claimants and giving him the discretion to refuse to pay the fees to any attorney of record when he is satisfied that such attorney failed to prepare the case under his personal supervision and did not discharge his full duty to the claimant.

S. S. BARNEY,
J. T. McCLEARY,
JNO. C. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair, for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of an appropriation bill the title to which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriation for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 477. An act granting a pension to Levi C. Faught.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5067) concerning the boarding of vessels.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 733) entitled "An act concerning the boarding of vessels."

Senate concurrent resolution 36:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 4,500 copies of the work entitled The Louisiana Purchase, by the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the military-information division, Adjutant-General's Office, including the purchase of law books, books of reference, periodicals and newspapers, and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $6,640.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened with a great deal of interest during this debate to a number of very able speeches on all sorts of subjects; but I have thus far sought in vain any light or leading upon the question of the total cost of the maintenance of our military establishment. Under the present custom of distributing appropriations for the military establishment, it is almost impossible to obtain a total without going through the different appropriation bills item by item and line by line and word by word. I have no doubt that the only proper and correct method of dealing with appropriations for the military establishment is to carry them all on one bill which should be reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

I have gone through a number of appropriation bills item by item and line by line. I have examined six in all which carry appropriations for the military establishment. For all I know there may be other appropriations, other items, hidden away on other appropriation bills; but, so far as I am able to discover, for the present fiscal year and during it there have been appropriated for the military establishment as follows: On the Army bill, $80,430,204.06; on the Military Academy bill, $575,774.47; on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, $2,424,032; and on the sundry civil appropriation bill, $1,026,765.24. And I may state incidentally that the latter two bills carry the great majority of the 2,140 clerks now employed in the War Department for the permanent establishment of the United States; that is, a proportion of about 1 clerk to 42 enlisted men, assuming the figures of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to be correct—that our Army is not within 10 per cent of the total limit allowed by law.

Besides these amounts, there was carried on the urgent deficiency bill $45,930,977.61, giving a total of $130,387,753.38.

Now, that does not include the fortification appropriation bill. If we include the fortification appropriation bill, which was extremely small last year—$4,990,900—we reach a total for the permanent establishment of $135,297,653.38.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he includes in his table the cost of construction and transportation?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, certainly. The gentleman will understand that I am submitting these figures without comment, simply for the information of the House.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that; and the preparation of the gentleman's table must have cost a great deal of work.

Mr. McCLELLAN. This statement includes transportation and construction, but not any appropriations growing out of the civil war or the Spanish war.

During 1897 the Austro-Hungarian army, 354,196 strong, cost in round numbers $56,000,000; the French army, 538,759 strong, cost in round numbers $125,000,000; the German army, 598,000 strong, cost in round numbers $136,000,000, and the Italian army, 273,000 strong, cost in round numbers $45,000,000. All the war budgets of the continental armies include not only the cost of maintaining the standing army itself, but the charges arising from past wars. Thus the war budget of Germany, which is $136,000,000, carries with it the cost——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed five minutes longer.

Mr. HULL. I object. The gentleman is not speaking to the part of the bill now under consideration——

Mr. RICHARDSON. This is upon the question of expenditures for the Army.

Mr. HULL. That will come up later.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is purely a military question which we are discussing.

Mr. HULL. We want to get through this bill before Friday, and it will be impossible if we stop to discuss all these questions not immediately relevant.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will not object to this extension of time, because the gentleman's remarks are right along the line of the bill.

Mr. HULL. There is no objection to the gentleman printing additional remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then the gentleman does not make the point of order that what I have said is not germane and should not be published in the RECORD?

Mr. HULL. Not at all; I think the gentleman has a right to publish it in the RECORD.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If the gentleman does not desire me to go on, I will not insist; but I will take advantage of the general leave to print and conclude my remarks in the RECORD.

I was about to say, when interrupted, that the war budget of Germany, which is $136,000,000, includes the expenses arising from the war with France and the war with Austria, and that the French war budget, which is $125,000,000, includes the expenses arising from the late war with Germany, as does also the Austro-Hungarian budget. These expenses include pensions and claims, etc. If we are to make an accurate comparison between the cost of our Army and the armies of Europe, we should add to the appropriations for the support of the Army for the current year the appropriations growing out of the civil war and our other wars. These amount to $156,291,688.63, making our total war budget on the German, French, or Austro-Hungarian basis amount to $291,589,342.01.

Now, again, assuming that the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is correct, that our Army is 10 per cent less than the maximum, or 90,000 strong, we find that the cost of maintaining each enlisted man of the United States Army is not a thousand dollars a year, as is generally supposed; but if we exclude the appropriations for fortifications, it has amounted during the present fiscal year to $1,447; if we include the appropriations for fortifications, it has amounted to $1,503; and should we estimate on the European basis, including our expenditures for pensions, etc., it has amounted to $3,240.

Now, in 1897 the cost per annum for each enlisted man was, in the Austro-Hungarian army, $157; in the French army, $232; in the German army, $227; and in the Italian army, $165. Had it been possible to maintain our Army as cheaply as those of continental Europe, it would have cost us at the Austrian rate, $14,130,000; at the French rate, $20,880,000; at the German rate, $20,430,000; and at the Italian rate, $14,850,000. In preparing these figures I have used round numbers in referring to continental armies and have used the latest reliable data I have been able to obtain, which is for the year 1897. In estimating the cost of the United States Army I have not included river and harbor work or any appropriations for civil purposes. I have, however, included all expenditures made directly for the maintenance and support of the military establishment.

The cost of the military establishment per capita of population is in Austria, $1.25; in France, $3.25; in Germany, $2.59; in Italy, $1.47; and in the United States, including appropriations for fortifications but not including appropriations growing out of past wars, is $1.93. The per capita of expenditures growing out of past wars is $2.23, and the total per capita of the cost of the present military establishment and expenses growing out of past wars is $4.16.

Let me again say, in conclusion, that I have submitted these figures for the information of the House, without comment and without criticism.

TABLE A.—Appropriations for the support of the military establishment, fiscal year of 1900.

Carried on—
Army bill	$80,430,204.06
Military Academy bill	575,774.47
Legislative, executive, and judicial bill	2,424,032.00
Sundry civil bill	1,028,765.24
Urgent deficiency bill, act February 9, 1900	45,930,977.61
Total	130,387,753.38
Fortifications bill	4,909,900.00
Total	135,297,653.38

APPROPRIATIONS GROWING OUT OF PAST WARS.

Pensions	$145,233,830.00
Salaries for Pension Bureau, etc., carried on legislative, executive, and judicial bill	2,371,250.00
National cemeteries	205,880.00
Artificial limbs	549,275.00
National Homes for disabled volunteer soldiers	3,654,544.00
State homes for disabled volunteer soldiers	900,000.00
Arrears of pay, bounty, etc	450,000.00
Miscellaneous, arising chiefly from war with Spain	2,765,000.00
Headstones and burials	28,000.00
Deficiencies, National Homes, disabled volunteer soldiers, and claims, act February 9, 1900	133,949.63
Total	156,291,688.63
Aggregate	291,589,342.01

TABLE B.—Showing cost of maintaining various armies.

	Population, in millions.	War budget, in millions of dollars.	Total army, peace footing.	Cost of maintaining 1 enlisted man for one year.	Cost of military establishment, per capita of population.
Austria-Hungary	44½	56	354,196	$157.00	$1.25
France	38½	125	538,759	232.00	3.25
Germany	52½	136	598,000	227.00	2.59
Italy	30½	45	273,099	165.60	1.47
United States, not including pensions, etc	70	135	90,000	1,503.00	1.93
United States, including pensions, etc	70	291½	90,000	3,240.00	4.16

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a state of facts which to me seem inexplicable. I have no doubt that an intelligent answer to a few questions which I desire to propound will shed much light upon doubts now in the minds of members of the House.

In the early part of January last I had put through the House a resolution of inquiry, asking the Secretary of War to inform the House what the cost of military operations in the Philippine Islands had been from May 1, 1898, up to and including November 1, 1899. I knew this was a question of interest to the American people, and I thought that the cost of those military operations would largely determine their judgment upon this question. In responding to that inquiry the Secretary of War said that the total cost of military operations in the Philippine Islands during the last eighteen months had been, in round numbers, $48,000,000.

Now, I should like to have the chairman of the Committee upon Military Affairs inform the House what has become of the balance of the money we have appropriated. The last military appropriation bill, if I remember correctly, carried eighty-odd million dollars. A deficit supplied in the short session of Congress carried about $25,000,000 more.

Mr. HULL. More than that.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. More than that, the chairman says. The present bill carries one hundred and twelve millions. Now, if it has only cost $48,000,000 for the military operations in the Philippines within the last twelve months, I should like to have some intelligent explanation as to what has been done with the rest of this vast sum of money that we have appropriated. We have but a handful of soldiers in Cuba, we have scarcely a corporal's guard in this country, and we have sixty-odd thousand in the Philippines. If it has only taken $48,000,000 to conduct military operations in the Philippine Islands for eighteen months, then what has become of this hundred and odd million dollars that have gone to the War Department?

I frankly confess that there are but two solutions to this inquiry. One is that the response of the Secretary of War does not state the fact, and the other is that we have been appropriating more money than was needed to conduct military operations. I desire to call attention to the fact that this does not include money appropriated for fortifications. It is confined purely to the military question about which I am speaking, the transportation of soldiers, clothing of soldiers, commissary department, and things of that sort. The Secretary of War says that we have expended for these 65,000 soldiers only $48,000,000, and yet we have appropriated about $250,000,000. Where has the balance of it gone? What have we done with it?

Mr. DRIGGS. I am going to show what became of it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. No; you can not show.

Mr. DRIGGS. Yes, I can.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The fact of the business is that this answer is not a fair one. The Secretary of War does not deal fairly with the House. It is true I can find some excuse for it. He has been so busy drafting appropriation bills for the benefit of the members of the majority that he has not had time perhaps to pay attention to the details of his own Bureau, but he is content in replying to this resolution of Congress with transmitting a few letters from bureau chiefs. He does not undertake to go into the details of it.

That is very well, gentlemen, for you to sit quietly in your places and permit a creature of the President to reply to a resolution of one of the branches of Congress in this way; but I direct your attention to the fact that it is not dealing fairly with the House of Representatives or treating your resolution with sufficient respect. Many of the figures given are merely estimates. The Secretary of War makes no effort to give an actual statement of the cost of the departments over which he presides, and he gives such an equivocal statement that the conclusion is forced upon the mind of an intelligent citizen of the Republic that he is either incompetent or that he does not know the business of the Department that he professes to control.

Every man knows that we have spent more than $48,000,000 in the Philippines in the last eighteen months. If we had conducted operations there so economically as that, I am sure that this military appropriation bill, under the guidance of the very efficient gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], would not carry much more than one-half of what is demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HULL. Do you want more time?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. No; I simply want an answer, and then I may want more time after I hear from you.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Contingencies, Inspector-General's Department: For contingent expenses of the Inspector-General's Department at the offices of the several department inspectors-general, being for the purchase of the necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, binding, maps, books of reference, and police utensils, $1,000.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] for a moment, I desire to say that the resolution to which he has just been speaking was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and by them reported to the House, and the answer which the gentleman has criticised was received in response to that resolution. It was placed before the Committee on Insular Affairs. Personally I did not examine it in detail, but it was examined by the minority members of that committee, and no criticism was passed upon it by them. I understood, and I think the committee generally understood, that it had been submitted to the gentleman from Kentucky and that the answer was satisfactory to him. Of course I must be mistaken about that.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I will ask for an extension of the gentleman's time if he desires.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Oh, no. I simply desire to make this statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I desire to say that the sending of the resolution to the Committee on Insular Affairs was not through any desire on my part. I think it properly belonged to the Committee on Military Affairs; but after the resolution went to the committee I never heard of it until it was reported here, nor did I ever hear of the report until some ten days or two weeks after it had been submitted to the House, and then I got it from one of the officials at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I can only say that it was the intention of the committee to elicit the information which the framer of the resolution, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER], intended to elicit, and I regret that there has been any misunderstanding upon the subject, because I am quite sure that we intended to give him all the information which his resolution called for.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman will not think that I am reflecting on the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I did not understand it, but I simply wanted to make that explanation.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, just one word more. So far as the Committee on Military Affairs were concerned, they were not charged with any investigation of this kind and did not go into it; but we were charged with finding out the amount necessary for the support of the Army for the next fiscal year, and did go into that question.

I assume that the report from the Secretary of War was made as to the expense of the Army while in the Philippines proper, or upon Philippine territory, and if confined to that I should imagine that the Secretary of War has given the full amount that it would cost there. If it was intended to cover the expense of the enlistment of soldiers, their clothing and equipage, their transportation to the Philippines, and the return of soldiers from the Philippines, of course it would be utterly inadequate.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HULL. I do not know what the resolution said.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. My friend will pardon me. I will simply state that the resolution was framed with a view to getting the entire cost of military operations, and it contained the words "the cost of military operations."

Mr. HULL. In the Philippines?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. In the Philippines, including equipment and supplies.

Mr. HULL. That would apply to equipment of troops after they reached the Philippines and while they were there. If the gentleman was inquiring as to the cost of maintaining the Army, that was a different thing. The Committee on Military Affairs were charged with that. We had these different bureau officers, who were charged with the disbursement of this fund, before our committee, and the majority and minority members asked all the questions they wanted to and arrived at a unanimous conclusion. To say that the reply of the Secretary of War means that $48,000,000 would cover the expense of the Army, the 100,000,000 men authorized by the last Congress, is simply absurd.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, I will say that I have the report here——

Mr. HULL. By your own confession I think his reply confines it to the expense while the troops are in the Philippines.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to read just a little from General Meiklejohn's response, in which the body of the resolution is set forth?

Mr. HULL. Let me ask the gentleman if he claims that that response applies to the cost of maintaining the Army?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I do, most emphatically. That is what I was trying to get.

Mr. HULL. Then I will say to the gentleman that either he was unfortunate in the language of his resolution or the War Department were unfortunate in their construction of it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will the gentleman tell us what the cost of military operations in the Philippine Islands has been?

Mr. HULL. No; I did not inquire as to the Philippines proper, and neither did the Military Committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. We all know what the cost of maintaining the Army has been, because your bill shows that.

Mr. HULL. That includes all the cost of the whole Army.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Your bill shows that it cost so much.

Mr. HULL. The pay of a man—his regular wages—costs so much whether he is in the Philippines, or in Iowa, or in Kentucky. It costs more to send supplies to the Philippines than it would to Iowa or Kentucky. The item of expense of the transport service says something about the cost of taking soldiers over and returning them, and taking supplies over there for their maintenance while there.

For this fiscal year we appropriated $80,000,000 for the support of the Army, in the regular appropriation bill. The law providing for the Army at the time the appropriations were made had not been agreed to by both Houses. As it finally passed it largely increased the amount necessary, and this Congress has supplied the deficiency. The War Department came to Congress with its showing on the deficiency. That matter did not come to the Committee on Military Affairs. It went to another committee, the Committee on Appropriations.

After investigation there as to what had been done with the $80,000,000, they investigated how much there was asked for and how much they should allow for the balance of this present fiscal year, and appropriated it. We come in now only for the fiscal year beginning on the 1st day of July, 1900, and the hearings before the committee show that we have made a liberal allowance for the coming fiscal year, and with the chance that all of it will probably be used.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Now, before the gentleman takes his seat, as this is a matter I take a great interest in, I will say to him that I have a verbatim copy of the resolution which is transmitted with Mr. Meiklejohn's response, making it competent for the gentleman to say whether or not under this resolution the War Department was expected to transmit to Congress the entire cost of the army in the Philippines, including the transportation and everything of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I do not raise any question as to time.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I desire the chairman of the committee to answer this question.

Mr. HULL. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The language of the resolution is as follows, to state:

The amount of money expended—

This is a verbatim quotation—

The amount of money expended and the amount, so far as he is able to state the same, for which the Government is liable, remaining unpaid, for equipment, transportation, supplies, and the military operations in the Philippine Islands from May 1, 1898, up to and including November 1, 1899.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Iowa if, under the language in the resolution, it did not become the duty of the War Department to furnish the House information as to the total cost of all military operations in the Philippines?

Mr. HULL. In the Philippines, yes. But to do that they have got to separate each enlistment in the Army; they have got to separate the cost of sending each man to the Philippines, starting him from the day of enlistment. I never heard of this proposition, I will say to the gentleman. It did not come to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I am sorry it did not; I tried to get it there.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that the cost of the Army as a whole is all that the Committee on Military Affairs went into. We did not try to segregate except as to the charge for each department, the amount for subsistence, the amount for the Quartermaster's Department, the amount for the Pay Department proper of the Army, and all these different items, but made no attempt to go into the question of how much of that would be expended for the army in the Philippines, how much for the army in Cuba or in Puerto Rico, or how much for the army that was not outside of the limits proper of the United States; so that I am not in a position that I would be competent to give an expression as to the different items, except as to the subsistence of the Army, camp equipage, and the different items, except as we find them appropriated for in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I would like the gentleman to permit me a moment on this subject.

Mr. HULL. Certainly; on any question that affects this bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I desired some information on this subject, and I frankly confess I was without any partisan motive in having this resolution passed.

I am sincere in the position I have taken in regard to the ultimate determination of what the American people shall do with the Philippine Islands; and while it has unfortunately become a partisan question, it is a matter fraught with such pregnant importance to the American people that I believe myself capable of rising above any mere partisan advantage on the subject, and I believe that the American people would be largely influenced in arriving at a settlement of the matter by the question of cost. Therefore I wanted a frank statement from the War Department as to the cost of military operations in the Philippine Islands. I am not satisfied with this statement that has been made.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman object to my making a little further statement to him now?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Certainly not.

Mr. HULL. The evidence before the Military Committee and an examination of the appropriation bills dating back for fifteen or twenty years demonstrates that the cost of the military establishment, meaning the officers, soldiers, and all connected with it, averages about a thousand dollars a year per man.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I am well aware of that; and probably more than that in active operation.

Mr. HULL. More than that now.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. What I desired to know, and what the people of the United States desired to know, was what we were paying for the pleasure of holding the Philippines or for the glory of holding them; and I state that this statement made by the War Department is equivocal and unfair or it is a viciously ignorant one, because there is not an intelligent citizen of the Republic who does not know that we have spent from $48,000,000 to $90,000,000 there within the last eighteen months or two years.

I do not believe that the Secretary of War ever read that report; and if he did before giving it to the House of Representatives it is a stultification on his part or a confession of gross incompetency. What right have we to pass this bill, for which I expect to cast my vote, appropriating $112,000,000 of the people's money, to be used in the next twelve months, and be confronted with a deficit of $25,000,000 or more in the short session of Congress, when they are expending less than one-third of the sum in eighteen months for the maintenance and support of our Army here?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons; telephone apparatus (excluding exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army, by telegraph or otherwise, $97,000.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why this increase from $47,500 to $97,000?

Mr. HULL. I will say that there is an increase in the demand for the reason that the army is on the advance in the Philippines, and they want to be connected by telephone and telegraph. There is a large additional expense, and, as I believe, it will continue for the next year before all the departments are connected with the headquarters by telephone or telegraph at Manila.

The Department states that it was impossible, even after we made the last increase, to say whether that would be sufficient or not, for the reason that the troops in Manila, in the various departments, are constantly increasing their demand, and gave this as one of the illustrations, where they get to-day a cable, say, for fifty telegraphers, to-morrow another would come increasing the order for a hundred, on the ground that we were occupying new territory, and it is cheaper and more economical for the Government to connect by electricity—telegraph and telephone—than to keep a large detachment there to hold the place. This increase was made in the interest of economy to continue this work as rapidly as possible. If communication is rapid and sure, a much smaller force can be left to hold towns.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For the purpose of connecting headquarters, Department of Alaska, at St. Michael, by military telegraph and cable lines with Fort Egbert, Cape Nome, and other military stations in Alaska, $450,550: Provided, That commercial business may be done over these military lines under such conditions as may be deemed, by the Secretary of War, equitable and in the public interests, and that the sum hereby appropriated shall be immediately available.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 8, insert, after the word "interests," the following: "all receipts from such commercial business shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order has been reserved.

Mr. McRAE. I want to reserve a point of order to this paragraph.

Mr. HULL. I will send to the Clerk's desk, Mr. Chairman, and have read a letter from the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily laid aside.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 7, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the War Department has this day transmitted to Congress, through the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, a supplemental estimate of appropriation under the title of "Signal Service of the Army," for the ensuing fiscal year, amounting to $450,550, for the purpose of constructing military telegraph and cable lines between the headquarters of the Department of Alaska, at St. Michael, and Fort Egbert, Cape Nome, and other military stations in Alaska.

It is requested that the subject of this estimate be considered in connection with the estimates for the support of the Army now pending before your committee, and, for the reason suggested by the Chief Signal Officer in his indorsement to the Secretary of War of the 3d instant, "that operations must be commenced in April of this year, in order to utilize the short summer season for the work," it is also requested that the funds, if appropriated, may be made immediately available upon the approval of the act.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Arkansas would like any further information, I have a document submitted to Congress by the Treasury Department and by the colonel commanding in Alaska and by General Greely. It simply goes on to tell us of the great importance not only of making it, but making it at this time in connecting headquarters; otherwise during the last part of the year it is difficult to get communication in any way.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest that the document be printed in the RECORD. It seems to me that all this expense in Alaska, where we have very little use for an army, is useless.

Mr. HULL. I will say to my friend from Arkansas that the expense up there is increasing, and by the large rush of people there, not only our own people, but others, a large increase in this appropriation is demanded.

Mr. McRAE. We do not need a large army up there.

Mr. HULL. The condition of affairs in Alaska, so sparsely settled as it is, you have got to have troops at the mining districts or else you will have riot and bloodshed.

Mr. McRAE. I do not see the use of any big army there.

Mr. HULL. It is not a big army; it is a small army distributed at many points that are practically inaccessible and ought to be connected, as England has already connected her country in the Klondike, with telegraph facilities.

The document offered by Mr. HULL is as follows:

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 10, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, of the 7th instant, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for Signal Service of the Army, $450,550, the same to be made immediately available.

Respectfully,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 7, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, a supplemental estimate ($450,550) of appropriation for "Signal Service of the Army," required by the War Department for use during the ensuing fiscal year, and to request that the funds, if appropriated, may also be made available upon approval of the appropriation act.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 27, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a key map of Alaska, on which is indicated, by red lines, a proposed military telegraph route, together with table of approximate distances between points named.

This route is intended to connect all the military establishments at present in Alaska, and brings Cape Nome, the chief point of interest at this time, in communication with an open harbor throughout the year.

It is thought that the wire for this line can be laid most of the distance upon the ground with perfect safety and, with everything in readiness to begin work at the opening of navigation, can be constructed throughout its entire length in one season.

I would ask that this matter be referred to the Chief Signal Officer for estimate of material, etc., and, if the plan meet with the approval of the Secretary of War, that the Signal Bureau be directed to furnish a suitable officer and a sufficient number of experienced men to take charge of the work.

Very respectfully,

G. M. RANDALL,
Colonel Eighth United States Infantry,
Commanding Department of Alaska.

The ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
January 27, 1900.

Respectfully referred to the Chief Signal Officer for remark and recommendation for the information of the Secretary of War.

H. C. CORBIN, Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, SIGNAL OFFICE,
Washington, February 3, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War with the following remarks and recommendations. The growing commercial importance of Alaska and the prospective future of that country, as indicated by the best experts, show conclusively that a system of communication for this Department should be undertaken at once for the proper control and economical administration of this district. It is thought that the area can be controlled with a much smaller military force, and therefore much more economically and efficiently, by a proper system of communication between isolated forts.

In making estimates, however, for the lines herein requested difficulty is experienced, due to the very unusual conditions which exist in this region. The local high prices, the almost entire absence for any kind of transportation in the interior, and the impracticability of transporting and erecting poles over a large portion of this line makes it necessary to use in a large measure especially adapted insulated wire, in some sections laid directly upon the ground.

This largely increases the expense of the first cost of material, and makes the most careful estimate that can be made largely tentative in character, and the one herewith submitted is deemed to be as low as the work can be constructed. It contemplates the usual course, the work being done by the troops, under the direction of a Signal Corps detachment, and the necessary transportation being furnished by the Quartermaster's Department.

The line is divided into sections, with estimates for each section, and it should be understood that the cutting down of these estimates means the abandoning of a particular section. It is believed that, notwithstanding the comparatively large amount of money estimated for them, these lines are a necessity, and should be undertaken in the next open season of the country, as recommended by the department commander, whose headquarters, now at St. Michael, are entirely isolated from Washington seven months each year.

It should be clearly understood that the greater part of this telegraphic system is an absolute military necessity, as without it the department commander can not reach any of the posts during the critical winter period of the year.

It is announced that the Dominion of Canada has appropriated $350,000 to connect its stations in the Klondike telegraphically with Quesnelle, but this affords no facilities to the commanding general, Department of Alaska. The Chief Signal Officer, therefore, recommends that the inclosed estimate be submitted immediately with favorable indorsement, through the proper channels, to the chairman of the Military Committee, House of Representatives, with a view to incorporating this estimate in the Army bill for the coming fiscal year.

The necessity for the appropriation being available is owing to the fact that operations must be commenced in April of this year, in order to utilize the short summer season for the work.

A. W. GREELY,
Brigadier-General, Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A.

Estimates of additional appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, by the Signal Corps of the Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT—SIGNAL SERVICE.

Signal Service of the Army:

For the purpose of connecting headquarters Department of Alaska, at St. Michael, by military telegraph and cable lines, with Fort Egbert, Cape Nome, and other military stations in Alaska: Provided, That commercial business may be done over these military lines under such conditions as may be deemed, by the Secretary of War, equitable and in the public interests, and that the sum hereby appropriated shall be immediately available. (Submitted) $450,550

NOTE.—This telegraph system is an absolute military necessity, as without it the commanding general, Department of Alaska, will be unable, for the greater part of the year, to reach and conduct military operations with the military posts under his command.

The detailed estimates are as follows:

Valdez to Fort Egbert, 385 miles, at $150 per mile	$57,750
Fort Egbert to Fort Yukon, 285 miles, at $150 per mile	42,750
Fort Yukon to Fort Gibbons, 363 miles, at $150 per mile	54,450
Fort Gibbons to Fort St. Michael, 605 miles:
50 miles submarine cable, at $900 per mile	45,000
555 miles of land cable, at $200 per mile	111,000
Fort St. Michael to Cape Nome, 144 miles of submarine cable, at $900 per mile	129,600
Total	440,550

The cost of equipping stations ($10,000) is not included in their detailed estimate.

The above system connects by the most direct line all the important military posts in the department.—A. W. Greely, Brigadier-General, Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A.

Mr. McCLELLAN. How many troops are stationed in Alaska?

Mr. HULL. Three or four companies.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I do not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois renews the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Pending the point of order——

Mr. HULL. Then the gentleman reserves the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Pending the discussion of the point of order, I would like to discuss the——

Mr. HULL. I will say that if the gentleman wants to raise the point of order, I concede it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand the point of order can easily be made. I understand this situation pretty well, Mr. Chairman; we have been discussing the question of laying cables for a long time. The War Department is anxious to have the authority to lay all the cables it can, not only in Alaska, but to Hawaii, the Philippines, and across to Japan, and everywhere else. If cables are to be laid, they ought to be laid by some other Department, and ought to be under the control of the Post-Office Department after they are laid. This provision is inadequate, I think. I think the connection ought to be made, but I do not think it ought to be done in this way by the War Department.

Mr. HULL. This does not propose to do anything but connect the different headquarters of these troops with the central power in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. This proposes to connect—and if I am wrong I would like to be informed about it—this proposes to connect by a cable, which will be used for commercial purposes a great deal more than it will be used for military purposes. It is perfect nonsense to talk about putting it there for military purposes. The estimated distances are as follows:

From Valdez to Fort Egbert, 385 miles; from Fort Egbert to Fort Yukon, 285 miles; from Fort Yukon to Fort Gibbons, 363 miles; from Fort Gibbons to Fort St. Michael, 605 miles, and from Fort St. Michael to Cape Nome, 144 miles. The estimates in detail will be found on page 3 of the document I hold in my hand.

So far as the other point is concerned, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has an amendment that will probably cover all that objection, for it is true that this telegraph line might be used for some commercial purposes. The primary and only object, however, of the Government in laying this cable is to connect these widely separated commands, so that orders can readily pass from one to another. For instance, between the two places first named the distance is 385 miles. If you should send a vessel that distance, it must be done at great expense and with great delay. The next distance is 285 miles, the next 363 miles, the next 605 miles, and the next 144 miles. The distances between these places make it absolutely imperative that there should be telegraphic connection in the interest of good government and in the interest of economy.

I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I ask that my amendment may be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts which, without objection, the Clerk will again read.

The amendment of Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts was read, as follows:

On page 4, line 8, insert, after the word "interest," the words "all receipts from such commercial business shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The only object of this amendment is that the receipts from the commercial operations of this telegraph and cable shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States. I think there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HULL. The amendment is eminently proper. I think the arrangement which it proposes would be carried out anyhow; but the amendment makes it clear that it shall be done.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,129,300: Provided, That hereafter length-of-service pay of all officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in the provisional army shall be paid on their rank in the Regular Army.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I raise a point of order on proviso beginning at line 15. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I would say that under the law as it stands at present—section 12 of the act approved April 22, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 363), providing that "all officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army, and of the militia of the States when in the service of the United States, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as that of officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Regular Army"—under that section these officers have their longevity pay computed on the salary they receive as volunteer officers.

Now, if this Volunteer Army of ours were a permanent establishment, I might not raise this point of order; but as it is a Volunteer Army which is to exist for only a year or so more, and as the officers who are affected by this provision were selected because of their meritorious record, I do not think it proper that we should at this time change the general law by a provision of this sort.

Mr. HULL. Can the gentleman refer to any law which gives this longevity pay now?

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I have just read it.

Mr. HULL. What law is it?

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Section 12 of the act approved April 22, 1898.

Mr. HULL. What does that provide as to longevity pay?

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I have just read the provision—"that all officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army, and of the militia of the States when in the service of the United States, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as that of officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Regular Army."

Mr. HULL. That does not apply in this case.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Yes, sir; it does; and I will show the gentleman. Volunteer officers who served in the Regular Army previous to 1898, when they went into the service of the United States, did not get any commission from the Government, but went in from one of the States. While in the United States service they got longevity pay computed on their salary as volunteer officers for the length of time they had previously served in the United States Army. A United States officer holding one of these commissions is on exactly the same footing as a man who had previously resigned and then accepted a commission.

As I said before, if this Volunteer Army were a regular establishment to continue indefinitely, I would not raise the point of order, but it affects only about 200 officers, selected because of their good record; and while they are in the service of the country—a large majority of them out in the Philippines—I do not think it comes with good grace for us to pass this provision which cuts them down in this amount.

The average amount, as I say, on less than 200 officers affected is about $15 a month, and the total saving would be about $35,000. Now, I do not think it good policy to change the general law to save $35,000 at the expense of the men in the field at the present time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLAYTON], if he has finished what he wanted to say—I do not want to interfere with him——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Very well.

Mr. HULL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had concluded.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. I want to say that this matter, in my judgment, is not subject to a point of order and does not change existing law, as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Well, now——

Mr. HULL. It is simply a limitation or a regulation as to how a fund appropriated by this Congress shall be computed. If that is a change of law, to that extent it would be subject to the point of order.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if he strikes out the word "hereafter"——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. These men are now receiving a certain salary which they get under the general law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the word "hereafter," which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] has just called his attention to. With that word in it it is certainly more than a limitation upon this appropriation.

Mr. HULL. If this is stricken out on the point of order I shall offer an amendment with the word "hereafter" omitted.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. It changes the existing law.

Mr. HULL. It does not affect any officer in the Regular Army in his lineal place in the Army. It only affects those who have secured high positions in the volunteer service, large promotions over what they had in the Regular Army, and from grades which are still occupied by others of the same class who graduated from West Point at the same time.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. That has nothing to do with the point of order. The gentleman is pleading the merits of the case now.

Mr. HULL. So did you. We have both pleaded to the merits of the case. I admit this is not directly on the point of order. If these men get the pay of the higher grade and the longevity pay to which they are entitled on account of their service in the Regular Army, the committee believes that is sufficient and that they ought to be confined to that longevity pay while receiving the emoluments and benefits of a higher grade than other men in the Regular Army, which all the others would be delighted to have. While it may affect only $30,000, that makes no difference. The question is as to the justice of it, if it was only one dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. HULL. Well, let the Chair rule.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I should just like to say one word, Mr. Chairman, in opposition to what the gentleman has said. These officers receive this higher pay, but they are called upon to exercise more authority and bear more responsibility, and they are entitled to that extra pay, and I submit that they are now being paid under a just law.

Mr. CAPRON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Yes.

Mr. CAPRON. I should like to ask the gentleman if a captain in the Regular Army, who is selected to be a colonel in one of the volunteer organizations simply because he is a friend of the appointing power or of the governor of a State or for some other reason, no matter what——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I will say to the gentleman that these selections——

Mr. HULL. Wait a minute. If this officer is commissioned as a colonel of a volunteer regiment, if he gets his compensation as colonel, over and above the compensation which he would otherwise receive as a captain, is not that a sufficiently material increase of compensation for that officer when there are in the service two or three hundred other officers equally deserving but not able to obtain a volunteer commission—officers of equal length of service? Why should that one officer receive longevity pay beyond all these other worthy officers of his class, to which class he will return at the end of his volunteer service?

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Because his new commission imposes upon him greater duties, more responsibilities, and harder work——

Mr. CAPRON. For which he is amply paid by the increased pay of his new rank.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I did not bother the gentleman from Rhode Island. Now, let him wait until I get through. His new commission sends him into the field, into a more responsible position, with more difficult duties to perform; and his selection, if it is honestly made, shows that he has fitted himself for the exercise of this higher command, and is entitled to the pay and emoluments of that rank. Now, Mr. Chairman, these men are paid under a general law——

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to lose the idea of what the longevity pay is for.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I ask for the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Then I offer the following amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That length of service pay of all officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in the provisional army shall be paid on their rank in the Regular Army.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, I did not quite catch the reading of that.

Mr. HULL. The only difference between the amendment that I offer and the provision reported by the committee is to leave out the word "hereafter," in line 16, so that it makes it apply to this appropriation only.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. Who recommends this legislation?

Mr. HULL. The committee.

Mr. MAHON. Is there any recommendation from the War Department?

Mr. HULL. None, except that one officer of the War Department when he was before the committee was asked if he thought there would be any injustice in the provision, and he said he thought not.

Mr. MAHON. I have had a little experience with the War Department, and there are several gentlemen up in that Department who feel disposed to take all the honors of the late war to themselves, although they have earned the greater part of their military record behind screened desks, and they are disposed to strike at the men who are in the field. Now, there is some purpose in this amendment.

Mr. HULL. Let me say to the gentleman right here now that this provision was reported by the committee without a suggestion from the War Department.

Mr. MAHON. That is what I am asking.

Mr. HULL. And I wish to say that the War Department, under the present law, has construed the matter in favor of giving the increased longevity pay to every man, whether in Washington, in the Philippines, in Cuba, or in any other part of this country, on the basis of the temporary command that he is now holding.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. HULL. So that the remarks of the gentleman as to the War Department are not just.

Mr. MAHON. You propose to take from these men what the present law gives them.

Mr. HULL. No; what the present regulation gives them.

Mr. MAHON. You propose to reduce their pay. That is the whole proposition.

Mr. HULL. We propose in this amendment to give the man who is appointed a colonel of a volunteer regiment, but appointed from the Regular Army, practically by detail, the same longevity pay which is received by his brother officers who have had equal length of service in the Regular Army, but who have not been fortunate enough to secure these desirable commissions. A captain in the Regular Army is given a commission as colonel of a provisional regiment. Now, we propose to give him, as colonel, the same pay as would be given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], if he were commissioned as a colonel of one of these volunteer regiments.

Mr. MAHON. Do you not mean this——

Mr. HULL. And in addition to the pay which the colonel would get who was appointed from civil life, the man who is appointed to be a colonel, but who has heretofore been a captain in the Regular Army, would get the longevity pay that he has earned by reason of his service in the Regular Army as lieutenant and as captain.

Mr. MAHON. You propose that a captain of the Regular Army who led a regiment into the field, as a colonel of a volunteer regiment—you propose to give him the same pay as you give a captain who has spent his life in the bureau from the day he left West Point up to the present time.

Mr. HULL. Not a bit of it. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about. We give him the pay of a colonel.

Mr. MAHON. I mean the longevity pay.

Mr. HULL. Take the case of the colonel of the Fifty-first Iowa. He was with his regiment in 16 battles. He got the $3,500 a year, which is the regular pay of a colonel. Now, the colonel of a regiment who had been a captain in the Regular Army got the pay of $3,500——

Mr. MAHON. I understand that——

Mr. HULL. And in addition to that he got the longevity pay of a colonel. If he had been in for twenty years he got 40 per cent increase of pay up to the limit provided by law, which fixes the maximum pay of a colonel at $4,500. If he was a captain of cavalry he got $3,500 plus $800, making $4,300. And yet his rank is the same as that of the volunteer.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. That statement is not——

Mr. HULL. That statement is absolutely true.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Let me tell you why it is not.

Mr. HULL. Let me finish, then.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I can show you why it is not.

Mr. HULL. That is absolutely true. This provision does not cut him off from the longevity pay that he is entitled to by his rank as a captain in the Regular Army. That he is entitled to and ought to have. But there is no reason why, holding a temporary position, whether in the field or in the Department at Washington, a higher commission in the Volunteer Army than his regular rank in the Regular Army—there is no reason why he should have not only the pay of the rank, which we concede, but an additional perquisite in longevity pay that he has not earned in that rank, or in the ranks of major and lieutenant-colonel leading up to the position of colonel.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute? I should like to state one thing.

Mr. MAHON. This longevity pay is to pay for this provisional service.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no.

Mr. MAHON. That is your amendment. You apply it to this appropriation.

Mr. HULL. This will apply to this appropriation for this fiscal year.

Mr. MAHON. I know that, but my position is as to this appropriation that these men who serve in the field should have the longevity pay of the rank that they hold in the field during the time of the service.

Mr. HULL. He does not serve long enough to earn it. It takes five years to earn it. Practically the volunteers are never in long enough to earn longevity pay.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I know a man who was appointed colonel in the volunteer service in 1898. He had twenty years' service, but he had resigned. Only for the fact that he had resigned, in such a case as this, under this proposed amendment, he would get his 40 per cent of colonel's pay. But if he had not resigned from the Regular Army he would only get 40 per cent on the pay of a captain. Now, I submit it is not right to make this distinction.

Mr. HULL. I do not think that is correct. He would get the longevity pay of the rank in which he had earned it.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Do you say that is not correct?

Mr. HULL. I do. If the proviso prevails he would get longevity pay as on a captain's salary, and not on that of a colonel, as now.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Under the construction, I know he did, because I know of the individual cases. Now, because a man happens to resign he would be in a better position than the man who had held his commission in the Regular Army. That is what it is under this proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit an amendment to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 18 the following:
"To the heirs of officers in the Regular Army who have died since January 1, 1898, two months' extra pay, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that that is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I would like to have the gentleman reserve his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa raises the point of order against the amendment. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order until I make my statement?

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to reserving the point of order to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to the manifest injustice, as I understand the law, that was done to the families of officers of the Regular Army, under the provisions of the act which was passed March 3, 1899, and which reads as follows:

That the act of January 12, 1899, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to authorize the payment to the legal heirs or representatives of the officers and enlisted men who died or were killed or who may die in the service, the extra pay provided for in that act for officers and enlisted men who have been or are to be mustered out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the operation of that act the officers and men who were a part of the volunteer service and who died in the service, their families and legal representatives were paid this extra month's money, but the families of the officers of the Regular Army are denied this payment. I can not see where the justice of that measure lies; and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that statement I have made on the floor just now is not true?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is quite a difference between the Volunteer and the Regular Army. Under the terms of that act those in the Volunteer Army who served abroad were given two months' extra pay, and those who served at home were given one month's extra pay. The Regular Army is a life position. The officer is paid for it, as it is his business to serve in the Army. He does not throw up a position and go into the Army for a few months to the neglect of his own business and then come back and take up the tangled threads again, as the volunteer officer did, and therefore I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. One moment. The officers of the Regular Army have obtained this extra two months' pay and the enlisted men also, but the families of those officers and of those men that were killed in Cuba or died in the service have been denied this amount of money. I am sure if live men are entitled to the money, the families of those who have been killed in battle or died from disease are deserving of recognition.

Mr. HULL. That is not a correct statement. That alluded to men who had enlisted in the Army for the war only in the Regular Army, and they were given the two months' extra pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But their families have been denied any extra money.

Mr. HULL. The Department has prepared a ruling on that matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. It was given to the officers and the enlisted men, but families of those who died in the service have been denied this two months' extra pay.

Mr. HULL. This is not the place to settle that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay for length of service, $875,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 24, page 4, the following:
"To the heirs of enlisted men in the Regular Army who have died since January 1, 1898, two months' extra pay, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order against that amount. We can not take that out of the extra-service pay for men who are alive. This appropriation provides for the number that are on the list, and could not cover an entirely different expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. That applies to men of the Regular Army that died in the service, so that their families can be paid.

Mr. HULL. We are not appropriating for this fiscal year, but for another year, commencing July 1 next.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. You can amend this bill so as to cover cases where the Government has not done justice.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, after which the gentleman offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 24, page 4:
"That in all cases where an officer or enlisted man in the Army of the United States died since the 1st day of January, 1898, the heirs or legal representatives who paid the cost of burial shall be reimbursed by the United States in a sum not to exceed $35 for privates, and in the case of the burial of officers $100, irrespective of any expense incurred by the Government.

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order while I make a statement. Referring to a decision made by the Comptroller on that subject——

Mr. HULL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, under the decision made by the Comptroller, as is reported in the decision made November 1, 1899, is the following:

The soldier was killed in the battle at El Caney July 1, 1898, and was buried there, presumably at the expense of the United States. It does not appear in evidence, but it is assumed that the remains of the soldier were brought north under the direction of the Secretary of War, provision for which was made by the act of July 8, 1898.

And, Mr. Chairman, the War Department made the ruling and put it into practice allowing $35 for the family of a soldier killed in battle for the payment of burial expenses, and $100 in the case of an officer. Now, the Comptroller has ruled that where the bodies were taken from the field of battle and thrown into a trench they were buried by the United States Government, and has refused the payment to the legal representatives of those who fell in Cuba. I say that this decision is an outrage, and I think Congress should place it beyond the power of any official of the Government to negative the plain intent of the Government in this way. In many cases the families of these soldiers are unable to bear the burden of burial, and the Government ought to be willing to give this small pittance. If the Regular Army soldier was a constant voter, I suppose his case would get greater consideration.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is another part of the bill that deals with this question. It would not be proper here under any circumstances, but there is another part of the bill that makes provision for soldiers and civilian employees of the Government who die in service of the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman agree——

Mr. HULL. I will make an agreement when the time comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

PAY TO CLERKS AND MESSENGERS AT DEPARTMENT HEADQUARTERS AND AT HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY.

Nine clerks, at $1,800 each per annum.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman's point of order apply to different parts of the section?

Mr. McRAE. I make it first to the paragraph beginning at line 3. That is increasing the number of clerks, and is really a change of law.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that that same argument would apply to the first two provisions running down to line 6.

Mr. McRAE. It would apply it to the first, second, and third paragraphs when increases are made in pay or number.

Mr. HULL. Suppose the gentleman lets the provision be read applying to the general-service clerks down to and including line 16?

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that if my point of order is reserved to all of the paragraphs read.

Mr. HULL. I will agree that the gentleman shall not lose any of his rights, and then we shall have the whole matter before us.

Mr. McRAE. Reserving my right, Mr. Chairman, to make a point of order against the whole or any part of it, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read, with that reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nine clerks, at $1,600 each per annum.
Thirty clerks, at $1,400 each per annum.
Sixty clerks, at $1,200 each per annum.
Eighty-two clerks, at $1,000 each per annum.
Eleven general-service messengers, at $840 each per annum.
Fifty-seven general-service messengers, at $720 each per annum.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, we had this question up last year, and the contention of the Committee on Military Affairs was that this does not increase the number by a single clerk, but increases the compensation. The compensation is fixed each year by the appropriation bill only. There is no other provision in regard to it that I know of, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], as I remember, in the chair, overruled the point of order last year when raised on just this provision. If the point was reserved, I would send to the desk and have read the reasons that influenced the committee in making this increase, not in the number of clerks, but the increase in the compensation.

I want to say that this increase is honestly earned by the clerks. They have been serving and performing duties at a less compensation than the clerks in the other parts of the War Department, working side by side, have been getting for the last thirty years. For instance—this does not go to the point of order—but the chief clerk of the General Commanding the Army has a compensation of $1,200 a year, while in all the other bureaus of the War Department the clerks performing the same service get $1,800. This is an adjustment of salaries to make them harmonious with those of other clerks of the Department. So far as I am concerned, I believe it is absolutely just, and I do not believe that on an appropriation bill, where the salary is fixed from year to year, it is subject to a point of order as to the adjustment of salary, while a point of order would lie against the increase of the force.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, if that proposition were true, we would have no limitation whatever upon Congress in appropriations for clerks, etc.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes, we would.

Mr. McRAE. Here they take 18 clerks receiving $1,200 and give 9 of them $1,800 and 9 of them $1,600, and then they go down to where they have 100 clerks and reduce them to 82. While he does not increase the number of people employed, he does largely increase the salaries of some and the aggregate amount paid. I submit to the Chairman that each one of these paragraphs must stand alone. I make the point first against the one including lines 3 and 4, against the change of the salary paid the men. It is unnecessary for me to take up the time in discussing the matter, because I know the Chairman is perfectly familiar with the principle, and I think the gentleman is mistaken when he says that the point of order was overruled a year ago by the present Chairman.

Mr. HULL. In reply to the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas that if the committee could report such amount of appropriation under this head as it pleased from year to year, there would be no protection to the Government, I assume that this House is some protection to the Government and that its members will pass upon questions of this kind with a view to the interests of the Government. Suppose, on the other hand, the committee should report a general reduction all along the line; that would be subject to a point of order if this is.

Mr. McRAE. My point is that this is not the place to make an increase of this kind, even if proper. We have a Civil Service Commission, and we have the different Executive Departments, whose duty it is to look after the promotion of the clerks under the regulations and law. If each committee having jurisdiction of an appropriation bill could in this way take care of its own friends and increase their salaries five or six hundred dollars whenever they pleased, where would the practice end? It is wrong in principle, and is a species of favoritism that ought to stop.

Mr. HULL. Let me say to my friend that the Civil Service Commission and the promotion bureau could only provide for promotions up to the limit authorized by law. There is no law fixing this compensation other than appropriations made from year to year in the appropriation bill.

Mr. McRAE. If the law is wrong, change it in the proper way.

Mr. HULL. There is no law other than what we are enacting. There is no place where the compensation of these employees is fixed except on the appropriation bill passed from year to year. That being the case, we have the right to say that the pay of any of these officers should be reported in the bill at $1,800, $1,600, or $900, and this House has a right to say whether it will adopt our proposition or not.

Mr. McRAE. We may have the power, but it is one we ought not to exercise; and, so far as I am concerned, I am not content to have salaries increased here in this way to any extent that we may desire, upon the judgment simply of one committee, that can not know anything about the services of the clerks in question except what may come to them as secondhand information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, in looking up the record, discovers that the basis of the decision made by the gentleman from Illinois while occupying the chair last year was a statute which provides as follows:

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

So that the decision of the gentleman from Illinois last year was based upon a provision of law for whatever number of clerks Congress chose to appropriate in any particular Department—which is a proposition differing distinctly from that suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. But in this case the gentleman admits that we have nothing except the current law, and consequently we are bound by it. There can be no question about this being an increase over current law.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; here is a general statute providing that so many clerks of the several classes named shall be employed in a Department as Congress chooses to appropriate for. That is the law which permits us to make this appropriation; and it presents a different state of facts entirely from one where there has been no statute whatever and where we are dependent entirely upon a former appropriation.

Mr. McRAE. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that there was no law regulating this matter; and if there is any, I ask that it be read.

Mr. HULL. My suggestion was that the only authority of law is in the appropriation bill passed from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the ruling of the gentleman from Illinois, as found in the RECORD, must be followed by the present occupant of the chair, unless the present situation is shown to differ from that then presented.

Mr. CANNON. I care nothing about the merits of this matter; but the Chair will indulge a single remark, that the particular clause of the statute under the heading of a particular Department, referred to in that decision, treats of the Departments proper—the Interior, the War, the Navy, the Post-Office Department, and so on. Now, the employees at present under consideration are not clerks of class 1, 2, 3, and 4, nor are they messengers. They belong to the military establishment as contradistinguished from the various Departments. I feel quite sure that such is the interpretation of the statute referred to. If the Chair had the statute before him I would be glad to call his attention——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not the statute before him. The section as read by the Chair is found in the RECORD in connection with the ruling made by the gentleman from Illinois last year.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think that the statute refers to the clerical assistants at Army headquarters or in connection with the Quartermaster-General or the Commissary-General in the Army proper. Nor do I think it refers to clerical assistants aboard ship or anywhere except in the Departments. That is my recollection of the statute. I see the Chair has the statute before him.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, the discussion has proceeded upon the theory and upon the admission of the gentleman from Iowa that that was the statute which classified these clerks, and the appropriation is not made by classification, but is an increase in salary over that appropriated for last year.

Mr. CANNON. The Chair will notice in section 163 that it is provided that—

The clerks in the Departments shall be arranged in four classes, distinguished as first, second, third, and fourth classes.

That is under the head of "Executive Departments." Now, section 169, after speaking of the clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, laborers, and watchmen, says:

Each head of a Department is authorized to employ in his Department such number of clerks of the several classes as are recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. Since the gentleman from Illinois has called the attention of the Chair to this statute wherein it refers to classified clerks, the Chair is of the opinion that this section does not come within the class contemplated by the statute. The Chair will be glad to have this section passed over for a moment until he can send for a report that is referred to here which he has not now before him.

Mr. McRAE. As far as I am concerned, if it will facilitate the consideration of the bill, I am willing that the paragraph should be passed, not only for a few moments, but until to-morrow or later in the evening, if it is desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it will only take a few moments.

Mr. HULL. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact, however, that the only compensation fixed for these clerks or that has ever been fixed is in the appropriation bills from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. But that is not the point that we are speaking about now. The question now is whether the statute contemplates simply clerks in the Department proper or whether it contemplates covering clerks at the Headquarters of the Army.

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to passing over it, if the Chair desires.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that provision will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. HULL. The Clerk can read, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $276,880.

And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve.

Mr. MAHON. I raise the point of order against the paragraph which has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania raises the point of order against lines 19, 20, and 21.

Mr. MAHON. That is clearly new legislation and a change of existing law.

Mr. HULL. That has been in every appropriation bill every year for some years. It is intended to prevent the bickering of the different Departments.

Mr. MAHON. The Secretary of War can not employ men under the civil-service law in this way.

Mr. HULL. We pass this language every year.

Mr. MAHON. That does not make any difference. You violate the law every year, then. It is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Iowa the last appropriation bill before him?

Mr. HULL. The last appropriation bill reads as follows:

And said clerks and messengers shall be employed and assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will strike out the word "employed"—the Secretary of War can assign them, but he can not employ them under the law.

Mr. HULL. He assigns them to the positions in which they are to serve.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, but he must have them certified. If these men are now authorized by law, they must be certified from the Civil Service Commission, and that is where the Secretary of War must get his men.

Mr. HULL. Yes, but they are not assigned by the Civil Service Commission to certain employment.

Mr. MAHON. He can assign them when he gets them, but he can not employ them.

Mr. HULL. I do not care whether you have the word "employed" or not. The word "assigned" is the important word. It is the same thing that we have had for many years.

Mr. MAHON. The Secretary of War can assign them.

Mr. HULL. When you come to these messengers, I do not know whether they are under the civil service or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa state that this is the same as the provision of last year?

Mr. HULL. Yes; identically the same; and before that, for many years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MAHON. One moment. This only applies to specific appropriations each year, and it does not follow that because we allowed it in the past they can be legally employed in this way in the future. We give to the Secretary of War the right to employ 158 men whose salaries run from $1,200 to $2,000, and these men are under the civil-service law, and if he wants men for these places he is bound to ask for them from the Civil Service Commission. Then he can assign them to any place he sees proper. If the gentleman will strike out the word "employed," I do not think that amendment will change existing law.

Mr. HULL. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that if they are all under the civil-service law the words here mean nothing, because the Secretary of War could not employ them in any other way if they are under the civil service.

Mr. MAHON. Take out the word "employed," then.

Mr. HULL. If any of these messengers are not under the civil-service law, you may, by striking this out, deprive him of the right to employ messengers which he now has the right to employ.

Mr. MAHON. All those are over twelve hundred, and are covered.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; some of the messengers run down to $720.

Mr. MAHON. It would not cover those, but it would cover the others.

Mr. HULL. I do not know whether it will cover all or not. These words do not do any harm, because they do not change the method of their selection. They are simply following the rule that has been followed, and I have never had my attention called to it. The question has not been raised before since I have been in Congress, and I think it had better remain just as it is.

Mr. MAHON. All right; but if this section goes through, the Secretary of War can employ these men and assign them, regardless of the civil-service law, because this is a law which we are passing now, and I think that is the intention.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman can move to strike the word out.

Mr. MAHON. I move to strike out the word "employed."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the words "employed and." The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not care to discuss that motion, of course. I want to obtain some information from the chairman of the committee or some one on the committee. Is there any provision in the bill to pay officers in the Army serving in a higher capacity temporarily?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; that is the law now. We have an appropriation in here to amend what is already the law, and we have a proviso that the committee will offer, when the proper time comes, to limit it.

Mr. SPIGHT. Can you refer without inconvenience to the section where that occurs?

Mr. HULL. We will reach it in a little while. These are for men on the staff of the Army proper. If you will allow the reading to go on, we will reach it soon. I think it is page 14, lines 19 and 20.

Mr. SPIGHT. Thank you.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 10 junior veterinary surgeons, $9,000: Provided, That the additional veterinary surgeons provided for in this bill shall be graduates of some recognized veterinary college: Provided further, That junior veterinary surgeons shall be allowed and paid monthly the sum of $3.71 during the entire period of their service in lieu of the clothing allowance of a sergeant-major.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against the whole proviso of the first paragraph on page 11.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold the point of order just a minute? It is clearly subject to a point of order. We have now ten veterinary surgeons in ten regiments of cavalry. It is a provision for ten veterinary surgeons, and they will all have to be selected. We have only ten veterinary surgeons. That only classifies them as senior and junior. They are now known as first and second class. One of them gets $100 a month and the other $75 a month. We have ten regiments of cavalry. They are not all provided with veterinary surgeons. We have seven regiments of artillery which are not provided with veterinary surgeons.

This is a very small increase in a corps which is not enough now, and is a real saving to the Government. We would have made it more in the committee in this bill, but we have now pending before the committee a bill that deals with this question more in detail. It is a matter of great importance to the Government to have the services of these men. It saves many times over their salaries; and if they can have the selecting of them, they ought to select these men from the modern school of veterinary, and thus obtain the services of men who have been thoroughly educated in that line. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will see the necessity for this legislation. The Quartermaster's Department now employs veterinary surgeons, but it is not covered by this section.

Mr. McRAE. I only make the point of order against the proviso. I am willing to give them the horse doctors, but I do not want to have this new legislation.

Mr. HULL. There is nothing in the law about where they shall be obtained from now.

Mr. HAY. What objection has the gentleman to having these people examined and the graduates from these schools being recognized?

Mr. McRAE. I think there are quite as good horse doctors who have never had anything to do with colleges.

Mr. HAY. There are many of these colleges in this country—one in almost every State.

Mr. McRAE. How many are there in Virginia?

Mr. HAY. Two, I believe; and there are two in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McRAE. It would be all very well for those States that have them, but there are just as good horse doctors outside of the colleges as in the colleges.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is very much mistaken about it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the modern veterinary surgeon is an educated man. We have in a great many of the large principal cities very efficient schools for veterinary science; and if we are to have these men employed, let us at least get those who can bring to the service of the Army some amount of training. The Army has suffered in the past by having men who were simply farriers. When the last war was going on and we had a large number of horses at Tampa, on account of the lack of veterinary surgeons the Government practically lost several hundred horses.

Mr. MARSH. A thousand.

Mr. HULL. My friend says a thousand.

Mr. McRAE. Why did they not get good ones?

Mr. HULL. Because the Congress of the United States has never authorized us to deal with these men fairly, so that we could have them.

Mr. McRAE. What has the trouble been?

Mr. HULL. One has been the pay. You can not get a first-class veterinary who has had a large experience for $75 a month.

Mr. McRAE. That is all you propose to give these men.

Mr. HULL. You can get the younger men for that amount; but you can not get the better qualified.

Mr. McRAE. That is all you propose to pay these.

Mr. HULL. We are taking a step further and giving them a greater privilege than we have before. We propose to increase the pay and to increase the qualifications as much as possible. If you strike out that provision as to the selection, the War Department might make regulations not to accept anybody who was not a graduate. But I think it is a good thing for this Congress to certify that hereafter we are going to get the very best talent we can to look after important interests of the Government.

Mr. McRAE. There are just as well-qualified horse doctors outside of the colleges as there are in them. We want to get good men, whether they are from colleges or not. So far as that is concerned, I will withdraw the point of order as against the number, making it as presented, and let the Department take the responsibility of getting them, and they can get the best men they can, but I will not consent to requiring them to be graduates.

Mr. HULL. Very well.

Mr. McRAE. I make the point of order against the two provisos.

Mr. HULL. I do not think the gentleman should do that. The last proviso only affects the clothing allowance.

Mr. McRAE. I am not familiar with military terms, and I do not know what the last proviso means.

Mr. HULL. It is simply an adjustment of the clothing account that the Government will furnish them. This settles with them monthly in cash and lets them buy their own clothing, instead of keeping a clothing account with them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What rank is given to these horse doctors?

Mr. HULL. No regular rank. It is a kind of mixed rank; a kind of noncommissioned officer and civilian employee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When you give them this allowance you do not give them the rank of a sergeant-major?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; they have no rank.

Mr. McRAE. I make the point of order as to the first proviso, and move to amend by striking out the word "further" in the second.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to say that there is no existing statute for this?

Mr. HULL. "The gentleman from Iowa" does not contest the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Without objection, the word "further," in line 4, will be stricken out. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For pay of 90 paymasters' clerks, at $1,400 each, $126,000.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order for the purpose of making an inquiry. I would like to know something about the reason for this increase.

Mr. HULL. This includes the paymasters' clerks that are serving with what are called volunteer paymasters.

Mr. McRAE. But why the increase?

Mr. HULL. On account of having more paymasters than the regular establishment is provided for. Every paymaster is entitled to a clerk, and some have two.

Mr. McRAE. You only had seventy last year. How is that? This is an increase over last year.

Mr. HULL. This is the number that the War Department has certified that they have employed to meet the requirements of the service.

Mr. McRAE. Had they the authority to employ them?

Mr. HULL. I should say yes. In the last three months there have been 12 additional paymasters' clerks sent to the Philippines, and this simply appropriates for the number the Department has employed.

Mr. McRAE. It is in fact, then, an increase of twenty?

Mr. HULL. It is an increase over what we had last year.

Mr. McRAE. Well, I call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side to this; I do not care to insist upon it under all the circumstances, but it seems to be an unusually large increase in clerks to paymasters.

Mr. HULL. But there is an increased demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas does not insist on his point of order?

Mr. McRAE. No; I understand that they are already employed, and if so, they ought to be paid; and if necessary to the Pay Department, they should be employed.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For pay of paymasters' messengers, $10,000.
For traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks and expert accountant of the Inspector General's Department, $35,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. Is there an expert now in the Inspector-General's Office?

Mr. HULL. Yes; there is.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For additional pay to officer in charge of public buildings and grounds at Washington, D. C., $1,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why this increase?

Mr. HULL. I will say that this paragraph is not subject to a point of order. The existing law provides that whoever serves in the position of superintendent of public buildings and grounds shall have the pay, rank, and allowances of a colonel in the Regular Army. This appropriation is to make up the difference in pay in the Army proper and the position he is holding. If he was a colonel, there would be no need of the appropriation. If a captain, the difference in pay would have to be met by appropriation.

Mr. MAHON. Very well; I will withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $3,000,000.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines 1 and 2 on page 13 and insert the following:

"For traveling allowances to enlisted men and officers on discharge, $2,000,000: Provided, That hereafter when an officer or an enlisted man is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be allowed a commutation for traveling allowances of 4 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to the place of his residence at the time of his appointment, in the case of an officer, and to the place of his enlistment in the case of an enlisted man: Provided, however, That the Government may furnish both transportation and subsistence in kind for the whole or any part of the distance, and if it shall do so, no commutation shall be allowed for the portion of the distance so furnished: Provided further, That if transportation, without subsistence, be furnished in kind, the officer or enlisted man shall be allowed commutation, for travel subsistence, of 2 cents per mile: And provided further, That transportation and subsistence shall be furnished in kind for all sea travel, when traveling to, from, and between our island possessions in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and no commutation shall be allowed therefor: And provided further, That in case an officer or enlisted man serving under an appointment accepted or enlistment made in the United States shall have been transported to any of our island possessions and there be discharged and reenlist, he shall, on final discharge from service, be entitled to transportation and subsistence or commutation therefor, as above provided, from place of discharge to place of residence at time of appointment or place of last enlistment in the United States."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order and not reserve it. I make the point of order that it is a change of existing law. If any gentleman desires to be heard upon it, I will for the time being withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserved the point of order to give the gentleman from Wisconsin an opportunity to say what he desired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to say that the amendment does change existing law, and the point of order may be made. The existing law allows an officer or an enlisted man to commute his transportation and subsistence at the rate of one day for every 20 miles. That was a statute passed in 1812, when 20 miles was considered the ordinary day's travel, and it has existed upon the statute book from that day to this, and settlements made with honorably discharged men—enlisted men and officers—have been made on the basis of that antique statute.

In order that the House may understand how much this old statute means to the Government, I have secured a few statistics. For instance, if a captain be discharged in San Francisco and is sent home to Washington, that being the place where he received his appointment and commission, he would travel 3,147 miles. Under the old statute as it exists to-day he would be entitled to draw or commute for subsistence and for travel the amount of $785. His railroad ticket from San Francisco to Washington would cost him only $77.75.

In the case of a colonel, he could draw on discharge the amount of $1,536; a brigadier-general, $2,398; whereas the cost of a ticket to a brigadier-general is the same as to an enlisted man, namely, $77.75. The amendment which I have offered is to the effect that his travel and his subsistence should be commuted at the rate of 4 cents a mile. Even at that rate he would be entitled to $125.88; this amount less the cost of his ticket would leave a balance of $48.13 to pay for his palace-car or chair-car privileges and pay for his meals.

The amendment further provides that the Government in all instances of sea travel shall furnish travel and subsistence in kind; and in case any person discharged in any of our island possessions reenlists, he shall not be entitled to his discharge money until his final discharge. There are many instances on record where an officer or enlisted man, discharged in those islands, has demanded his money to return and has then stayed in the islands. This amendment obviates that difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order. The Clerk will continue reading the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on deposits and detained pay of enlisted men, including soldiers' deposits to be repaid, $2,275,000.

Mr. HULL. I move to strike out, in the paragraph just read, the words "detained pay."

Mr. Chairman, there is at this time no such thing as detained pay, all of it having been returned. The language in the bill is the same that we have had in this bill for a great many years; but since the bill was reported, the War Department has informed us that, under a law passed by Congress some four years ago, all the detained pay has been returned; so that there is no longer any necessity for retaining these words in the appropriation bill. I therefore move to strike them out.

[Mr. RIDGELY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HULL, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of a clerk attendant on the collection and classification of military information, $1,500.

Mr. MAHON. Does this paragraph provide for a new clerk, or is this clerk now employed?

Mr. HULL. This provision is for a clerk that has been employed for years.

Mr. MAHON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons, when traveling on duty under orders without troops, $500,000: Provided, That officers so traveling shall be paid 7 cents per mile and no more; distances to be computed and mileage to be paid over the shortest usually traveled routes, with deduction as hereinafter provided for such portion of any route as may be over a subsidized railroad; and payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers shall be made according to distances computed over routes established and by mileage tables prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph has been sufficiently read to disclose the fact that the whole paragraph is subject to the point of order which I now make.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the remainder of the paragraph, if it is not admitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

And all payments made by paymasters on account of mileage previous to the passage of this act shall be settled in accordance with distance tables officially promulgated and in use at date of payment: Provided further, That in cases of journeys of 1,000 miles and over officers who so desire may, upon application to the Quartermaster's Department, be furnished with transportation requests for the entire journey under their orders; and the cost of the through ticket obtained on such requests shall be a charge against the officer's mileage account, to be deducted by the paymaster paying the same and turned over monthly to an authorized officer of the Quartermaster's Department: And provided further, That actual expenses only shall be paid to officers for sea travel when traveling, as herein provided for, to, from, and between our island possessions in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans: And provided further, That when the established route of travel shall, in whole or in part, be over the line of any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, or over the railroad of any railroad company which by law is entitled to receive only 50 per cent of the compensation earned by such company for transportation services rendered the United States, officers traveling as herein provided for shall, for the travel over the subsidized portion of such roads, be furnished with a transportation request by the Quartermaster's Department, and the cost of the transportation so furnished shall be a charge against the officer's mileage account for such travel, to be deducted by the paymaster who pays the account, at through rates as paid by the general public for travel over such roads.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and I do it because the paragraph in several respects changes existing law.

In the first place, I call the attention of the Chair to line 14. The appropriation for mileage has heretofore invariably been—

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons "authorized by law."

The change here proposed is that mileage shall be paid—

When traveling on duty under orders without troops.

Obviously it would be within the power of any commanding officer who desired to do a favor to any of his subordinates to issue an order to him to travel to any part of the United States and the mileage would then be payable under this appropriation. Clearly that is a change of existing law.

The first part of the first proviso—

Officers traveling shall be paid 7 cents per mile and no more—is in effect existing law. The next part of it—

Distance is to be computed and mileage to be paid over the shortest usually traveled routes, with deductions—

And so forth—

and payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers shall be made according to distances computed over routes established and by mileage tables prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War; and all payments made by paymasters on account of mileage previous to the passage of this act shall be settled in accordance with distance tables officially promulgated and in use at date of payment.

Upon that the gentleman from Iowa has new light since this bill was before the House last year, because when it was before the House last year it contained the same provision to which I have just now adverted. I will read the debate:

Mr. Dockery said:

I desire to reserve a point of order against the first proviso—

And then the following occurred:

Mr. HULL. There is no use in reserving it. I recognize that it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that, but I understand the chairman of the committee is willing in lieu of that proviso to insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army shall be 7 cents per mile, the distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled route."

Now, perhaps that would be sufficient authority, coming from the source whence it did come. I am now reading from the RECORD of February 27, 1899, and from page 2475. I now call the attention of the Chair to the fact that after a good deal of discussion a permanent law regulating mileage was agreed upon, and that law is set forth on the page of the RECORD to which I have referred. It was agreed upon, apparently, by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Dockery, and it settled the whole question of mileage, in these words:

Provided, That hereafter the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officer of the Army shall be 7 cents per mile, distances to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes: Provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, or over the railroad of any railroad company which is entitled to receive only 50 per cent of the compensation earned by such company for transportation services rendered to the United States, he shall be furnished with a transportation request by the Quartermaster's Department for such travel; and the cost of the transportation so furnished shall be a charge against the officer's mileage account for such travel, to be deducted by the paymaster who pays the account, at rates paid by the general public for travel over such roads: Provided further, That officers who, by reason of the decision of the accounting officers of the Treasury, have been compelled to pay from their own means one-half of the cost of their travel fare over railroads known as 50-per-cent railroads shall be reimbursed the same by the Pay Department, and paymasters against whom disallowances have been made by the accounting officers of the Treasury under such decision shall have the amount so disallowed passed to their credit.

I call the attention of the Chairman to what is there stated, and I state that that purported to be a settlement of the whole law regarding the payment of mileage, and was accepted as a settlement at that time.

The provisions reported by the Committee on Military Affairs may be good ones. Very likely they would be provisions for which I should personally vote, after having heard the explanation of them, as I think I should have voted for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], having heard his explanation.

But the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] on another part of the bill has very clearly pointed out the rule that should govern us. These appropriations in these general appropriation bills are for the purpose of carrying out existing law, and there ought not to be any changes in existing law unless they are so simple, so clear, and so necessary that everyone assents to them upon the very hearing of their provisions.

This is a very complicated matter. It changes the amount of travel pay to and from the new possessions of this country, because while the law that I have called the attention of the Chair to provided for the actual expenses to be paid to officers when traveling as herein provided for—"to and from" our island possessions—here it provides for payment for sea travel and payment while traveling "between" our island possessions.

That may be a change in the right direction. I do not say that it is not, but it is a change. If it were not a change, it would not be in this bill.

The provision giving the Secretary of War the right to compute mileage tables is a change of existing law, because the existing law is that they shall be paid 7 cents a mile computed over the "shortest usually traveled route."

It seems to me that these changes, however desirable they may be upon a full examination, upon a bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, are too great to pass upon a general appropriation bill. And I especially call the attention of the Chair and of the House to the fact that under this new provision in regard to mileage $500,000 is put at the disposition of the commanding officers of the Army to be used possibly—I do not say that it will be so used—possibly for mere pleasure excursions. That ought not to be. No such change as that ought to be made without great deliberation and careful consideration.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, as to the first proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in lines 13, 14, and part of 15, for mileage to officers and contract surgeons, the language used here and in the old bill means substantially the same thing, and the committee would have no objection whatever to either language being employed. The man who is ordered to go from one place to another is covered just as well by the words "authorized by law" as he is by the words "when traveling under orders without troops."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Why was the change made?

Mr. HULL. Because the Book of Estimates submitted two propositions, two separate items for mileage, making up the total for $500,000, one applying to the volunteers and the other to regulars. In one place the Department used the old language, and in the other they use language that meant the same thing—the language of the bill. I have no objection, and nobody could have any objection, to changing it to the words "when authorized by law," because the very minute an order is issued to an officer to go from here to San Francisco, from here to Chicago, or from here to New York, under the law he is compelled to go, and he is both acting under orders and it is authorized by law; so that that proposition, in my judgment, amounts to nothing.

Now, as to the other part, commencing with the proviso, the bill does not change the mileage. It still is 7 cents a mile. It does change the provision for arriving at the amount of compensation officers are to receive under the 7 cents a mile.

And I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that this arrangement made last year with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Dockery, is faulty in several particulars. It was intended in that amendment, as it was fixed up on the floor, that officers traveling to and from and between our island possessions should have only their actual expenses and no mileage; and yet it is so construed by the Treasury Department that an officer ordered from here to the Philippines must keep an account of his expenses from here until he reaches Manila, while an officer ordered from here to San Francisco and going with him on the same train gets his 7 cents a mile, showing that fixing it up on the floor defeated one of the very objects of the agreement.

Now, the position that I want to take in this, Mr. Chairman, is this: We can not change the compensation; we can not change the rate of 7 cents per mile on an appropriation bill if anyone raises a point of order against it; but the details as to how this money shall be expended are a proper subject of legislation on an appropriation bill. The gentleman's Committee on Appropriations does it in almost every bill that they report here.

He says that he wants it considered by a committee. It has been considered by a committee. They were unanimous, so far as I now recall, in favor of this change. Take your mileage tables. That is the main contention of the gentleman, as I understand it. A paymaster goes from here to Manila. He is paying troops there. He is ordered by the Pay Department here to pay on a certain line. The accounts come back and go to the Treasury. They have not prepared distance tables there. They figure the distance as it comes up, as I understand it. The War Department has distance tables prepared.

The paymaster who refuses to pay on the order of the Secretary of War (because these orders come from him) would be liable to a court-martial. He has obeyed the orders of his superior officer, and he goes to the Treasury Department, and the Comptroller of the Treasury in this Administration makes one rule and under the next Administration they make another rule. His accounts are held up. The paymaster is constantly between two fires—one of a court-martial, the other of his accounts being held up.

One Department or the other of this Government ought to prepare mileage tables, and who so proper to do it as the War Department, issuing the orders and having the whole matter before them? For that reason I believe it is good legislation, and I believe the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Military Affairs, or any other committee of this House, can put restrictions and directions of how a fund shall be disbursed. They can not change the law as to the rate of compensation. They can not change the law providing for new and increased or reduced compensation; but they can, and in my judgment should, have the right, and ought to exercise it, of putting proper restrictions on these disbursements and report them to Congress.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. A single word in reply, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield to me for one minute? I want to say in the nine years I have already served on this committee in the annual appropriation bill I believe there has been a change in this provision in some form or other almost every year.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me to speak before he positively makes the point of order?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This matter came in this way, Mr. Chairman, before the committee. The Paymaster-General of the Army is known to all people to be a most careful man. When we came to this page of the bill, 17, the chairman of the committee said:

The CHAIRMAN. On page 17 there is nothing which I can see about which I wish to ask you.

General BATES. On page 17 there comes up the subject of mileage, which you have heard of before from time to time, and the question is as to exactly how you are going to arrange the mileage. I have some suggestions to make in regard to it.

This bill follows the wording of the last bill and the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, which gives the ordinary appropriation for mileage and which last year amounted to $500,000. I want to suggest a change in the last lines of the bill, so that it will read "actual expenses shall be paid only to officers when traveling to and from our island possessions in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans." I would like to have that read "actual expenses only when traveling to, from, and between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans."

After discussing that he said this:

And then there is another subject of very great irritation and trouble during the last year between the Treasury and the pay departments in the matter of the statement of traveled distances. Congress some years ago enacted a law which prescribes that the Paymaster-General and the Secretary of War, through the Pay Department, shall issue from time to time official distance tables, which shall govern in all cases the distances of travel. With one exception, Congress has always worded that so that the distances shall be calculated by the shortest traveled route. One year it was left out, making it necessary for the men to go sometimes by an obsolete route, taking more time and expense than through the latest route, which might be a little longer. Congress has always put in "the usual traveled route," so that that puts the officers on the same basis as anyone else.

Last year the Auditor brought up that matter, and he discarded the use of the calculated distances by the shortest route. It came up in a question of the traveled distances down to Tampa from Atlanta. In going over that route the distance cut off, perhaps, 20 to 30 miles, and the account was held up.

I will not read the rest of it, but there was a change in the bill that was made last year.

Mr. HULL. I think it is all good reading.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am afraid people do not care to listen to more.

Mr. HULL. It is a very important question.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey (reading):

Then, again, on these Pacific railroads there are land-grant and bond-aided roads, and upon those the Government has not been in the habit of allowing mileage. During this late war some of the other roads in those sections reduced their fare to that of the land-grant and bond-aided roads in order to get orders from the Government, and they accepted the same price as the bond-aided roads had been getting. Then the Comptroller put them in all exactly alike, as if they had worded the same; so they have all come in competition, and we had no means of knowing which was land-grant road and which was not. When we calculated the distance, we took out the allowance from the agreement roads, whereas the officer had paid the rate of the usual traveled routes.

The question came up finally before the Auditor and Comptroller, and they agreed that they would not object to the distances as published and agreed that the accounts should be settled on that basis. I declined to get up new distance tables, stating that I thought it was not businesslike, and that it was not right to send such tables to officials who would be governed by them in good faith and who would have stoppages of their accounts. I can say that unless that wording is changed some of the Postmasters-General will be fleeced out of thousands of dollars.

Mr. PARKER. Have you wording to suggest?

General BATES. It is in this bill. The Quartermaster-General and myself recommend that we should go back again to the wording of the bill of 1878, and give the 4 cents mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. We fought for that a long time; but because the Paymaster-General and the Quartermaster-General were so insistent upon it the change was made.

General BATES. We find that it does not work well. An officer comes here, for instance, from San Diego, and by the wording of the law in settling with him we are obliged to take off a piece of travel over land-grant roads, and yet he may have paid the local rate of 4 or 5 cents. The distance from Kansas City to San Diego is 1,888 miles, and the Government pays out of that to these land-grant roads $30, and the officer pays $36.64. This is done because the Government gets through rates and the officer is charged local rates, so that he has to get off at the station and buy his ticket to the nearest local station. He does not actually get off, but we take it out in making the calculation.

The change that we make is, therefore, not a change of existing law, but is a change back. They tried to change the law. This is not a new law that is reported, but the old one from which a change was made last year, which did not work well, and which the Department reports does not work well. And it is suggested that we go back to the old law. Technically it may be a change of law, but to me it looks a return to the old law is not a change of law. I did not mean to tire the gentleman with so much reading. I suppose he may have read it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman did not tire me at all. I was exceedingly interested in the remarks he made. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that this problem has been so perplexing that during his service in Congress he hardly remembers an appropriation bill in which some change of law has not been made That indicates very clearly that the subject-matter is of such a character that it ought to be dealt with not upon a general appropriation bill, but upon a special bill reported to the House. I call the attention of the House specifically——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does it not answer that question to go back to the old law, which we had and worked fairly well, instead of keeping one which we know does not work well at all?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It seems that while that law was in actual operation it was not deemed to be a satisfactory law either by the Department or by the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, if this measure were reported by a committee for whom we all have the respect that we have for the committee headed by the gentleman from Iowa, I believe it would meet with no opposition. Certainly my knowledge of the subject-matter would not permit me to oppose my views against the views of the committee.

But upon a complicated matter, where there have been changes from year to year of the law, and where it is still in an unsatisfactory condition, in the interest of the public service I submit that this point of order ought to be made and sustained, so that the Committee on Military Affairs will deal with this matter in a legislative bill and not an appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I want to call his attention to an additional fact connected with this part of the bill, that the committee took it up after the hearing and adopted the section as it is in the bill. The Department then took it up and figured on it for some two weeks, and then submitted an amendment which goes to the whole section and changes it in a few words, so that it has been thoroughly considered.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Do I understand that an amendment or a substitute is to be offered?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That shows the complexity of the subject. I intend to be fair about this, and I realize the difficulties that surround this great committee. I take it the present section will pass out of consideration, but I will say one word about it. The gentleman says there is no change in the law in regard to the provision which permits the establishment of distance tables officially promulgated. That was not his opinion last year, and I think is not the opinion of the Chair. I call the attention of the Chair to what the change of law would be. The existing law, because it was made permanent law by proviso last year, is that the mileage shall be paid on distances to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes.

Now, when the gentleman from Iowa offered this provision in the House last year which he now offers it was pointed out that under the practice very often the official tables were not computed on the shortest usually traveled routes, and various instances were pointed out in the debate in which apparently it was claimed that there had been some favoritism to particular railroads, and officers and men were sent over longer routes than those which were the usually traveled ones. The result of that debate was that this provision was agreed upon—that the mileage should be paid only over the shortest usually traveled route.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The present law is the shortest traveled route, and the amendment inserts the word "usually" for the first time.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. There is no change in the law in that respect, and the law last year was the "shortest usually traveled route." Now it is proposed to go further and say that the mileage shall be settled "in accordance with distance tables officially promulgated and in use at the date of the payment." There is nothing that provides that the distance tables shall conform to the usually traveled route, and we get back to the same old evil which the law last year was intended to prevent. It seems to me that unless this was a change in existing law there would be no occasion to make it.

Last year we made a permanent law, perhaps for the first time. Now, they come in and ask a change; true, a change for only one year, but that is a change pro tanto—and I need not argue that to the present occupant of the chair—because they do not like to work under the old law.

Mr. HULL. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask the gentleman if the word "hereafter" does not apply only to the 7 cents a mile.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It has not occurred to me so to read it; but I am not sure but that the gentleman from Iowa is right. It struck me that he was making the provisos all permanent law.

Now, if it is proposed to offer a substitute for this section I have this proposition to make, both to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], that the substitute be offered, remain pending with the point of order until to-morrow, when we may have a chance to examine it. Then we will make the point of order on the substitute or not according to the result of that examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this entire section be passed over until to-morrow, the point of order pending and the amendment pending.

Mr. HULL. If the Chair will permit me, I will send the amendment to the desk and have it inserted in the RECORD. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the amendment does not go to the first three lines of the section; it commences with the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the entire section be passed over with the point of order reserved against it and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa pending?

Mr. McRAE. And with the point of order reserved against the amendment.

Mr. HULL. With all points of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment is as follows:

That officers so traveling shall be paid 7 cents per mile and no more; distances to be computed and mileage to be paid over the shortest usually traveled routes, with deduction as hereinafter provided for such portion of any route as may be over a subsidized railroad; and payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers shall be made according to distances computed over routes established and by mileage tables prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War; and all payments made by paymasters on account of mileage previous to the passage of this act shall be settled in accordance with distance tables officially promulgated and in use at date of payment: Provided further, That officers who so desire may, upon application to the Quartermaster's Department, be furnished with transportation requests for the entire journey under their orders; and the cost of the through ticket between the points traveled shall be a charge against the officer's mileage account, to be deducted by the paymaster paying the same and turned over to an authorized officer of the Quartermaster's Department: And provided further, That when the established route of travel shall, in whole or in part, be over the line of any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, or over the railroad of any railroad company which by law is entitled to receive only 50 per cent of the compensation earned by such company for transportation services rendered the United States, officers traveling as herein provided for shall, for the travel over such roads, be furnished with transportation requests by the Quartermaster's Department, and the cost of the transportation so furnished shall be a charge against the officers' mileage accounts for such travel, to be deducted by the paymaster who pays the accounts, at through rates as paid by the general public for such travel as a part of the through journey under their orders: And provided further, That actual expenses only shall be paid to officers for sea travel when traveling, as herein provided for, to, from, or between our island possessions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There will be, I understand, no complications resulting from the amendment offered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The complications which now exist result, as I understand, from the fact that there are really two mileage tables—one in the War Department and another in the Comptroller's Office. The War Department insists upon the correctness of its mileage table; but when the paymasters' accounts are sent to the Comptroller he insists that his mileage table is correct. This condition of affairs produces endless confusion and annoyance to the paymasters.

Mr. HULL. In answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], I will say that the gentleman has very properly indicated one cause of trouble. The officers are unfairly placed between two fires. So far as I am concerned, if the Treasury Department will promulgate mileage tables applicable to all cases where travel pay of officers is to be settled, I would rather it should do so than that we should have no accepted standard in these matters. This question ought to be settled under the law, so that officers and paymasters shall not, as now, be ground to powder between two different sets of regulations.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it not a fact that the mileage tables of the War Department are prepared by an officer who is recognized by nearly everyone connected with the Government as an expert, and are they not prepared with a view to selecting the usual and most traveled route?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; the law provides that that shall be done.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would like to have indicated, by pages and lines, the part of the bill which we are passing over.

The CHAIRMAN. The portion of the bill passed over begins at page 12, line 13, and extends to page 14, line 4, inclusive.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men, $4,524,715: Provided, That hereafter the pay of all officers and enlisted men serving beyond the limits of the United States in the islands in possession or under the control of the United States, and in the Territory of Alaska, shall be increased 10 per cent for officers and 20 per cent for enlisted men over and above the rates of pay as fixed by law in time of peace.

Mr. HAY. I rise to make a point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is recognized.

Mr. HAY. I desire to make a point of order, but I will reserve it, and ask that the Clerk may read an amendment I have prepared. If this amendment be accepted, I will withhold or withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, page 14, strike out "beyond the limits of the United States in the islands in the possession or under the control of the United States" and insert "in Puerto Rico, Cuba, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii."

Mr. HULL. We have no objection to that.

Mr. McRAE. I made a point of order against the paragraph, which I will insist upon unless the paragraph can be further amended.

Mr. HAY. I will withdraw the point of order I made, if there be no objection.

Mr. McRAE. I insist on the point of order I made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas renews the point of order.

Mr. HULL. If the point of order is renewed and sustained, there is really no object whatever in the appropriation. The law provides that this 20 per cent additional shall be allowed only in time of war, and in my judgment there can be no disputing the fact that we are not now in a condition of war which justifies the payment of this sum of money. I repeat, that if the point of order against the proviso be insisted upon, there can be no reason for the appropriation.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, will accept the amendment which I propose to offer, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I would like to hear the amendment before I agree to the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. McRAE. My amendment proposes to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That enlisted men receiving or entitled to the 20 per cent increased pay herein authorized shall not be entitled to or receive any additional compensation for what is known as extra or special duty.

Mr. HULL. I will accept that, of course, because the original law contains exactly that provision.

Mr. McRAE. If the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia and this amendment are accepted, I will withdraw the point of order. I think, however, the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken in his statement in regard to the original law.

Mr. RIDGELY. I wish to reserve my right to renew the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman will find in the course of a few months that what I say is true. These men who are now getting an additional 20 per cent will have a right, if they have done work for which they are entitled to extra pay, to enforce their claim against the Government.

Mr. HULL. The original law provided that while they received this 20 per cent there should be no extra pay allowed to them. If the gentleman will look back at the law he will find that it makes this matter very clear, so that they can not have their pay enlarged in the way he has indicated. I have no objection whatever to the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to have the paragraph as amended read.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Arkansas withdraws his point of order and offers an amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I think that with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia and myself the provision will be satisfactory to me, but I want it read.

Mr. HULL. Let the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] offer his amendment first.

Mr. HAY. I did offer mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order are withdrawn by both the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Arkansas. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, to which the gentleman from Arkansas moves his amendment as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HULL. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas comes in at the close of the paragraph, does it not, as an additional proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HULL. That is right.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, page 14, strike out the words "beyond the limits of the United States, in the islands in possession or under the control of the United States," and insert the words "Puerto Rico, Cuba, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii."

Mr. HULL. I accept that amendment, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, it must be obvious that the very large amount of money carried in this bill is due in large measure to our occupation of the Philippine Islands. The demands of the service in those islands require the presence of at least 65,000 men, and even with that number we can not properly garrison and effectively hold the towns and villages which we are constantly capturing and as constantly abandoning. The subjugation of these people by military force will be found an endless task. Such, at least, has been the experience of this Government during the last year. We must, of course, appropriate the necessary money to pay, feed, and clothe the Army, which has been created by law and which is obeying the orders of this Government.

The problem which confronts us is, How can we dispense with this great army; how can we relieve the people of this country of the enormous burden of taxation which the present policy of this Administration entails upon them? We can only do this by a declaration of a policy which will rid the Philippine Islanders of the fear that we are seeking to deprive them of their liberties. The Republican party is in power; upon them rests the responsibility of pacifying these islands. It is the duty of that party to acquaint the country with their purposes and intentions toward these islands and their inhabitants.

But this great party, intrusted by the people with the destinies of the United States, is either afraid to avow its policy or it is incapable of dealing with the momentous questions which now confront us. That party is drifting. It is not willing to father any policy other than one of mysterious silence. That party, seeing the tremendous sentiment in this country for the Boers fighting for their liberties, is afraid to avow its purpose of stifling liberty in the Philippines, while it yet permits its Administration to carry out in the Philippines the same policy which the people of the United States condemn in South Africa.

Two alternatives present themselves. We must either determine to hold these islands as permanent possessions, or we must decide not to hold them. We can not hold them permanently unless we incorporate them as part of this country. To do this would be against the interests of all the people of the United States. I state it as an incontrovertible principle that the United States can not govern the Philippine Islands as a colony, separate and distinct from this country, without violating the Constitution of the United States. Such a mode of government was never contemplated by the founders of this Government, and is against the genius, the traditions, and history of this country; and no circumstances now exist to warrant us in departing from fundamental principles. The doctrine of a "higher law," even if such a doctrine were to be tolerated or could be justified, is not applicable in this case.

The only form of government which can be administered under the Constitution of the United States in the Philippines is the Territorial form of government, having for its ultimate object the admission of that Territory into the American Union as a State. No man, I care not what his politics may be, is willing to advocate the admission of the Philippine Islands as a State of this Union; nor is anyone willing even to make them a Territory, giving to them, as we would have to do, all the rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by the people of the United States.

As we can not, consistently with the interests of this country, govern these islands as a colony, nor as a Territory, nor as a State, we must meet the issue which faces us by the declaration of a policy which will tend to an immediate pacification of these islands and which will restore to the inhabitants thereof their confidence in us as a people who have in the past gained their own liberty and who have encouraged other peoples, by our sympathy and by our actions, to establish freedom in their own countries.

We should first restore peace and order in the Philippine Islands; we should put down every semblance of opposition to this Government, which, unfortunately, has so dealt with these people as to make them look upon us rather as oppressors than as liberators. As soon as this task is accomplished we should establish in the Philippine Islands, at the earliest practicable moment, a free and independent government for the inhabitants of these islands, reserving for ourselves such commercial rights and privileges and retaining such trade and coaling stations as may be deemed necessary for the purposes of the trade and commerce of the United States with the Orient.

If we pursue this course we will be true to the principles of liberty, and we will gain every advantage which, in any event, we can hope to obtain for the expansion of our trade and commerce. The conditions in the Philippines are such that only the strong hand of power can restore peace and order and establish for them a free government; and having put our hand to the task, we must not draw back until we have accomplished it. As soon as this country announces that freedom shall be given to the people of the Philippines, just so soon will those people begin to trust us and to cease their opposition. They will lay down their arms and hasten to assist us to accomplish our purpose, which will be their freedom.

This policy must be announced in no uncertain terms, and must be carried out in good faith and with unfaltering resolution. When it is announced and inaugurated we will begin to see the end of imperialism. Such a policy will sound the death knell to militarism. The enormous expenditures for the Army, for the Navy, for fortifications, can be done away with, and the people of the United States can see an end to the vast burden of taxation which they now bear. The policy which is outlined here is practicable, is wise, and is consonant with our Constitution, with our traditions, with our history, and with our duty to ourselves and to the world.

To go ern the Philippine Islands as a colony and to hold them permanently, besides being as such unconstitutional, will be of no advantage to any class of citizens in the United States. The agriculturist, the laboring man, and the business man can derive no benefit from such a policy. In the first place, such a government means the continuation and increase of the large expenditure now necessary. The Army and Navy must be increased. Vast sums must be expended for fortifications on these islands. A very large standing army is inevitable if this policy is pursued.

It is not conceivable that we can continue the present system of volunteer enlistments of two years; it is too expensive, too cumbersome, and practically requires us to equip and discipline an army every two years; the only alternative is the maintenance of a great military establishment, which, once fastened upon us, it will be next to impossible to dislodge. The experience of the last year teaches us that less than 65,000 men in the Philippines can accomplish but little, and the problem presents itself, how can we before July, 1901, when the present 35,000 volunteers must be mustered out by law, bring into subjugation the inhabitants of these islands so that they can be governed without the use of this immense military establishment, costing over $100,000,000 annually?

Added to the military establishment is the naval establishment. The possession of these islands and their permanent retention make it absolutely necessary that we should protect them from all outside interference. To do this we must have a naval force capable of meeting, and meeting successfully, the naval force of any country which might by possibility come against us. We must build ship for ship with every great maritime power of the world and build many ships before we can be classed with England and France as a sea power. In this Congress the naval appropriation bill carries about $70,000,000, and we must look to see these appropriations increased from year to year.

Again, we must erect fortifications on every island which we intend to hold. The cost of this can not be computed; but it would run into the hundreds of millions. A moderate estimate would be that the government of these islands as a colony would cost this country annually $400,000,000. What material benefits, then, can we derive from the permanent retention of these islands? What can the farmers and laborers of this country expect in return for the taxes which they must pay to keep up the Army and Navy which will be necessary to hold them? In acquiring them you acquire a country which will compete in the markets of the world with the cotton growers of the South, with the wheat raisers throughout this country, with those who grow corn and rice, and with almost every agricultural product of the United States.

The labor of this country will have to compete with the cheapest labor on the globe, with Chinese, Japanese, and Malay labor. These islands present no field of enterprise to our young men. Opportunities in the United States have not been exhausted. This country to-day presents the widest field for business and enterprise of any other in the world.

Commerce can find its outlet and advantage to the countries in the East in the manner which I have indicated, by our reserving such commercial rights and privileges and retaining such trade and coaling stations as may be necessary for the purposes of our trade in the Orient. Let us briefly examine the geography, the resources, the trade and commerce, the climate and situation of these islands, so that we may determine what material advantages they have for us.

TOPOGRAPHY, ETC.

The Philippine Islands number, by various estimates, from 1,000 to 2,000.

Luzon, the largest, has an area of about 41,000 square miles; Mindanao, the next, about 37,500 square miles; the five next in size, about 10,000 square miles each.

The aggregate land area of the group, about 114,356 square miles, the entire land and water being about 1,000 miles long and 600 wide.

The contour consists mainly of mountains and intervening valleys, with some plains of limited area.

The climate ranges from 80° to 100° in the hottest season to 60° in the coolest.

The seasons are classed as wet and dry. The Spanish tersely describe them as "six months of mud, six months of dust, and six months of everything," including, of course, gales, typhoons, and occasional earthquakes.

The following is from the Military Notes on the Philippines, No. 20, September, 1898, War Department (page 20):

Spanish statistics are notoriously unreliable, and no accurate census has ever been taken, but the population has been estimated at about 8,000,000, of which the bulk is of Malay origin. On first arrival the Spaniards found a part of the natives somewhat civilized; but while they had a written language, of which some specimens have been preserved, it was of no value in throwing light upon their early history, and their traditions are very few. As in Mexico and Central America, the Spanish priests have been only too successful in their effort to extirpate all mythological and other lore. The treatment of the inhabitants has been more merciful, however, than in the western possessions.

The Philippine Malays are a superior race to many other Asiatic peoples. Orderly, amiable, courteous, honest, and exceedingly superstitious, they are easily influenced upon profession of Christianity. Like most tropical people, their efforts are intermittent rather than steady; their wants are readily provided for, and they take life easy. The inhabitants of the island are composed of the most diverse mixtures of races, including Malays, Aetas, Negritos, pure blacks, Chinese, Japanese, Indios, Moors, Europeans, and mixtures of each with the others.

There are nearly as many different tribes as there are islands, and it is said that 500 languages and dialects are spoken in the islands at the present day. The inhabitants are generally tractable and amenable to government, and generally not hostile to foreigners. In the inaccessible parts of the island there are still tribes of unsubdued savages, whose number is estimated at about 602,000. Fond of music, dancing, and amusements of all kinds, they are born gamblers, and cock-fighting is their greatest passion. Every town has its cockpit, and in the largest the spectators may be numbered by thousands.

This amusement was heavily taxed by the Spaniards, and advantage is taken of the taste for gambling by running a lottery for the benefit of the Government.

Probably not more than fifteen or twenty thousand Spaniards, or people of pure Spanish blood, are permanent residents, and the number of other foreigners is not large. The majority of these are at Manila, where the English have established a club in the suburbs, which has become the center of foreign social intercourse. (Military Notes on the Philippines, page 24.)

The principal staples of export are tobacco (manufactured and raw), manila hemp, sugar cane, coffee, and cocoa. The principal manufactures consist of a variety of textile fabrics, hats, mats, baskets, ropes, furniture, coarse pottery, carriages, and musical instruments.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CONSULAR REPORTS (JUNE, 1898).

During the quarter ending December 31, 1897, there were exported from these islands to the United States and Great Britain 216,898 bale of hemp (280 pounds per bale), of which 138,792 bales went to the United States and 78,106 bales went to Great Britain. During the year 1897 there was an increase in the export of hemp from the Philippines to continental Europe of 19,741 bales; to Australia, 2,192 bales; to China, 28 bales; to Japan, 2,628 bales, and to the United States, 133,896 bales, a total increase of 158,485 bales; while to Great Britain there was a decrease of 22,348 bales. Thus, of increased shipments from the Philippines, those to the United States were 544 per cent greater than to all other countries combined. Of the total exports of hemp from the Philippines for the ten years ended 1897, amounting to 6,528,965 bales (914,055 tons), 41 per cent went to the United States.

During the same years the Philippine Islands exported to the United States and to Europe 1,582,904 tons of sugar, of which 875,150 tons went to the United States, 666,391 tons to Great Britain, and 41,362 tons to continental Europe, showing that of the total exports more than 55 per cent went to the United States. At the current values in New York of hemp (4 cents per pound) and of raw sugar (3¾ cents per pound) the exports of these two products alone from these islands to the United States during the ten years under review amounted to $89,253,722.80, or an average of nearly $8,925,372 per year.

Data as to cigars, tobacco, copra, woods, hides, shells, indigo, coffee, etc., are not now obtainable, but a conservative estimate would so raise the above figures as to show United States imports from these islands to average about $1,000,000 per month. To-day there are authentical invoices for export to the United States amounting to $138,066.12.

IMPORTS.

The following statement of the general trade of the Philippine Islands is taken from the Review of the World's Commerce, 1896–97, soon to be published by the Bureau of Foreign Commerce. According to a British foreign office report (No. 1932, annual series, 1897), the total imports into the island in 1896 were valued at $10,631,250, and the exports at $20,175,000. The trade with several of the most important countries, compiled from the respective official statistics, was:

Country.	Imports.	Exports.
Great Britain	$2,467,090	$7,467,500
Germany	744,928	233,700
France	1,794,900	1,987,900
Belgium	272,240	45,660
United States	162,446	4,982,857
China	103,680	13,770
Japan *	98,782	1,387,909

* In 1897.

The chief imports are rice, flour, dress goods, wines, coal, and petroleum.

Agriculture is not yet developed, although the soil is very fertile.

The people are skillful weavers of cotton and silk; they can tan leather; excel in shipbuilding, and make good wagons and carts.

In Consular Reports (June, 1899, page 296) Consul Williams writes:

The Philippines produce a good quantity of woven stuff. Probably the greater part is made of imported cotton yarn, gray, white, and dyed; but there are also many thousands of pieces made of manila hemp, in ordinary and in fine qualities, the latter very often mixed with silk.

The principal places for the manufacture of cotton goods are the two provinces of Ilocos, in the north of Luzon, and for hemp the provinces of Albay and Camarines. The Visayas provinces manufacture all the different woven stuffs.

From Consular Reports (December, 1898, page 559) Consul Morris reports:

As all details relative to the Philippine Islands are at present of importance, I have thought that the free translation of a recent report made by the Belgian consul at Manila upon the export trade of those islands during 1897 may not be without interest. This report bears date April 21, 1898.

The Belgian consul maintains that during 1897 statistics show a great increase in the export trade, notwithstanding the continuance of the rebellion. The export of abaca, or manila hemp, increased by 314,284 piculs (43,816,903 pounds). Copra likewise was exported to the amount of 200,000 piculs (27,890,000 pounds) more than in 1896. The exportation of this product began only in 1862. Prior to that time almost all the copra came from the Caroline Islands. To-day all the islands of the archipelago produce it. Exports of dyewoods, coffee, indigo, mother-of-pearl, gums, tobacco, leather, and hemp rope also considerably increased.

The following table shows the total export trade of abaca from the Philippine Islands during the past ten years:

Year.	Quantity exported.	Year.	Quantity exported.
	Pounds.		Pounds.
1888	184,472,548	1893	178,906,261
1889	158,374,451	1894	221,999,100
1890	141,166,629	1895	229,598,075
1891	177,254,058	1896	213,601,979
1892	220,472,681	1897	251,648,123

Exports of sugar by Manila show a decrease of 656,426 piculs (91,899,640 pounds) for 1897 as compared with 1896.

At Cebu, on the contrary, the export trade of sugar increased. Both in the Visayos and Negros Islands the production of sugar greatly developed. During the last ten years the quantity of sugar exported from the Philippine Islands has been as follows:

Year.	Quantity exported.	Year.	Quantity exported.
	Pounds.		Pounds.
1888	414,988,800	1893	585,801,440
1889	450,377,680	1894	435,275,120
1890	290,459,080	1895	517,267,600
1891	373,767,400	1896	515,006,520
1892	553,148,400	1897	452,687,620

The exports of dyewoods from Manila, entirely for China and Japan, amounted in 1897 to 9,167,900 pounds, as compared with 7,838,600 pounds in 1896.

The exportation of cigars fell from 194,136,000 in 1896 to 169,465,000 in 1897. The export trade of 1897 was distributed as follows:

To—	Number.	To—	Number.
United States and Canada:		England	24,200,000
Atlantic ports	2,460,000	Australia	16,300,000
Pacific ports	183,000	Singapore and India	37,310,000
Continental Europe	30,500,000	China and Japan	58,430,000

Of leather for glue, there were exported, in 1897, 112,000 pounds for the United States and Canada, 77,150 pounds for Singapore and India, and 99,450 pounds for China and Japan.

HENRY C. MORRIS, Consul.

GHENT, September 17, 1898.

From Consular Reports, November, 1898 (page 446), Consul Frankenthal reports:

From an interview with a merchant of Manila, I am enabled to give the exporters of the United States certain points which may be of value to business men who intend to enter the field there.

The Philippines contain over 7,000,000 inhabitants. The Chinese, who are in the majority among the aliens, control the retail trade, while next to them come the Spanish dealers. It is estimated that there are about 300 other Europeans in business in the whole group. The richest dealers are the creoles and mestizos, a combination of Chinese and Tagalese.

In Manila there are many large cigarette factories, some of which employ as many as 4,000 hands. A few German, Swiss, and English firms have entered that field. There is also a sugar refinery, a steam rice mill, a Spanish electrical plant, a Spanish telephone exchange, a Spanish tramway, worked partly by steam and partly by horsepower; rope factories, worked mainly by hand (a few use oxen); a Spanish brewery, which furnishes a good beer; a German cement factory, with 70 hands; a Swiss umbrella factory, and a Swiss hat factory, which makes felt and straw articles, the latter out of Chinese straw braid. A cotton mill with 6,000 spindles and with capital (English) of £40,000 ($194,000) is in process of erection.

The European firms in Manila are divided as follows: Forty-five Spanish, 19 German, 17 English, 2 English and 6 Swiss brokers, 2 French storekeepers with large establishments, 1 Dutch, and 1 Belgian. Small retail stores (40 in number) are kept by Chinese firms. The German and Swiss firms are general importers, while the export of hemp and sugar, the import of domestic dry goods, and the ship-chandlery trade are in the hands of the English.

Credit from one to three months and 5 per cent is given, while spot-cash sales command a discount of 7 per cent. Caution is advised in dealing with the Chinese merchants, as Manila has no mercantile register like Hongkong.

Cotton yarns are a heavy import article, so far mainly from Barcelona, by reason of the minimum Spanish tariff. The Spanish manufacturers have done what England, Germany, and Switzerland have always refused to do, and that is to renumber the yarns. In Manila No. 10 is sold numbered 24; No. 16, numbered 30; No. 18, numbered 32; No. 22, numbered 49; No. 32, numbered 50, and No. 36 or 40, numbered 60. The orders given are for four-fifths unbleached and one-fifth bleached.

Dyed yarn is bought in Nos. 20 and 32, in colors of orange, green, and rose. Turkey-red yarn, in the correct Nos. 20 to 40, especially 32, used to come from Elberfeld, but of late years Spain has managed to supply it. Bleached and unbleached shirtings and drills, from Manchester, are sold in large quantities, but of late the pieces have decreased in yards as well as in widths. The staples now are white shirtings, 28 inches wide and 36 yards long; gray T cloth, 25 inches wide and 21½ yards long; gray long cloth, 28 inches wide and 32 yards long; and gray drills, 25 inches wide and 27 yards long.

Colored prints, 24 inches wide, with red ground and fancy crimps, are good sellers. Ginghams and chellass, for bed coverings, etc., common quality, in large patterns with red ground, some with yellow or blue squares, some with indigo ground, and a few in green, in pieces of 24 yards, find a good market, while cotton cassinette, in light weight and double width, for trowsers, is in demand. Handkerchiefs, 17 by 18 inches and 22 by 22 inches, white, or white with colored borders, are the correct thing. Black cotton zanellas, 18½ inches wide, for the dresses of the country women, and amlipe black satins, in 45-inch goods, are considered stylish.

Woven cotton underwear is a great staple, and white cotton bed quilts, in fancy patterns, are used as ponchos, after a hole has been cut in the center. It is estimated by my informant that 500,000 dozen undershirts are used annually—two-thirds with arms half-length, sizes 34 to 40, 27 inches long, bleached white, striped, printed, and network. Men's cotton socks, 9 to 11, and ladies' cotton hose, 8 to 9½, are the right sizes. Cheap cotton lace pinta fichus are worn by all the women.

Other articles which have a good sale are low-priced sewing machines, carriages and parts, enameled ware for cooking utensils, and, last but not least, American clocks, which now have a good foothold and for which there is an increasing demand.

ADOLPH L. FRANKENTHAL, Consul.

BERNE, September 16, 1898.

(Consular Reports, October, 1898, pages 313-315.)

FOREIGN REPORTS AND PUBLICATIONS—COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The following extracts are from the Bulletin de la Société de Géographie Commerciale, Paris, Volume XIX, No. 4. Speaking of the market for European goods, the writer says:

French canned goods, while appreciated for their good qualities, are undersold by English and Spanish articles. The Germans sell only canned vegetables. A Swiss establishment has recently begun selling patés de foie gras, sauerkraut, and preserved vegetables. Australia is now sending large quantities of butter and meat. Wine and whisky do not sell readily, on account of the competition of local manufacturers.

There is a good market for jewelry, especially in the provinces, in inexpensive articles. The French have a good place in this line, although the Germans and Swiss are competing seriously. American watches and jewelry in white metal are also becoming known. The profits in this branch are enormous. Watch pins, bought in Europe at 7 francs ($1.35) per dozen, sell here at $5, Mexican ($1.33), apiece. The same is true of many other articles.

Textiles of cotton, silk, linen, etc., would find an important market here if they were adapted to the taste of the millions of inhabitants of these islands.

Shoes are an important item of importation. They represent over 1,500,000 francs ($289,500) annually, and come chiefly from Austria, Germany, and (since 1895) from Spain. All articles pertaining to carriages are well received. Chromos, engravings, religious objects, etc., have a large sale among the Indians and half-breeds.

The glassware sold at Manila is mostly of the most ordinary class, and is supplied by England, Germany, and China. French perfumery and drugs are sold universally. Olive oil comes from Spain, and dried fruits, which are largely consumed, are sent by Spain, Italy, and China.

Besides the above-mentioned articles, England, Germany, and Belgium export to the Philippines a considerable quantity of iron, zinc (worked and unworked), machines of all sorts, and firearms, as well as hardware, nails, and other small articles of iron, which sell at remunerative prices.

In regard to the resources of the islands the article continues:

The land is wonderfully productive, but lacks intelligent cultivation. So wasteful have been the methods that, in spite of the wonderful fertility of the soil, the harvests have in some places diminished. This is true of maize in the island of Cebu and of sugar cane in the province of Pangasinan, where new plantations must now be made every year, while at Negros the land yields many times in succession. The rice production, formerly so large, has so fallen off that importations have been found necessary.

To give an idea of what the archipelago has suffered in this respect from the negligence of its inhabitants, the following table, showing the imports of rice into the Philippines for a certain number of years, has been compiled:

1881	12,233,166
1882	20,754,104
1883	119,365,862
1890	157,157,763
1891	160,195,654
1892	138,247,863

There are two kinds of rice in the islands—hill rice and plain rice—although these two varieties might be infinitely subdivided according to quality, shape, size, etc. This is the principal food of man and animals. Very little work is necessary in its cultivation, and it is astonishing that the natives have not produced larger quantities instead of deriving their supplies from Japan and China. The method of cultivation is as follows: At the end of April the ground is worked and divided into large squares. One of these is used as a seed plot, and the work is continued on the others.

After three or four days the ground is harrowed and the seed, after being soaked in water for at least two hours, is planted. The ground must not be allowed to become too dry or too wet in the interval before transplanting, which usually takes place in June when the plants are from 4 to 7 inches high. Women and children then carefully lift the young plants and carry them to adjacent squares similarly prepared, where other women place them in rows about 8 inches apart. During the period of growth each square is left open in order that the water may freely enter, and it is only when the plant becomes yellow that the ground is allowed to dry. The plants are again watered and are gathered by men by means of primitive sickles.

The production of cotton is also diminishing, for the same reasons that apply to rice. It grows in the provinces of north and south Ilocus, Union, Abra, and Pangasinan. The kinds cultivated are Gossypium herbaceum and Bombax pentandrum. The ground is almost never prepared, and the cotton is silky in quality and would easily become a valuable product if attention were given to the cultivation.

In the two provinces of Ilocus too great humidity is not to be feared for this plant, for the season of rain is well defined here, from June until October, and the land is adapted to its cultivation. Nevertheless, the indolence of the Indians has caused cotton to take an inferior rank among the products of the colony.

Hemp is the most important product, and is obtained from the trunk of a species of banana tree, the fruit of which is not comestible. The tree, which attains a height of from 22 to 26 feet, is cultivated in the following manner:

The ground is worked carefully, the best period being from June to October; it is well irrigated and divided into squares of about 13 feet. Earth that has clay on the surface and limestone below is well adapted for the purpose. The seeds are planted two and two in little holes 5 to 7 inches apart and covered with earth and straw, the latter being set on fire to aid in the germination. The ground is irrigated before sunrise for several days, and care is taken to destroy all insects.

When the plants are about the size of three fingers they are transplanted. The sprouts during the heat of the day, i. e., from 10 to 3 o'clock, are sheltered from the rays of the sun. After the third year the plants yield every eight months. Some producers plant sweet potatoes between the rows of bananas. This vegetable is largely consumed in the islands, and its roots destroy the weeds that grow so rapidly in these climates. The potatoes, however, must be protected against the boars, which are very fond of this vegetable.

The production of sugar is gradually developing. When the cultivation of this product was begun, elevated lands were chosen, not only to avoid the excess of humidity, but also because the low-lying land was occupied with rice and maize. The sugar plantations were established on the hills, which necessitated additional labor and longer transportation. Rats have caused serious damage, and the lack of labor and of capital has been an additional obstacle to the progress of the industry.

Sugar is planted in March and April in order to have the cane of good size by the rainy season. Two sorts are found in the Philippines, one of green and the other of reddish color. The product goes to Japan, England, and the United States. The price is very low. The principal centers of production are the provinces of Batangas, Pampanga, Ilocos, Pangasinan, and Bulcan; also Iloilo and the islands of Cebu and Negros.

Tobacco alone would make a fortune for the Philippines, although it must be admitted that the quality has deteriorated of late years on account of the lack of good management. A large number of companies have been formed for the exploitation of this industry. The two most important are the "Compagnie Generale des Tabacs des Philippines," the capital of which ($14,500,000 gold) is principally in the hands of French bondholders, and the "Insular." Each of these establishments employs from 5,000 to 6,000 workmen.

The native coffee has a fine aroma. It grows in the provinces of Batangas, Cavite, and Zamboanga, and is exported chiefly to Spain. The cocoanut tree grows abundantly and seems made to order for these countries, where the people are averse to exertion. Cocoanut oil is used for lighting the houses and streets of certain provinces, where electricity or petroleum are as yet unknown.

The native indigo is famous for its excellent quality. Several years ago the provinces of Ilocos, Pangasinan, Pampanga, and Camarines produced enormously. Unfortunately, the faulty preparation and the adulteration on the part of the Chinese traders to which the powder was subjected have greatly reduced its market value. It is exported chiefly to Japan.

Cavao is produced in the provinces of Leyte, Bohol, Misamis, Cebu, Negros, and Samar; that of Cebu and Negros, especially, can rival the best of America. On account of the laziness of the Indians, all the product is locally consumed.

A species of dyewood, which resembles logwood and is called sibucao, is produced in the country and exported to England and China. Among the other products of the country are ihlang-ihlang, wax, mother-of-pearl, straw hats, rattan, etc. These have, however, a secondary importance.

Besides the numerous tobacco establishments, to which reference has already been made, there are in Manila rice factories, sugar mills, distilleries, factories of cord, carriages, soap, aerated waters, brickyards, sawmills, printing establishments, as well as repair shops. Chinese houses where cheap furniture, shoes, etc., are made, and the numerous little industries which belong to a city. The purely native industries consist of work in bamboo and cotton, engraving, and making straw hats. The women have long and slender fingers, fine and sensitive, and the hats and cigarette holders they make, their work on pineapple cloth, and the articles they embroider, are models of delicacy.

The manufacture of cotton goods often forms the occupation of an entire village, and the industry is far from being of insignificant proportions. Artificial incubation, however, is perhaps the industry most peculiar to the Philippines. The apathy of the natives adapts them to this occupation, in which, however, only those who are old and crippled are employed. They lie on soft beds, the eggs being placed around their bodies, and maintain this position until the eggs are hatched. Ducks are raised in large quantities.

As to the imports and exports earlier, the following estimate is given in Consular Reports, July, 1898, page 423:

In 1891 the Philippine exports to Spain amounted to $22,479,000 ($18,095,595). In 1891 the Philippine imports from Spain amounted to $17,126,000 ($13,786,430).

The total exports from the Philippines in 1892 consisted of 95,016 tons of hemp; 3,951,069 piculs (553,148,400 pounds) of sugar; 21,223 piculs (2,971,220 pounds) of coffee; 61,459 piculs (8,604,260 pounds) of sampan wood; 5,570 piculs (779,800 pounds) of indigo; 254,428 quintals (56,091,197 pounds) of tobacco leaf; 137,059,000 cigars. The total exports in 1892 were of the value of $33,479,000 ($23,803,569).

Total value of imports in 1892 were of the value of $27,000,000 ($19,197,000).

Manila hemp is the fiber of a species of banana (Musa textilis) which thrives only in certain localities, where it is cultivated by the natives. The fiber is still produced in the old way, by scraping the leaves with a peculiar knife, which requires expert handling. Numberless contrivances to supersede this simply process have been tried and patented, but without success. The native way is still the best, and it produces a fine fiber of which thread is spun and cloth woven that excels the best Tussore silk.

The manufacture of sugar is not carried on in a large way, but on small plantations with antiquated machinery. There are a few factories, but they are isolated. Some years ago an enterprising Australian established a central sugar factory and laid down miles of pipes for the conveyance of the cane juice to the boilers, and generally went to vast expense. The factory was there and the engines, with the most recent improvements, vacuum pans, and what not. The only thing that was wanting was the plantations to supply the juice. And thus the money was lost, and the pipes that were to conduct the cane juice now convey limpid water to the inhabitants of Manila.

O. S. Williams, consul at Manila, reported February, 1898, as follows (Consular Reports, June, 1898, page 294):

During the quarter ended December 31, 1897, there were exported from these islands to the United States and Great Britain 216,898 bales of hemp (280 pounds per bale), of which 136,702 bales went to the United States and only 78,196 bales to Great Britain.

During the year 1897 there was an increase in the export of hemp from the Philippines to continental Europe of 19,741 bales; to Australia, 2,192 bales; to China, 28 bales; to Japan, 2,628 bales, and to the United States, 135,896 bales, a total increase of 158,485 bales, while to Great Britain there was a decrease of 22,348 bales. (This report is to appear in the forthcoming edition of Commercial Relations, 1896-97, but is printed now on account of the general demand for information.)

Thus, of increased shipments from the Philippines, those to the United States were 544 per cent greater than to all other countries combined.

Of the total exports of hemp from the Philippines for the ten years ended 1897, amounting to 6,528,905 bales (914,055 tons), 41 per cent went to the United States.

During the same years the Philippine Islands exported to the United States and to Europe 1,582,904 tons of sugar, of which 875,150 tons went to the United States, 666,391 tons to Great Britain, and 41,362 tons to continental Europe; showing that of the total exports more than 55 per cent went to the United States.

At the current values in New York of hemp (4 cents per pound) and of raw sugar (3¼ cents per pound) the exports of these two products alone from these islands to the United States during the ten years under review amounted to $89,263,722.80, or an average of nearly $8,926,372 per year.

Data as to cigars, tobacco, copra, woods, hides, shells, indigo, coffee, etc., are not now obtainable; but a conservative estimate would so raise the above figures as to show United States imports from these islands to average about $1,000,000 per month. To-day I have authenticated invoices for export to United States amounting to $138,066.12.

Later I will write of the Philippine tariff, import and export, being now engaged in translating it into English. The export duties and charges here on the hemp and sugar exported to the United States during the ten years ended with 1897 amounted to $5,172,994.87.

It is, from the above, very apparent that the trend of trade is toward the United States, and my best endeavors will be exerted for its further extension.

There are here 22 consulates, representing the several countries, but the volume of the export trade coming under my official supervision equals that of my 21 colleagues combined.

OSCAR F. WILLIAMS, Consul.

MANILA, February 23, 1898.

According to the returns of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, the annual imports into the United States from the Philippine Islands amounted to $74,150,284 during the ten years ended June 30, 1897, or $7,415,028 per year. For the seven years ended with 1894 the imports averaged $8,564,611 per year, but for the last three years the imports fell off nearly one-half, amounting to only $4,731,366, $4,982,857, and $4,383,740 in 1895, 1896, and 1897, respectively.

Isaac M. Elliott, consul at Manila, reported, September 20, 1894 (Consular Report, June, 1895, page 205):

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

There is considerable demand for butter in Manila, but outside of the city there is no market for dairy produce. The natives never eat butter or any other dairy produce, although cape buffaloes are very numerous, and give a fair supply of milk if taken proper care of. Still, the natives let the cattle go dry as soon as the calf is large enough to take care of itself, which is usually the same period as our cows require for the same purpose.

In and about Manila there are a few small herds of Australian cows, the milk from which is sold in the city. The quality is not nearly so good as that from cows in a colder climate, but we are glad to get it, and pay 40 cents (Mexican) per bottle, each bottle holding three-fourths of a quart, English measure; but as the cows soon deteriorate in so hot a climate, there is but small profit in the business, even at the high price of milk. For butter we pay 50 to 60 cents (Mexican) per tin can, holding somewhat less than a pound. But, as I said before, with the exception of Manila and a few towns, say Iloilo and Cebu, no butter is sold, and I fear that there will never be much of a market in this country for dairy produce.

As to apples and other fruits, I am quite sure that no trade could be built up, except in the preserved form, for the following reasons, viz: (1) The long voyage in a steamer's hold in the close, hot atmosphere prevailing nine months out of the year, and the transshipping at Hongkong to other steamers for the passage here, which usually takes five days via Amoy, would rot the fruit before arrival; (2) with the exception of a few Europeans, who might be willing to pay a fair price, there would be no sale for them if brought in good condition, and I doubt very much if a trade could ever be built up for fruits such as the circular describes.

But I do think that, with proper energy, a large trade in canned fruits might be had here, as every person I have spoken to on the subject admits that our California fruits are the best in the world. Messrs. Warner Blodget & Co., Manila, brought out quite a large consignment, but, not being in the retail trade, of course did not meet with much success. I have used some of the fruit, which was in store nearly two years, and it was still in good condition. Except a few cans that had rusted around the edges, all the cans were in good condition. I would suggest a covering of some material to be applied to the tin that would prevent the rapid destruction of the cans.

It is impossible to give figures of what portion of the whole imports of the articles mentioned is shared by the United States.

ISAAC M. ELLIOTT, Consul.

MANILA, September 20, 1894.

As to American flour, Mr. Cowan, consul at Manila, reported in February, 1894 (Consular Reports, June, 1894, pages 308, 309):

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

CEBU.

Standard of living.—The standard of living in the Cebu district is not high. The ordinary food of the bulk of the population consists of rice and maize, which are always procurable at moderate prices. These have always been the food of the people, and they do not show any desire to alter their mode of living.

Quality of flour used.—"Sperry's XXX" flour is practically the only kind sold here.

Imports of flour and wheat.—Flour is not imported directly into this district, the supply being drawn from Manila. It is estimated that 400 quarter sacks are consumed here monthly, principally in the form of bread, by the European community.

Wheat is not imported at all.

Exchange and shipping facilities.—The financial arrangements of the district are carried out in Manila by representative agencies here. As stated before, our supplies come through Manila.

Obstacles to trade.—The only obstacles to the extension of trade in American flour are the conservatism of the natives and their disinclination to work, which prevents their earning more than sufficient to purchase the cheapest form of food, which is probably maize. In my opinion, therefore, the demand for American flour is likely to be of slow growth.

G. E. A. CADELL, Consular Agent.

CEBU, March 8, 1894.

MANILA.

Standard of living.—The Caucasian element here live very much as they do at home, but the natives and Chinese, who form over 99 per cent of the population, are rice eaters. There is, however, a large consumption of flour by the European population. The troops and naval forces also use considerable quantities. The natives, especially those living near the large towns, eat bread made of wheat flour.

Imports of flour and wheat.—The imports of American flour, imported from China, amounted to 335,000 sacks (quarter barrels) and 329,000 sacks in 1891 and 1892, respectively. The statistics for 1893 are not yet available.

Practically all the flour imported is American flour. Occasionally a sailing vessel leaves San Francisco to load outward at a Philippine port, and it often finds it convenient to take flour in lieu of ballast.

Such imports would be credited to the United States, but almost every sack of flour that finds its way to these islands is transshipped at Hongkong into local steamers, and the customs statistics credit the import to China. Some small lots of Japanese and Australian flour also come via Hongkong, but these grades can not compare either in quality or price with California flour.

Wheat is not imported into these islands.

Duties.—The duty on quarter-barrel sacks of flour is 56 cents each, including duty on the sack, and on wheat, 66 cents per 100 kilograms. The duty is the same on flour from all countries, except that from Spain. Spanish flour pays but 20 cents per barrel, and Spanish wheat but 6 cents per 100 kilograms. It was expected that when these differential duties went into force (April 1, 1892) a large demand for Spanish flour would set in. This, however, has not proved to be the case.

Exchange and shipping facilities.—Flour business is only possible where a bank credit on London is opened by some bank here through some other bank in San Francisco. There is no direct shipping between these islands, except as before stated.

Trade outlook.—If flour were put on the free list here, a much larger consumption would doubtless ensue. At present a 50-pound sack sells at wholesale at $2.25, local currency.

C. H. COWAN, Consul.

MANILA, February 7, 1894.

It has been demonstrated beyond any possibility of doubt that the Philippine Islands will become formidable competitors with the United States in the raising of cotton, and especially so as the Chinese labor in the Philippines can be secured for very much less than any labor can be made available in the United States. Realizing this, English capitalists are, according to the report of Consul Frankenthall, now completing a 6,000-spindle cotton mill, with $200,000 capital, for the purpose of manufacturing the native cotton. (Consular Reports for November, 1898, page 446.)

The history of cotton raising in the Philippines up to 1889 is thus given by Consul Alexander R. Webb in his report of August 8, 1889:

Until a comparatively few years ago considerable bush cotton was raised in the Philippine Archipelago, and nearly all of it was made into coarse cloth for the natives by means of rude machinery; but it was found that the English and German cotton fabrics could be bought for very much less than the Philippine goods, and the industry was allowed to languish until it died out entirely. The rapid growth of the hemp and sugar trade here probably contributed largely to this result, for the natives, as well as Europeans, soon learned that there was much money to be made out of hemp and sugar, and very little, if any, out of cotton.

But within the past two years interest in the subject of cotton growing has been revived with the experiments made with American and Egyptian cotton seed by some Spaniards and Mestizos, who have conceived the idea that the Philippines can be made to yield to Spain a rich revenue if the plant is cultivated after modern methods. The climate and soil in some parts of the archipelago have been declared favorable to the rapid growth of cotton, and the experiments, which thus far have been conducted on a small scale, have supported this conclusion.

Last year a small quantity of excellent cotton was raised and sent to Barcelona, where it was manufactured into tablecloths and napkins and returned to Manila, where they were exhibited in the retail dry goods stores as evidences of the possibilities of the cotton culture here, and attracted a great deal of attention. This has encouraged those who have taken an active interest in the subject, and it is considered possible that within a few years cotton may have a place among the exports of the Philippines.

The following extracts are from the Bulletin de la Societe de Geographie Commerciale, Paris, Volume XIX, No. 4:

The land is wonderfully productive, but lacks intelligent cultivation. So wasteful have been the methods that, in spite of the wonderful fertility of the soil, the harvests have in some places diminished. This is true of maize in the island of Cebu and of sugar cane in the province of Pangasinan, where new plantations must now be made every year, while at Negros the land yields many times in succession. The rice production, formerly so large, has so fallen off that importations have been found necessary.

The production of cotton is also diminishing, for the same reasons that apply to rice. It grows in the provinces of North and South Ilocus, Union, Abra, and Pangasinan. The kinds cultivated are Gossipium barbaceum and Bomba pentandrum. The ground is almost never prepared, and the cotton is silky in quality and would easily become a valuable product if attention were given to the cultivation. In the two provinces of Ilocus too great humidity is not to be feared for this plant, for the season of rain is well defined here from June until October, and the land is adapted to its cultivation. Nevertheless, the indolence of the Indians has caused cotton to take an inferior rank among the products of the colony.

According to the statement of Section of Foreign Markets, Department of Agriculture, in Bulletin No. 14 of the year 1898, the average importation of cotton manufactures into the Philippine Islands since 1886 has been a little less than $6,000,000. With the introduction of the cotton mills now building and in project this importation will cease. The development of the cotton industries in the Philippines means a direct loss to the cotton men of the United States of $6,000,000 a year.

In addition to the bush cotton in the Philippines there is also a tree cotton, of which Consul Webb says:

The tree cotton, which is very plentiful in nearly all the islands, has been experimented with to some extent, but, I am told, without satisfactory results, the fiber being too short for spinning. Again, it is asserted that if the proper machinery were used for cleaning it, it would be found that it could be spun and might take the place of bush cotton for many purposes.

Its production would cost nothing except the expense of gathering, as it needs no cultivation. Samples of it were sent to England a short time ago, where it was mistaken, it is said, for Tahiti or sea-island cotton, the fiber being quite long enough for spinning if properly cleaned. Here it is used for stuffing pillows, cushions, mattresses, etc., but I believe that no attempt has ever been made here to spin it. It is thought, however, that if a proper machine for cleaning and preparing it for market could be had, it might be made a good profit-yielding article of export.

What follows is a statement made by Mr. W. M. Mason:

No matter how well read a person may be, few in this country realize the great amount of sickness which has prevailed among the Americans who have attempted to settle in the Philippine Islands. It has been to the advantage of the Administration to keep all unfavorable reports regarding this matter in the background, in order that the ranks of the Philippine army may be well filled from those young men who are fascinated by the alluring prospects which a new, and in many ways unknown, country always holds out to youth.

Since the day when the American army landed at Manila up to the present time the many hospitals established by the military have been filled to overflowing with soldiers and civilians of the United States who were unable to stand the severe climatic conditions of the country. Hundreds have died in the prime of youth who, if they had remained in America, would have lived long and useful lives and would have been of much more service to their Government than unnecessarily giving up their lives to the ravages of the diseases of the Philippines.

In this report, which will soon be made to the Secretary of War, the Surgeon-General will say:

"After the occupation of Manila the sick lists of the regiments increased week by week, due chiefly to intestinal, malarial, and venereal diseases. This continued until the middle of December, when the heavy rains ceased."

Here I would invite attention to the following tabulation, showing annual rates per thousand of strength, deduced from the reported experience of four months in the Philippines, as compared with the average annual rates at military stations in the United States during the ten years 1880-1890, inclusive:

	Philippines.		Garrisons in United States.
	Admission rate.	Death rate.	Admission rate.	Death rate.
Total diseases and injuries	3,016	9.36	1,254	7.12
Injuries	108	1.80	248	2.28
Typhoid fever	47	5.16	6	.64
Malarial fevers	370	.....	96	.14
Venereal diseases	82	.48	76	.02
Diarrheal diseases	445	.48	116	.13
Bronchitis and influenza	66	.36	101	.02

"From these figures it will be seen that the admission rate in Manila has been comparatively large, due mainly to malarial diseases, which are climatic, and to diarrheal diseases, which are no doubt in large part due to errors and irregularities of diet on the part of affected individuals. The malarial diseases exceed their prevalence in the United States in the proportion of 370 to 96, and the diarrheal diseases in the proportion of 445 to 116, or about 4 to 1 in both instances.

"Venereal diseases have been slightly in excess, being equal to an annual rate of 82 per 1,000 men, but there is reason to believe that this reported rate does not express the extent the prevalence of these diseases among the troops in Manila."

The great prevalence of venereal diseases in the Philippine Islands has been remarked upon by all of the Regular Army surgeons who have been stationed in those islands, and who have made reports to the Surgeon-General of the Army. At one time it was stated by an officer of the Medical Department that of the many hundreds of men who were in the hospitals over one-half were suffering from some venereal disease.

Syphilis is extremely common to the people of the Philippines and is of such form as to have greatly baffled the medical treatment of the surgeons who have been with the American Army. It is a common sight to see a native walking on the streets of Manila infected with this disease to such an extent that he presents an appearance of rotting away.

Many of the Americans who have gone to Manila, either to fight with the insurgents or to try and make a fortune, have died from smallpox. For some time after the forces of the United States occupied Manila little care was taken to prevent this disease from spreading among the troops. Very few of the natives are to be seen on the streets of Manila who do not show unmistakable signs of having had this terrible disease. It has been stated on good authority that smallpox is more prevalent in the Philippine Islands than any other place in the world.

The following are some extracts taken from the reports of Major Potter, one of the surgeons stationed in the Philippines:

OCTOBER 16, 1898.

First Colorado Infantry: There has been a steady increase of sickness in this regiment since the 1st instant, the percentage of sick to total strength having risen from 9 on October 1 to 15 on October 15. Intestinal and malarial cases form more than two-thirds of the total sick. The heaviest sick list occurs in companies recruited in large cities, and the smallest number in the companies from small towns and mining camps.

"First Nebraska Infantry.—This regiment has had a large sick report, which is now 17 per cent of the total strength."

"Tenth Pennsylvania Infantry.—Intestinal and malarial diseases constitute the bulk of the sickness. The percentage of sick to total present strength has been 12 to 13 during the last three weeks."

"Eighth United States Infantry.—The percentage of sick has varied from 7 to 9 since October 1, the cases being chiefly intestinal, malarial, and typhoid. Two cases of variola recently appeared in the command."

The reports of Major Potter, made after this time, show a steady increase in the percentage of sick. This was due largely to the rainy season, which is particularly trying to the Americans. At this time of the year there is a steady downpour, resulting in much sickness. The days are hot and damp, and the nights are cold and very uncomfortable.

Among civilians, who did not have the great care and supervision of the Regular Army surgeon, there was naturally much more sickness than that noticeable among the troops. In fact, the climate of the Philippines is by all odds the worst enemy which the Americans have been forced to meet since the occupation of the islands. Many of the young men who have gone to Manila in the hopes of making their fortune have returned to the United States, after having had some severe sickness from which they will never wholly recover, thoroughly disgusted with all pertaining to the Philippines and the people who inhabit them.

It has been found that the health conditions in the interior are not any better than those in the city of Manila. In speaking of the condition of the troops stationed at San Fernando, the Surgeon-General will say in his report:

"Besides, San Fernando had a local reputation as a healthful locality; in fact, it was regarded by the Filipinos as a kind of health resort. Yet the sick lists of the commands continued to increase and the sick failed to show any noteworthy sign of progress toward recovery of their strength. These regiments were shortly afterwards withdrawn from San Fernando to their barracks in Manila, where a change for the better was speedily manifested in the medical records."

In the report of Lieut. Col. Henry Lippincott, United States Army, chief surgeon, Department of the East Pacific and Eighth Army Corps, the following observation, much to the point, is made:

"Perhaps it may not be out of place here to express my professional opinion as to the length of military service in the Philippine Islands.

"From sufficient experience, I know that Americans are not, as a rule, able to endure this climate for a longer period than two years. Climatic diseases and the great enervation due to excessive heat combine to render a longer stay here dangerous to the service and to the individual."

The report of Colonel Lippincott continues in the same strain to show that it was necessary to take the greatest care to prevent diseases common to the islands from becoming prevalent among the American Army. This, however, is a self-evident fact from the various reports which have come from General Otis to the Adjutant-General relative to the sickness among the troops. It seems to be the opinion among Army officers who are stationed in the Philippines, and who saw service in Cuba, that the former place is much more unhealthy than the latter.

The above facts and conditions have been carefully selected from the best sources. They speak for themselves and demonstrate my contention that the Philippine Islands do not hold out any inducements to our farmers, laborers, and business men to leave this country in order to enter upon such a field of labor and enterprise. But to the imperialist, to those who delight in military glory, to those in whose bosoms burn the fire of conquest and the lust of acquisition, to those who love to exercise the power of the sword, the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands and their government as a colony present many and strong temptations.

To the sober-minded and industrious citizen such a prospect does not appeal. We can not forget that this same policy of imperialism and military glory dazzled the imagination and wrought the ruin of ancient Greece; it caused the downfall of the Roman Republic; it disintegrated the power built up with so much care by Charles V; it caused the overthrow of the great Napoleon. To-day England is shedding the blood of her most illustrious sons and spending millions of money to maintain her policy of colonization and imperialism. Having once started on her career of conquest and acquisition, she has never been able to stop, and her war drums have been beating for two centuries in every quarter of the globe.

Let us stay our footsteps on the threshold of imperialism. Let us meet the new century with our faces set against "criminal aggression." Let us bestow upon distant peoples the great boon of American freedom and American civilization. Above all, let us be true to the teachings of our fathers and to those eternal principles of liberty which alone can preserve to us the goodly heritage we possess. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, line 18, after the word "peace," insert the following:
"Provided further, That enlisted men receiving or entitled to the 20 per cent increased pay herein authorized shall not be entitled to or receive any additional increased compensation for what is known as extra or special duty."

Mr. HULL. I think that amendment is perfectly proper and right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, in line 13, after the word "pay," to insert the word "proper," so that it will read "for the pay proper of all officers."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, page 14, after the word "pay," insert the word "proper."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. In line 18 I offer a similar amendment, after the word "pay" to insert the word "proper."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 14, after the word "pay," insert the word "proper."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I understand the section is now perfected, and I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] if it is intended as a permanent policy that the officers and soldiers serving in these possessions shall receive this extra pay whether there is peace or war?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That is to be a permanent policy?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And I suppose the committee have considered that thoroughly?

Mr. HULL. Yes; they are agreed upon it.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, at the time the point of order was withdrawn by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], I rose to renew the point of order myself. I would ask, however——

Mr. HULL. It is certainly too late to raise the point of order after the section has been repeatedly amended, perfected, and adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not made a point of order. The gentleman is making a statement.

Mr. RIDGELY. I would ask unanimous consent that the balance of this matter, down to the bottom of this page, go over with the other that was reserved until to-morrow.

Mr. HULL. Oh, well, I object to that. It has no connection with the other matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay for increased rank when in command by competent authority, $50,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, by instruction of the committee, I offer the following amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line 20, page 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "dollars," in line 20, page 14, the following:
"Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for pay of officers assigned to a higher command than their rank in the Army, unless such assignment is to fill a vacancy existing in the grade to which such officer shall be assigned."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, Regular and Volunteer, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "appropriated," in line 21, page 14, the following: "except the appropriation for mileage to officers when authorized by law."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. My amendment is to insert, after the word "appropriated," the words "except the appropriation for mileage to officers when authorized by law." That has been the form of the appropriation heretofore.

Mr. HULL. I think that amendment is all right. It is simply an inadvertence that it is omitted, and there is no objection to it whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service, $219,492.75.

Mr. McRAE. For the purpose of getting some information, I make a point of order against this paragraph. I should like to have the gentleman explain what it means.

Mr. HULL. Masters of vessels and others are paid in the appropriation for this fiscal year, and the only object of putting in this language is to give more particular information as to what we are appropriating for. If you strike it out here and increase the amount in the other part of the bill for the Subsistence Department, they would be paid just the same as they have been during this fiscal year.

Mr. McRAE. This is not an increase in officers, then?

Mr. HULL. No, it is only for more particular information.

Mr. McRAE. And it is not new legislation?

Mr. HULL. It is not new legislation, unless you say that by going into more detail than heretofore it is new legislation.

Mr. McRAE. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Difference between the cost of the ration at 25 cents and the cost of rations differing in whole or in part from the ordinary ration, to be issued to enlisted men in camp during periods of recovery from low conditions of health consequent upon service in unhealthy regions or in debilitating climates, to be expended only under special authority of the Secretary of War, $180,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the committee have left out of the bill the following, which has been in heretofore, and I now offer it as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 9, on page 17, insert the following:
"Total for Subsistence Department, $10,556,492.75, to be disbursed and accounted for as subsistence of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection.

Mr. HULL. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he allow the paragraph to be read.

Mr. DRIGGS. I am perfectly willing to wait until we reach page 21, as I suggested to the gentleman a while ago.

Mr. HULL. I only wish to have the paragraph read. I think the gentleman will agree with me that it is not in order to offer even a pro forma amendment to a paragraph until the Clerk finishes the reading.

Mr. DRIGGS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph will be read, and the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: Regular supplies of Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, and quarters, and recruiting stations, also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers; and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing department orders and reports, $8,264,000.

Mr. DRIGGS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to preface my remarks on the subject which I desire to speak upon by reading a newspaper article that, while it is somewhat long, is of such great moment and importance to every member of this House irrespective of politics and to every citizen and person in this country that I desire to read it in full, as it pertains absolutely and directly to a certain portion of this bill—the transport service. I will say, however, before reading this article, that it is taken from the Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

The Eagle is in no sense of the word what is commonly known in the parlance of the day as a "yellow journal." It is a most conservative and independent paper. To show how absolutely independent the paper is in politics it will in one campaign support Republican candidates, and if not satisfied will turn around in the next campaign and support the candidates of the Democratic party. I make this statement so that it may be known that the paper is perfectly fair, and I have never known an article to appear in it that its management have not been able to substantiate when it appears in their columns. I will ask the Clerk to read the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Brooklyn Daily Eagle, March 27, 1900.]

A PALACE OF THE SEAS IS THIS ARMY TRANSPORT—WHERE AND HOW THE GOVERNMENT LAVISHED $750,000 ON THE SUMNER—SOLID MAHOGANY FURNITURE—HER OFFICERS' QUARTERS WOULD PUT TO BLUSH THE STATEROOMS OF MANY OCEAN LINERS.

Those people who think that the Army transport service of the United States is a pretty expensive institution would receive a rather startling confirmation of their views if they paid a visit to the Sumner, which is now lying at the foot of Pacific street in Brooklyn. Once upon a time the Sumner was a collier. That was during the war with Spain, when she sailed under the name of Cassius. Since that time she has been converted into a floating palace at an expense of over $750,000. Her staterooms and interior fittings are finer in many respects than those of many of the ocean liners. Apparently there has been no limit to the expenditure of money upon this ship, which is intended to carry troops from here to Manila.

Attention has been directed of late to the Sumner because of the fact that she was sent to a private yard to have damages to her bottom plates repaired. It was then announced that this work would cost $2,500. Now it appears that the bill will amount to about $8,000.

Word also comes from Washington to-day that a body of high Government officials will inspect the Sumner to-morrow to see that she is in perfect condition for her voyage. They can scarcely be disappointed with her interior furnishings, to say the least, if they make as careful an investigation as did an Eagle reporter who made a tour of the ship yesterday.

The Sumner, when she sails from this port on Thursday afternoon, will carry over 1,200 persons. In outside appearance she is not unlike the other Army transports, although she is considerably larger than some of those which have been coming to this port. It requires an inspection of her interior to reveal the extravagant manner in which she has been fitted up.

After the Spanish-American war, during which she was used as a collier by the Navy Department, she was transferred to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army and converted into a transport, the Navy Department having no further use for her. The Sumner was taken to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, where she was remodeled and refitted, leaving that yard and coming direct to Brooklyn. She arrived here about a week ago.

It was while coming out of the channel from the Norfolk Yard that she collided with a railroad barge and was slightly damaged. This damage to her bow plates was repaired at the Erie Basin, instead of at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, where naval officials contend it should have been done. It now said a bill for about $3,000 will be presented to the Secretary of War for these repairs, which naval officials of the local navy-yard say were very slight. At the Brooklyn Navy-Yard it costs about $500 or $600 to dock a warship, and the damage to the Sumner having been slight naval officials do not hesitate to say that a bill for even $2,000 would be unusual.

It is also contended that the largest dry dock at the navy-yard having been empty when the Sumner arrived here, and work in the navy-yard having been slack at that time, the vessel should have been repaired at the navy-yard instead of by private contractors. Navy officials say just as good work could have been done by them in the same time and at a great saving of money to the Government.

The visitor to the Sumner is dazzled by the magnificence which confronts him on every side. The very best of everything that money can buy has been provided. The quarters of the officers of the ship and the commissioned men, who will be carried as passengers, are finer than those on some of the first-class trans-Atlantic steamers.

There are 29 staterooms, each accommodating two persons, and 3 double staterooms. These staterooms are larger than those on the average first-class ocean liners. The berths and dressers are made of solid mahogany, while the knobs and decorations are of the most expensive brass work. Each stateroom is provided with the finest quality of chinaware, suspended on nickeled supports. All trays and, in fact, every metal fixture in these rooms are of the finest quality of brass, heavily nickel plated.

An immense French plate mirror in a solid brass frame, nickel plated, adorns each room, while two cut-glass tumblers, costing at wholesale price 75 cents each, and two cut-glass water bottles, which cost $2.75 each, are among the other furnishings provided for the officers occupying staterooms. Each stateroom is provided with an electric fan. The berths are furnished with the finest quality of linen. Elaborately designed velvet carpets and rugs cover the stateroom floors, while engraved frosted glass covers the front door of each of these apartments.

There is an immense refrigerator with a capacity of making 75 tons, while the bakeries have ovens sufficient to furnish 2,000 loaves of bread daily. A butcher shop, ice house, laundry, kitchen, electric-light plant, and similar necessary adjuncts are located in rooms handsomely finished, the floors of which are covered with tiling or a corrugated artificial stone.

The main saloon is the most elaborate as well as the most expensive feature on the ship. The tables, chairs, closets, umbrella and cane stands, as well as all other woodwork in this room, are of solid mahogany.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask that my time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

There are 2 long and 4 square tables, each of which is said to have cost $300, while the 60 chairs, also of heavy mahogany and upholstered in buff leather, cost about $15 each. A solid mahogany sideboard at one end of the dining saloon, about 10 feet long and 3 feet wide and extending to the ceiling, with great beveled-edge French plate mirrors, cost $1,500.

The sideboard contains $8,000 worth of silverware for use of the commissioned officers and officials of the transport. The silverware consists of knives, forks, spoons, dozens of nut picks, nut crackers, 125 napkin rings, 7 dozen fruit knives, coffee spoons, several coffee and tea sets, several candlesticks; in all, numbering over 600 pieces.

A solid mahogany bookcase with beveled plate glass doors occupies a place opposite the beautiful sideboard.

There is a gorgeously decorated smoking room on the upper deck, also fitted with solid mahogany furniture. The twelve bathrooms are wonderful creations of the plumber's art and fit for the use of a king, each being fitted with a solid porcelain bath tub, which cost over $200.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman, before we proceed further in this reading——

Mr. DRIGGS. I do not agree to yield. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that this is not admissible under the rules to be read unless the gentleman intends to stand by it himself.

Mr. DRIGGS. I propose to stand by it.

Mr. STEELE. It is not germane to the amendment, and unless the gentleman desires——

Mr. DRIGGS. I insist on my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asked unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes, to which there was no objection, and it is being read in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. STEELE. I object, unless he knows it is true and proposes to stand by it. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A solid porcelain washstand, fit for the mansion of a millionaire, occupies a corner in each room. They are said to have cost about $50. The floors of these rooms are laid with small tiling, while all the metal work is brass, heavily nickel plated. Dozens of washrooms, with three different kinds of shower baths, are scattered over the ship. The plumbing work of the ship is all open, the pipes being nickeled wherever exposed.

Accommodations for 998 soldiers have been provided. Each man will be given a berth or sleeping place arranged on galvanized frames. These quarters are in tiers of three and comfortable as compared with the hammocks which the man-of-war's men occupy on the war ships owned by Uncle Sam. The floor of these apartments is covered with tiling. The lavatories provided for the soldiers are better than those usually supplied first-class passengers. There are four sections of the Sumner set apart for the soldiers. The lavatories and washrooms for the soldiers adjoin their quarters and contain 224 solid porcelain washstands, supplied with hot and cold water.

An operating room in the after part of the Sumner is equal to any, it is said, in Greater New York. Several doctors who examined this room pronounce it the best they have ever seen, in point of convenience as well as elegance of finish. The diet kitchen also dazzles the visitor, everything being of elaborate finish. It is located next to the operating room.

The kitchen adjoining the dining saloon is a model in every respect and would reflect credit on the finest ocean steamship or hotel. It is provided with everything that money can buy, all the utensils and other apparatus being of copper and nickel. An automatic egg boiler, costing $75——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes more.

Mr. STEELE. I will have to object to that. The gentleman would not allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I wanted the sentence to be completed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee where the bills for this extravagant supply to this ship or transport are audited. There are $200, I understand, for bath tub, and $750,000 for furnishing this transport. I want to ask where these bills are audited?

Mr. HULL. I will say they are audited by the War Department. We make the appropriation. This is in your time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am asking the gentleman the question in my five minutes, and I want an answer.

Mr. HULL. I was going to take a little of my own time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only wanted to ask a question of you.

Mr. HULL. This is paid for transportation under the head of the Quartermaster-General's Department, and so far as the bills are concerned, we are informed that they would be audited by the War Department.

Mr. DRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. DRIGGS. The question I desire to propound to the gentleman from Tennessee will in extent by the time the sentence is completed be found rather long. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that he does not understand as I do and realize the enormity of the extravagance of this transport Sumner. Did he know that the transport Sumner contains in her a machine among her cooking utensils, a $75 machine, and for what purpose—just for boiling eggs [laughter], that is worked by ordinary clockwork? And does the gentleman from Tennessee realize that from the reading of this newspaper article; and, in addition to that, did he realize that they had cut-glass tumblers at 75 cents apiece wholesale? And did he realize, in addition to that, that they had cut-glass water bottles that cost $2.75 apiece?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I had no idea of that. [Great laughter.]

Mr. DRIGGS. And in addition to that, I would say to the gentleman from Tennessee, did he realize that in the morning these officers and men, after attiring themselves, and on their way down to the saloon to eat their breakfast, can admire their faultless uniforms in a $1,500 plate-glass mirror?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I never dreamed of it. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. DRIGGS. And so, Mr. Chairman, I would say in addition——

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I am asking the gentleman from Tennessee a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. As soon as I get through answering the gentleman from New York I will yield to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. DRIGGS. And in addition to that we are told that on this ship that is so magnificently fitted up that it is far more beautiful than private yachts of millionaires, on the tables where they eat breakfast there was $8,000 worth of silverware; and if perchance it happened to be a dinner instead of a breakfast that they were eating, at the conclusion of the meal the nut picks and fruit knives they would then use were of solid silver. Did the gentleman realize that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Never. [Laughter.]

Mr. DRIGGS. Did he realize that when we had here in the last Congress the war-revenue measure under consideration, the title of which bill was, "An act providing ways and means to meet the war expenses, and for other purposes," that the "other purposes" of that war measure was to fit any such thing as this transport Sumner, while the taxpayers of the United States were ground out of taxes now laid and that had been realized upon by the Administration?

Mr. McRAE. And they had to issue bonds.

Mr. DRIGGS (continuing). And did he realize that I, as one of the Democratic members of this House who voted in favor of this measure, knew of no such use that the money of the people of this country was to be put to under that bill; and if he had realized that he would have known that I would not have voted for such a measure for such purposes as that, because he knew and I know we have no right to take the people's money and put it to any such use?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRIGGS. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee may be extended five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes to talk, but not for the reading of articles.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRIGGS. But, Mr. Chairman, now that I have the time in my own right——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DRIGGS. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand that the answer to all the questions the gentleman propounded to me are found in the article that has just been read?

Mr. DRIGGS. Yes. Now, that I have the right to address the House in my own right, without any subterfuge——

Mr. STEELE. The other was no subterfuge. [Laughter.]

Mr. DRIGGS (continuing). I am willing to concede that when the only way I can, under the rule, get the right to talk in that way I am going to do it when such important questions are being considered here. I will say that during the war with Spain there was not a man, woman, or child in this country but realized the atrocious condition of affairs on the Army transports. We are told that the transports had men huddled in them in a manner and condition worse than any pigs in a western piggery.

Mr. Chairman, when I consider that when these young men were going out to fight for the honor of their country they were huddled together and treated in that shameful manner, and when brought back from Cuba each one declaiming against the transports, and I now consider that the war is practically over, conceded, at least, to be over by the Republican Administration and by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I wonder why they—the Administration—had the assurance to allow the War Department or the Department of the Quartermaster-General to equip a ship like this in this palatial manner, when the men were treated on the other transports like pigs. I endeavored the other day to obtain from the chairman of the committee——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Before the gentleman leaves that point, I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not it is his purpose to pursue this matter further by offering a proper resolution so that the House may make an investigation and ascertain the truth or falsity of the charges in the article.

Mr. DRIGGS. I do. I propose to insert the newspaper article as the "whereas."

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Does the gentleman know that while this work was being done in the private ship yards of the country the Government yards were compelled to run under reduced time because of lack of appropriations?

Mr. DRIGGS. I have heard that stated, but I do not know whether it is so. Now, when I asked the chairman of the Military Committee for the information as to decrease of Army appropriation and he told me it was only $16,000,000 difference, as I recall it, I marveled at the small decrease—and if I quote him incorrectly I apologize for it—but as I recollect, he told me that the appropriations called for in this bill were absolutely essential to carry on the war in the Philippines, or for the maintenance of the army in the Philippines; I do not think he said "necessary for the war in the Philippines," but for the maintenance of the Army. Now, I can see where $750,000 of this money has gone to, and I know not how much more of this money has gone in that same way.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DRIGGS. Yes; for one question.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. For two questions?

Mr. DRIGGS. All right.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What was the total cost of the vessel the gentleman complains of?

Mr. DRIGGS. I do not know.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Over a million dollars?

Mr. DRIGGS. I do not know; she is a beautiful ship; I have seen her.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much have the things cost extra that the gentleman thinks ought not to have gone into her?

Mr. DRIGGS. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars?

Mr. DRIGGS. Well, not altogether; of course I am simply stating it in bulk. I do not understand everything about this. I am not a jack-at-all-trades, and I can not tell you what the cost of the different things should be.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Of course the extra cost of fitting up the cabin in fine style is a mere trifle compared with the cost of a first-class vessel.

Mr. DRIGGS. Certainly it is infinitely more, as we are told by this article. Mr. Chairman, when we realize how the boys in blue in Cuba fought and suffered the torments of the damned from the infamous food that was dealt out to them, we can not but wonder why that was not the time to guard and take the best of care of them, and not now when the war is practically over. At all times we should take the best of care of every man willing to fight for his country, but at no one time shower thorns and another time shower roses.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this is the first information I have had in regard to the newspaper article which has just been read, and the gentleman's speech as a supplement to the article seems to charge that we are now treating the soldiers too well.

Mr. DRIGGS. I never charged that.

Mr. HULL. The criticism by the Democratic party commenced on the Government when the war broke out. We had no transports and the Army had to go to Santiago, and a fleet was improvised. It was not what we wanted. It was the best we could do. The Democratic party raised a cry all over the country that our soldiers were put in transports and huddled together like pigs. Regiments begged for the privilege of going on these poorly appointed ships. The soldiers never complained.

It was reserved for the gentlemen who did not go into the service to raise this cry. [Applause on the Republican side.] Since then we have organized our transport service, and now they come up and say that we are treating the soldiers too well and spending too much money on the transports for men who travel between this country and our island possessions. I do not believe that that article is true in its details. I do believe that we have organized the best transport service that any government ever had in any age of the world. Neither England, Germany, nor France can compare with us in the splendor, if you want to call it so, of the transports we are now sending out to carry our troops back and forth.

Berths for men cool and well ventilated; hospital accommodations for the sick; an ice plant to provide an abundance of ice for all on board during the voyage through the Tropics; cold storage for an abundant supply of fresh meat, vegetables, and fruit, and all other appliances for the comfort and welfare of the men. Not huddled together like pigs now. Oh, no! But too extravagant, cry our Democratic friends.

The gentleman says, "Think of it, think of it, $75 for a vessel to boil eggs in!" Well, think of a ship carrying 2,000 men. And if it requires twice that amount, or $150, to buy a vessel to boil eggs in for those men, I say God bless the officer who will provide for them and give them the eggs. [Applause.] The gentleman says, "Think of it, think of it, we have got to provide porcelain-lined urinals for the men."

Mr. DRIGGS. I did not say that.

Mr. HULL. Yes, you did, substantially. Does the gentleman want to go back to the old tin institution? [Laughter.] We can not suit him or his party. If in the stress of war we are obliged to utilize what we can hurriedly get together on short notice to achieve a victory, we meet the criticism of gentlemen on the other side for not doing better. In a time of peace, after the Government can provide and does provide the proper facilities for taking care of our troops, you come in here with a highly colored, sensational newspaper article which charges us with treating the soldiers too well.

Mr. DRIGGS. I did not do that.

Mr. HULL. By having read such an article you make the charge. I am proud of my friend from New York!

Mr. DRIGGS. Thank you.

Mr. HULL. But, thank God, this Government does not have to legislate to suit the gentleman from New York. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have visited, in common with some other gentlemen of Congress, one or two of these transports. In San Francisco, just before the Sheridan sailed in June last for Manila, with 2,200 or 2,300 men aboard, we went on board the ship. It was scrupulously clean; it was splendidly appointed in all its parts. The storage room was inspected, the quarters for the men were inspected, the apartments for the officers were inspected by these members of Congress, and no ground for criticism was found. It was not extravagantly fitted up. It was a perfectly appointed troopship. The men all said that they were splendidly taken care of and that they looked forward with pleasure to their trip.

But while everything was in this perfect condition there was no such extravagance as would justify one word of criticism either from the gentleman from New York or any other Democrat in America. [Applause on the Republican side.] I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this House that if there has been reckless extravagance in the fitting up of the two ships referred to by the gentleman from New York, the proper place for the gentleman to get full information is at the War Department.

Gentlemen can get there all the information they may want as to the detailed cost of every one of these vessels. There is no secret about it, and no desire to hide anything, and when gentlemen obtain such information they will find that these ships are fitted out perfectly, but not extravagantly. They will find that our Government to-day has organized a transport service better in all its parts for the care of officers and men and for the speedy performance of the duty for which this service is organized than the corresponding service of any other nation on earth. At first, in making our arrangements in connection with our transport service for the war, we met some criticism, and we acknowledged the correctness of it. The criticism was not just under the circumstances, but the service was poor.

Mr. STEELE. Other nations are now copying our ships.

Mr. HULL. As everyone knows, in the beginning, in order to accomplish results, we could not wait to build ships or fit up properly those we chartered or bought. But now that we have had time we have set the pace for the rest of the world. England and Germany——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I would like a little more time, so that I may at least conclude my sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman may proceed five minutes longer.

Mr. HULL. I do not want that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HULL. To-day these foreign nations have inspected our service; they have sent their experts here to examine our ships; and in place of our copying theirs, they are now copying ours. [Applause.] They bear generous testimony to our great results.

The United States of America, after thirty-five years of peace and without experience in the organization of a transport service, have within the last two years made such improvement in this line of service that the nations of the Old World, who have for years been engaged in this kind of business, have come to us and adopted our ideas, acknowledging them to be better than their own.

For one, as an American citizen, I am proud of the fact that this Government will spend whatever is necessary and proper to care for her soldiers on land or sea, and I am proud of the fact that we had men in authority during the last two years of our country's history able and willing to make such improvements that the whole civilized world acknowledges to-day the supremacy of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I have had no intention whatever to criticise anything but the extravagant equipment features of the transport service of the United States, and the gentleman from Iowa knows full well that the various items of extravagance which have been recited in the article read are true. I believe it to be true that in the construction and management of those ships there has been extravagance. And now I desire to go back and allude to something else.

I desire to say that I believe in allowing the dead past to bury its dead, and I sat here all through the last session of Congress and never once opened my mouth on the subject of what I witnessed down at Camp Wikoff on Montauk Point, because I believed that was a page in the history of our country that should be closed.

At the outbreak of that war we had no preparation, and I believe, and I say it now, that many of the errors and mistakes of the War Department were made through lack of preparation; but that does not get away from the fact that the day I visited Montauk Point, at Camp Wikoff, I saw one of the Illinois troops come from one of those transports that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has just told us about, and I tell you now that that ship, from deck to keel, was in as bad condition as were the prison ships in Wallabout Bay, and they were notorious for their filth and dirt.

I went all around through that camp, by a special permit from our then colleague, General Wheeler of Alabama. I went among the regulars, I went among the volunteers, I inquired from the officers and men as to the condition of these transports, and to a man they told me, and I have it in my diary at home, that the condition of those transports was simply damnable.

Now, how does that compare with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]? I want to see our American troops, when they are transported from here to the Philippines or Hawaii or Puerto Rico, carried in the very best ships that money can buy and in the very soundest ships that money can buy; and I will vote for that kind of a proposition every time. [Applause.] But the moment the word "extravagance" comes in, there, I say, let us stop, and do not let us have any extravagance at all.

We know how much is necessary for the conduct of this war and for the Army. Mr. Chairman, we know full well what great industries in this country are demanding a reduction of the war-revenue tax; but just so long as the President of the United States tells me that there is war in the Philippines, or in any other place in this country, I propose to stand here and vote for every dollar that is necessary for the suppression of that war, and to vote for every man demanded by the President of the United States.

But the very moment the necessity for these appropriations stop, and the very moment that there are to be no more men required, then I would be recreant to the trust reposed in me by the people of my district were I not to rise here and declaim against woeful, wasteful extravagance.

Oh, ye shades of the immortal Holman, and other more modern watchdogs of the Treasury, what has become of your occupation, when you will allow such items as the equipment of the transport Sumner to go through an appropriation bill without an investigation?

I have no desire to emulate the footsteps of any of my distinguished predecessors as watchdogs of the Treasury. I believe in the most liberal appropriations necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government; but I do not believe in extravagance when the people are demanding economy. I do not believe in extravagance when taxation should be reduced, and I do not believe in extravagance when other necessary measures should be enacted and other necessary purposes should be followed out with the money that is wastefully, woefully, needlessly thrown away.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a word. I have an acquaintance with the Quartermaster-General, who is the same one we have had since the breaking out of the Spanish war, a most worthy and, in my opinion, a most painstaking officer.

I do not believe that there has been undue expense upon this or any other transport. It does seem to me, I say to the gentleman from New York, if I had wanted to perpetrate a sensation upon the House I would have journeyed down to the Auditor's Office for the War Department, and to the War Department proper, and found out whether this highly colored article was inspired by somebody who was not pleased because the ship was not repaired at the navy-yard rather than at a private yard, or possibly by some private yard that wanted the job as against the one that did get it, or whether there was somebody wandering around who wanted the transport service put under the Navy, who inspired the article.

I would have found out something about it before I perpetrated the sensation, I think. Possibly, when my friend had found out about it, it would not have served his purpose in perpetrating a sensation. [Laughter.] I do not know whether that is so or not.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. DRIGGS. I have no desire to create a sensation whatever. It is against my nature and against my actions in this House. I simply desired to find out if this is the truth.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is just about a mile to the two proper officers who could have told all about it, and where everything could have been found out. I have no knowledge about it, but my belief is that the Sumner is a splendid transport, as it ought to be, and so all our transports ought to be. Now, I will acknowledge, when you talk about a china service for the table, that probably they had better fitted it up with pewter plates. I do not know.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman will concede that $200 for a bath tub is rather heavy.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know as to the cost of bath tubs. It is easy to say, "Is not that heavy?" I suppose some kind of a bath tub can be bought for twenty or twenty-five dollars. But my understanding is that the bath tubs which are now used by people who build even modest houses in this country—bath tubs of porcelain—cost from $100 to $150. I am told some of them cost thousands of dollars—three or four or five thousand dollars—for bathrooms and furnishings amongst the average constituency of my genial friend from New York [Mr. DRIGGS]. [Laughter.] I do not know about that.

Mr. DRIGGS. I only wish they had that money up there.

Mr. CANNON. It is easy to talk about a goblet costing 75 cents. It is easy to talk about mahogany furniture; and yet everybody knows that it is cheaper than walnut.

I do not know the necessity for this furnishing. I do know that there are 65,000 of our boys in the Philippines, 12,000 miles from home. I know that they had to be taken there, and that they have to be brought home, and perhaps others have got to go and come.

They can not jump there; they can not go there in a canoe or skiff; they can not sail there in a schooner. It is the duty of the Government to take them, and the Government, in the performance of this duty, has fitted up these transports. I apprehend when the fact is arrived at that it will be found they are well fitted up, so that you and I would not be ashamed of them—fitted up for the comfort and good reputation and well-being of the people who go upon them.

Now, I never went aboard a man-of-war or a cruiser but what I found better furniture, better knives and forks, better crockery, more highly polished furniture than there are in my house or in any house I suppose that I could get an invitation to go to. [Laughter.] But I was always glad of it. A service that goes about the world, carrying our boys and carrying our Navy, ought to be the best service for the comfort of the men that it is practicable to get, everything for efficiency without extravagance, and besides that it ought to be such, as it steams about the world, that when an American citizen goes aboard an American ship he will not be ashamed of his country. [Applause.]

Now, that is about all I want to say. I would not have said a thing, except that I happened to be acquainted with the Quartermaster-General. In my judgment there is not a more painstaking, industrious, worthy officer in the service of the Government, a man of good ability, and I felt right here, at the inception of this matter, that I ought to say that, and I have said it; and I am glad that in the future, now that we have had time to prepare these transports, our people will be able to travel without contracting disease from neglect or insufficient accommodation.

If that was not so, the Government would be subject now to just criticisms, whereas in its stress, when the Spanish war broke out, it was subjected to unjust criticism for insufficient transport service, which my friend even echoes, and which his party friends over there charged against the Government when it could not do any better. Now, much can be said about a glass goblet costing 75 cents. I have been in this House a quarter of a century, and I recollect that one Democratic statesman, chairman of the Committee on Accounts in the House, rose in his place upon that side, in a blue jeans suit, and, waving a little fan that cost a cent, and paid for from the contingent fund in the hot weather, for the use of members, said, "Mr. Speaker, look at the expense"——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, I did not think my five minutes was up. I want to have time to finish this incident, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Waving his little fan, a cent fan, he said, "Mr. Speaker, look at it—a fan bought from the contingent fund;" and he waved it back and forth off his face. Well, that nominated him as a candidate for governor of Indiana on the Democratic ticket. [Laughter.] I am glad we have progressed from those times. Those times were hard times.

Mr. FLETCHER. Democratic times.

Mr. CANNON. We have had harder times since that time. I am thankful to-day, with all our people fully employed at remunerative wages, that nowhere from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, from New York to the Golden Gate, can there be found one carping critic that will make a foolish criticism when we care properly for the boys that wear the blue as we transport them a great distance to their post of duty. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 12, page 18, the following:

"Provided, That no part of the money appropriated hereinbefore or hereinafter shall be paid to the son of any member of Congress, provided such son secured his appointment to a place in the Army since the destruction of the battle ship Maine in Habana Harbor on or about the 15th of February, 1898."

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order against that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa raises the point of order against the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. Let the gentleman be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not ask to be heard.

Mr. LENTZ. I shall present later in the debate on this bill a discussion of that question by a gentleman who has been well known in history as Thomas Jefferson. I do not think it is out of order to limit an appropriation.

Mr. STEELE. I want to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been sustained to the provision, and the gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to reply to the very pertinent inquiry made by the gentleman from Iowa, but before I do that I desire to direct attention to the manifest unfairness of the gentleman from Illinois as to the complaint raised by the gentleman from New York about the fitting out of this transport. These fine Smyrna rugs, $1,500 looking-glass, solid mahogany tables costing $300 apiece, this $8,000 of solid silver, is not for the benefit of the boys in blue that seem to be so close to some of us here.

What better right have you on your side of the Chamber to speak for the boys in blue than gentlemen on this side? All patriotism is not over there. We are just as anxious to care for the boys in blue as you can be, but for one, speaking for myself alone, I am unwilling, Mr. Speaker, to drag in namby-pamby sentiment in order to catch a few votes, to vote money for extravagant living of officers on our ships.

Now to the pertinent inquiry of the chairman of this committee, "Can we treat our soldiers too well?" I desire to say, "Yes; we can treat them too well." It is dangerous to treat our soldiers too well; it fosters the military spirit. Ours is a nation of peace, and we do not desire to make war unless there be a stern necessity for it. We resort to it only to protect ourselves from invasion or to maintain our liberties; and if we propose to make war so alluring it will entice our boys from the farms and the workshops we will create the very sentiment in this country that we on this side are from time to time charging against the Republican party as dangerous.

We do not desire to foster the spirit of militarism, but, on the contrary, it has been the practice, it has been the belief of every citizen of the Republic, that war was to be resorted to only as a dire necessity, and it remains for one modern exponent of Christianity to make a bloody and relentless war, and without the sanction of the only constitutional body our Government authorizes to proclaim war. And, differing from my colleague, the gentleman from New York, I desire to say that I am unwilling to vote one centime of money to carry on a war which I believe has no right to exist under our Constitution, and which exists in violation of the law of the land. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am willing to take the responsibility. I have no complaint to make of our soldiers who do their duty, but I believe the man who is carrying on this war without sanction of Congress ought to be impeached in his place for doing so without a shred of law at his back. Why stand here and truckle to a sentiment, because, forsooth, somebody will accuse you of not having as much patriotism as some gentleman who talks about the soldiers? I believe that patriotism lies deeper than mere lip service, and I believe I can show more patriotism by being honest than I can by being thieving and covering it up by any words of praise. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If the extravagance set forth in this paper is true, it is a disgrace to the American people. But, they say, we want to suppress the transport service, and say other nations copy after us. That is not a compliment to a great nation of toilers like the American people. We are not a military people, and I pray God we shall never become one. We can only become a military people by such practices as are detailed in this article. And, gentlemen, we can not escape this conviction. History, experience, and judgment tell us that any country that fosters a military spirit and maintains a great military establishment lives always in the shadow of a Cæsar.

I am opposed to the maintenance of such a spirit. I am opposed to the wanton expenditure of the people's money. This very day I called attention to the fact that the chief officer of the military department of this Government, responding to an inquiry of the cost of the military operations in the Philippine Islands, said to the House of Representatives that we had expended $48,000,000 of money in the last eighteen months, when any man who has taken the trouble to investigate knows that we have expended between one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and thirty million dollars.

Here is where the money has gone. Here is where one hundred and twelve millions went to. It is in the transport service. It is in magnificent looking-glasses, the Smyrna rugs, and the solid mahogany furniture, where the officers in ambrosial ease "the primrose path of dalliance tread," while the soldier sits on his cot under the deck. There is where the money goes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

[Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and had come to no resolution thereon.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a privileged report.

Mr. CANNON. A conference report on the deficiency bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the statement instead of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to omit the reading of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Office of Auditor for the War Department: For the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn-out and defaced rolls and vouchers in the Office of the Auditor for the War Department, $2,944.40."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "For printing and binding for the War Department, namely, for publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion by the Record and Pension Office, $10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
S. S. BARNEY,
RICE A. PIERCE,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendment numbered 1: Appropriates $2,944.40 for the purpose of restoring and repairing the worn-out and defaced rolls and vouchers in the office of the Auditor for the War Department.

On amendment numbered 2: Authorizes, as proposed by the Senate, the erection of public buildings on a tract of land recently acquired as a site for necessary buildings at Fort Dupont, Del., before the consent of the legislature of Delaware to the purchase has been given.

On amendments numbered 3 and 4: Inserts the title, "Bureau of Equipment," in the bill, as proposed by the House.

On amendment numbered 5: Appropriates $7,200, as proposed by the Senate, for work at and general repairs of the Capitol.

On amendments numbered 6, 7, and 8: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $2,500 for engraving and printing the geological maps of the United States, and $30,000 for gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States.

On amendments numbered 9, 10, and 11: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $500 for stationery and $1,000 for contingent expenses for the Department of State.

On amendments numbered 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $35,000 to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for expenses of the Senate.

On amendment numbered 18: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for publication of the Official Records of the Rebellion by the Record and Pension Office of the War Department.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $1,543,724.40, being an increase of $79,144.40 over the amount of the bill as passed by the House.

J. G. CANNON,
S. S. BARNEY,
RICE A. PIERCE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. McRAE. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is not quite unusual to have a public-building bill in an urgent deficiency bill?

Mr. CANNON. There is no public-building bill there.

Mr. McRAE. There is an appropriation for the purchase of a site.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that there was a former appropriation for an improvement of the service in Delaware, for the construction, as I recollect it, of barracks for a fortification. The consent of the legislature of Delaware has not been given. This authorizes the construction before the consent is given, it being morally certain that it will be given, and being very urgently recommended. The Senate were clearly of the opinion, and the House conferees agreed, that from the standpoint of the demands of the service the provision ought to be made. It does not carry any money. The money had already been appropriated.

Mr. McRAE. It seemed to me that, in view of the fact that we have not yet considered the fortification bill, the item should have gone into that bill.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think this item belongs in the fortification bill, but it would go in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. McRAE. Well, the sundry civil bill, then.

Mr. CANNON. It was because of the urgency of the matter, the desirability if not the necessity of proceeding at once, as the conference committee were satisfied, that the Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRAE. I understood the gentleman to say that it related to some land necessary for a fortification.

Mr. CANNON. For the construction of buildings before the jurisdiction is formally ceded by the legislature of the State of Delaware.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman thinks it is necessary, I make no point on that; but it seemed to me that this was not the proper place for an item of that sort, on an urgent deficiency bill. Certainly it is not a deficiency.

Mr. CANNON. The House conferees were thoroughly satisfied, after investigation, that it was proper.

Mr. McRAE. But you are also thoroughly satisfied that it is not a deficiency.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it is not a deficiency in the technical sense that an appropriation for the expenses of this House is a deficiency, yet it was a Senate amendment that we could not get rid of, if we had desired to do, by a point of order in the House. We can not in that way dispose of Senate amendments, and it was so manifestly proper for the reason indicated that the House conferees were unanimous in believing that it ought to be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how much money does this bill carry?

Mr. CANNON. Something over a million dollars. The Clerk can state the amount.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the total of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

One million five hundred and forty-three thousand seven hundred and twenty-four dollars and forty cents, being an increase of $79,144.40 over the amount of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do I understand that the $35,000 inserted under the head of the Senate is for extra salaries and extra offices created in the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. No; I do not so understand. It is for miscellaneous expenses to be paid out of their contingent fund. They, like us, have people engaged in very expensive investigations. We had to have about $20,000 for our contingent fund, largely made necessary from some very expensive investigations that are going on, the transportation of witnesses over great distances, and large per diem and fees of officers, and so on.

Now, the Senate do not allow the House to do all that kind of thing. They have something of that kind on hand. But let that be as it may, I will say to my friend that for years, after being fought out to the bitter end, it has been conceded that touching the expenses of the Senate and House the coordinate branch, when the item is insisted upon, is expected to assent to the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I thought that was the case, and that was the reason I made the suggestion at this time and drew the attention of the House to what I consider to be the extravagant expenditures of the Senate.

Mr. CANNON. Well, speaking respectfully, if I may under the rules, concerning the coordinate branch, I think they spend more money for their employees than we do, but they have no copyright on extravagance, to the exclusion of this House, as is agreed by members on each side and frequently referred to by members on that side.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But the per capita expenses of the Senate are about four times the per capita expenses of the House, and I think there is unwarranted extravagance in carrying on the Senate.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SARAH E. FORTIER.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 2020, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BOARDING OF VESSELS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, March 28, 1900.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 733) entitled "An act concerning the boarding of vessels."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request will be complied with, which will result in discharging the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries from the consideration of the bill.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 477. An act granting a pension to Levi C. Faught—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Senate concurrent resolution 36:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 4,500 copies of the work entitled The Louisiana Purchase, by the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Printing.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILLER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GRAHAM, for one week, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. HULL (at 5 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting vouchers constituting claims of L. B. Shephard, United States commissioner at St. Michael, Alaska—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, a recommendation with reference to deposit of company funds in United States depositaries—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Upper Illinois and Lower Des Plaines rivers—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for pay of Military Academy—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. KNOX, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7091) relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 831); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4718) to regulate the collection and disbursement of moneys arising from leases made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 832); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 963) to designate Green Bay, Wis., a subport of entry, reported the same with amendment, acccompanied by a report (No. 833); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6554) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Carlton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 795); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4037) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie M. Churchward, widow of William F. Churchward, late private, Company H, One hundred and fifty-ninth New York Infantry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 796); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8655) granting an increase of pension to Edgar H. Stevens, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 797); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GASTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 950) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Fletcher, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 798); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3186) granting a pension to Margaretha Lippert, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 799); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1977) granting an increase of pension to Levi Moser, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 800); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8801) granting an increase of pension to W. H. H. MacDonald, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 801); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4422) granting a pension to William H. Brookins, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 802); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9180) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel L. Colson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 803); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9419) granting a pension to Mrs. H. P. Cotter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 804); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9163) granting a pension to Ferguson M. Burton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 805); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2200) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Murphey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 806); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2943) granting an increase of pension to James J. Holland, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 807); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 755) granting a pension to Hannah R. Johnson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 808); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3125) granting a pension to Emily A. Larimer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 809); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8682) to place upon the pension roll Louisa C. Germain, widow of Charles Germain, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 810); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MINOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2545) granting a pension to Nellie A. West, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 811); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1600) granting an increase of pension to John T. Hayes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 812); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1787) granting an increase of pension to Joseph P. Pope, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 813); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 681) granting a pension to Julia D. Richardson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 814); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4789) granting a pension to Mary M. Young, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 815); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1271) granting a pension to Charles Williamson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 816); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 342) granting a pension to Eleanor McDevitt, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 817); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7230) granting a pension to Roxie B. Salter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 818); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5978) for the relief of Amos Van Nausdle, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 819); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. COCHRANE of New York, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2880) granting an increase of pension to Caroline B. Bradford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 820); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8992) to place on the pension roll the name of Margaret J. Kibble, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 821); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOFFECKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3102) granting a pension to Seleder Burnham, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 822); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 752) granting an increase of pension to Isaac W. Comery, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 823); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3004) granting an increase of pension to James H. Stevens, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 824); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 359) granting an increase of pension to William M. Walker, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 825); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2162) granting a pension to Frances J. Manley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 826); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9751) granting a pension to David H. Drake, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 827); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEDGE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1754) granting an increase of pension to Burton Packard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 828); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8559) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Margaret R. Clune, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 829); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7480) for the relief of the legal representatives of Tomlinson and Hartupee & Co., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 830); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10001) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph T. Stout—Committee on Ways and Means discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 3696) for the relief of Mary R. Frost—Committee on Ways and Means discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 7192) to grant a pension to Patrick Doyle—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10070) granting a pension to W. E. Grubbs—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 4899) granting a pension to Mrs. Ella Cotton Conrad—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTLETT: A bill (H. R. 10097) to authorize the Atlantic and Gulf Short Line Railroad Company to build, construct, and maintain railway bridges across the Ocmulgee and Oconee rivers, within the boundary lines of Irwin, Wilcox, Telfair, and Montgomery counties, in the State of Georgia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LEVY: A bill (H. R. 10098) to transfer the Army transport service afloat from the War Department to the Navy Department—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BERRY: A bill (H. R. 10099) fixing the charges upon parlor and other cars, and so forth—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 10100) to amend section 21 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOFFECKER: A bill (H. R. 10101) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to have prepared and issued a "Service medal of honor" to certain officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Union Army, Navy, and Marine Corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 10102) to reimburse naval volunteers—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KLEBERG: A bill (H. R. 10103) for the suppression of monopolies and corporations and associations who engage or offer to engage in interstate commerce in the restraint of trade and commerce between the several States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 10149) providing for commutation of transportation and subsistence of officers and enlisted men when honorably discharged from the service of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 10150) to provide for the construction of the Maryland and Delaware Free Ship Canal as a means of military and naval defense, and for commercial purposes—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. ROBERTS: A concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 36) to print copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts: A resolution (H. Res. 200) granting admission to clergymen of all denominations to all Army posts and quarters—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of New York: A resolution (H. Res. 201) calling upon the Secretary of War for information regarding Army transports—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 10104) to remove the record of dishonorable discharge from the military record of Andrew M. Laughlin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARBER: A bill (H. R. 10105) to correct the military record of Patrick O'Connor—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 10106) granting an increase of pension to Louann A. Perry, of Pueblo, Colo.—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BREWER: A bill (H. R. 10107) granting an increase of pension to Philip Mooney—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10108) for the relief of J. W. Godsey—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURKETT: A bill (H. R. 10109) granting a pension to Mary Ann O'Leary—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Texas: A bill (H. R. 10110) for the relief of A. S. Cannon, late postmaster at Moscow, Tex.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 10111) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Corless—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT: A bill (H. R. 10112) granting an increase of pension to Leona E. Benscoter—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DAVEY: A bill (H. R. 10113) for the relief of the estate of Octave La Branche, deceased, late of St. Charles Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 10114) for the relief of William W. Leake, of Florida—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 10115) for the relief of the heirs of James Madison Martin—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10116) for the relief of the heirs of J. M. Robb—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GILLET of New York: A bill (H. R. 10117) granting an increase of pension to William L. Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10118) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Flynn, of Mississippi—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also (for Mr. FOX), a bill (H. R. 10119) for the relief of Mrs. E. S. Smith, of Calhoun County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KERR: A bill (H. R. 10120) granting a pension to Susanah Pitts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LENTZ: A bill (H. R. 10121) to correct the military record of Frank D. Myers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10122) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Vankirk—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10123) granting an increase of pension to John Long—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 10124) granting a pension to Richard B. Dunlap—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10125) granting a pension to Narcissa L. Brandon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 10126) granting a pension to Turner Holcomb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 10127) granting a pension to Nancy Whirley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10128) for the relief of Henry Lorback, of Waverly, Ohio—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 10129) to carry into effect the finding of the Court of Claims in behalf of Peter Targarona—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 10130) to increase the pension of James Moss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 10131) to remove the charge of desertion against Philip R. Yates, late of Company F, Seventh Vermont Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAY of New York: A bill (H. R. 10132) granting a pension to Charles H. Wickham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RIDGELY: A bill (H. R. 10133) granting a pension to John Carr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10134) to remove the charge of desertion standing against William Blundell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10135) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Linton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10136) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Samuel Allen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10137) to remove charge of desertion against John C. Bogard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10138) to remove the charge of desertion against George C. Armstrong—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10139) to remove charge of desertion against George W. Grigsby—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10140) to remove the charge of desertion against Hiram Lane—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10141) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Thomas W. Gallagher—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RIXEY: A bill (H. R. 10142) for the relief of George Umbaugh, of Loudoun County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10143) for the relief of the estate of James Fallin, deceased, late of Fairfax County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10144) for the relief of the legal representatives of Jonah Hood, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10145) for the relief of Joseph L. Verts, of Loudoun County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10146) granting an increase of pension to James Willard, of Loudoun County, Va.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 10147) granting a pension to Delia A. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 10148) to extend Letters Patent No. 183268, in favor of the inventor, Timothy L. Lynch, of Jersey City, N. J.—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. VANDIVER: A bill (H. R. 10151) to correct the military record of Zadock Phillips—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of citizens of Cecil County, Md., against the passage of the Loud bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Dushane Post, No. 3, Department of Maryland, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARNEY: Petition of M. G. Townsend Post, No. 105, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Wisconsin, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BELL: Petitions of citizens of Montevista, Mancos, Ophir, and Dolores, Colo., against the passage of the Loud bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Congregational Church of Montevista, Colo., for the passage of a bill giving prohibition to Hawaii—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, petitions of citizens of Walsenburg and Cimarron, Colo., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Antoinette A. Hawley, of Denver, Colo., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BENTON: Resolutions of Stephen Decatur Post, No. 142, and Eagle Post, No. 492, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, favoring the prompt passage of the shipping subsidy bill—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine: Petition of T. B. Bradford and others, of Goldenridge, Me., to amend the present law in relation to the sale of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Lyman Blair and other citizens of Greenville and Sherman Mills, Me., in favor of the Grout oleomargarine bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRENNER: Petition of Parmerlee-Horn Post, No. 622, Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROMWELL: Resolution of U. S. Grant Post, No. 340, Grand Army of the Republic, Cincinnati, Ohio, in favor of a bill locating a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: Petition of Todd Post, No. 15, of Columbus Junction, Iowa, and Robeson Post, No. 51, of Camden, N. J., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of Charles Moore Post, No. 725,

Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, indorsing the bill to establish a Branch Home for Disabled Soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: Petition of citizens of Unionville, Mo., in favor of the Grout bill, taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of citizens of Kendall, Wis., asking for the passage of the anti-canteen bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., with reference to the bill for the encouragement of the American merchant marine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, favoring the enactment of House bill No. 6246, known as the Brosius pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, expressing confidence in the wisdom of the Administration and of Congress in legislation relating to Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. FLETCHER: Resolution of J. B. Wakefield Post, No. 172, of Long Lake, Minn., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, Minn., against the passage of a certain bill authorizing the manufacture and use of trade checks—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Resolutions of Colonel J. B. Clark Post, No. 162, of Allegheny, and Eli Hemphill Post, No. 135, of Tarentum, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, praying for legislation to build up the merchant marine of the United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut: Petition of Samuel Brown Post, No. 56, of Enfield, Conn., Grand Army of the Republic, urging the passage of House bill No. 7094, for the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENRY of Mississippi (for Mr. FOX): Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Mrs. E. S. Smith, of Calhoun County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Ann Flynn, of Mississippi—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: Resolutions of S. C. Armstrong Post, No. 51, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Virginia, in favor of House bill No. 7094, for the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., urging the enactment of a clause in the Hawaiian constitution forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and a prohibition of gambling and the opium trade—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, petition of the Reedy Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Caroline County, Va., praying for more stringent legislation against the sale of liquors in the Army canteens—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KLEBERG: Petition of A. M. Barney Post, No. 67, of Brownsville, Tex., Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LESTER: Memorial of the Georgia Medical Association, asking that the Surgeon-General of the Army have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major-general—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONG: Resolution of Newton Post, No. 120, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MANN: Resolutions of Chicago Heights Post, No. 759, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, in favor of the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MEEKISON: Petition of Joy Post, No. 153, of Pioneer, Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, urging the passage of House bill No. 7094, for the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MIERS of Indiana: Resolutions of Frank White Post, No. 490, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Marcissa L. Brandon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MUDD: Petition of Peter Targarona, in the matter of the findings of the Court of Claims in his behalf—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NAPHEN: Resolution of the Chicago Federation of Labor, against the passage of the Tawney bill for the increase of tax on butterine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, for the considering of Puerto Rican legislation—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, approving House bill No. 6246, known as the Brosius pure-food bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Trades League of Philadelphia, Pa., in favor of Senate amendments to House bill No. 8347, restoring the appropriations for the maintenance of the Hydrographic Office—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, requesting the passage of the shipping bill—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Statement of Business Men's Association, J. T. Mallalieu, secretary, and cards showing business statistics; also statement of postmaster at Kearney, with evidence, in support of House bill No. 9129, to purchase site and erect a public building at Kearney, Nebr.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Resolution of J. R. Gordon Post, No. 281, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, urging the passage of House bill No. 7094, for the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POWERS: Petition of citizens of Fairfield, Vt., to amend the present law in relation to the sale of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RAY of New York: Petition of citizens of Merrickville, N. Y., against the passage of the Loud bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of citizens of Franklin, N. Y., and of citizens of Delaware County, N. Y., in favor of the bill to tax oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RIXEY: Petition of J. S. Douglas, for the heirs of James H. Gaskins, deceased, of Fauquier County, Va., praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany bill for the relief of the estate of James Fallin, deceased, late of Fairfax County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Joseph L. Verts, of Loudoun County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of George Umbaugh, of Loudoun County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTS: Resolutions of Abraham Lincoln Post, No. 11, of Boston, Mass., and General H. G. Berry Post, No. 40, Department of Massachusetts, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: Resolutions of members of the bar of Ocala, Fla., in relation to redivision of the State of Florida as to its Federal judicial districts and providing for a term of the court at Ocala—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Resolution of the Texas Cattle Raisers' Association, for the continuation of Government distribution of blackleg vaccine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the Texas Cattle Raisers' Association, protesting against legislation placing a tax on oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the Texas Cattle Raisers' Association, favoring the passage of the Kleberg House bill regulating railroad rates, and preventing discrimination—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, requesting the passage of a bill permitting cattle to remain on cars in transit forty hours instead of twenty-eight hours, as now provided by law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Resolutions of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, Minn., favoring Federal ownership of Government lands and the building of storage reservoirs by the Government—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Delia A. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THAYER: Resolutions of A. B. R. Sprague Post, No. 24, of Grafton, Mass., Grand Army of the Republic, indorsing the bill to establish a Branch Home for Disabled Soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VREELAND: Petition of citizens of Centralia and Mayville, N. Y., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Fred E. Bonsteel and other druggists of Jamestown, Fredonia, and Dunkirk, N. Y., for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Gowanda, N. Y., urging the passage of the Lacey bill for the protection of wild birds and game—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dunkirk, N. Y., urging the enactment of a clause in the Hawaiian constitution forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and a prohibition of gambling and the opium trade—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. WISE: Papers to accompany House bill granting a pension to Thomas Allen, late a private in Company L, Fourth Virginia Infantry, in late Spanish-American war—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: Petition of the League of American Sportsmen, favoring the passage of House bills 6634 and 6062, for the preservation and protection of wild game and perpetuating the American buffalo—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Botanical Society of Pennsylvania, in favor of a national park being made of the Calaveras grove of sequoias, in the State of California—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, letter of H. L. Scott, favoring Government distribution of blackleg vaccine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Lawrence Keohane and Minerva J. Hartzman, of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the passage of House bill No. 4728, relating to leave of absence with pay to certain employees of the Government—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Chicago Federation of Labor, against sundry bills taxing oleomargarine and butterine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Cyrus D. Hottenstein, asking for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ZENOR: Resolutions of Jeffersonville Post, No. 86, and Magnus Brucker Post, No. 234, Grand Army of the Republic, of Jeffersonville, Ind., in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 29, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

LEGATION BUILDING AT BANGKOK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a further dispatch from the minister of the United States at Bangkok, Siam, stating the reason why an appropriation of $2,000 for repairing the legation premises and grounds at that place should be made.

Mr. HALE. That matter has already been acted upon, and I move that the communication and accompanying papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

OLD COURT-HOUSE PROPERTY IN INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect, submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay rent for the remainder of the current fiscal year for the portion of the old court-house and post-office property formerly belonging to the United States in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., $4,000; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INSULAR TARIFF COLLECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, the tariff schedules now in force and effect in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, together with statements showing the amount of revenues collected from tariff duties in Cuba from January 1, 1899, to January 31, 1900, and in the Philippine Islands from date of military occupation to December 31, 1899, etc.

Mr. HALE. Let that communication be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the communication, with the accompanying papers, will be printed. To what particular committee shall the communication be referred?

Mr. HALE. I suppose it should go to the Puerto Rican Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It relates to the tariff in the Philippine Islands and Puerto Rico, as well as Cuba and Guam.

Mr. HALE. Does the communication refer to the tariff duties in all of the different islands?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In all of the islands.

Mr. HALE. Then let it go to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

AGES OF EMPLOYEES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 16th instant, certain information relative to the number of persons employed in the Navy Department and bureaus as clerks, messengers, etc., between certain ages, and the number now on the rolls who are permanently incapacitated, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

TRANSPORT SHIPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 9, 1900, a letter from the Quartermaster-General United States Army, and accompanying statements, relative to the transport ships and other vessels purchased or chartered by the War Department since March 4, 1897, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CLAIMS OF NEZ PERCE INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a decision in relation to the claims of certain Nez Perce Indians for compensation for services claimed to have been rendered by them as scouts, couriers, and messengers under Gen. O. O. Howard in 1877; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 733) concerning the boarding of vessels.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3207) approving a revision and adjustment of certain sales of Otoe and Missouria lands in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 911) to amend section 1176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6627) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Dunkirk, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post exchange, canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prevent the use of trade checks; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of St. Paul,

Minn., praying that an appropriation of $250,000 be made for the reclamation and settlement of arid lands; which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of Blinn Camp, No. 82, Sons of Veterans, of Terre Haute, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to improve the armament of the militia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of M. O'Connor & Co., Severin & Co., Kothe, Wells & Bauer, J. C. Perry & Co., John L. Moore, C. A. Schrader, Schnull & Co., and the Indianapolis Fancy Grocery Company, all of Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, praying for the reorganization of the consular service; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. QUARLES presented a petition of 400 citizens of Whitewater, Wis., remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Oakland, Cal., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and industries; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the passage of the bill to provide against nuisances; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made to continue the work of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying that certain relief be extended to the people of Alaska, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the health department of Oakland, Cal., and a petition of the Merchants' Exchange of Oakland, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the adulteration of foods, drugs, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. KYLE presented the memorial of O. O. Stokes and 76 other citizens of Harding, S. Dak., and the memorial of John Hayes and 150 other citizens of Fort Pierre, S. Dak., remonstrating against the leasing of the public lands for grazing purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Erwin, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens and Government buildings, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Prairie Lodge, No. 170, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Huron, S. Dak., praying that all the remaining public lands be held for the benefit of the whole people, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of C. B. Thompson, and 31 other citizens of Alsen, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound on oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Federation of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the tax on butterine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CLAIMS OF EASTERN CHEROKEES.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By request, I present a memorial of the delegates representing the Cherokee Nation in the city of Washington, remonstrating against the right of the executive committee of the council of the Eastern Cherokees to make a claim for the immediate payment to the Eastern Cherokees of the money found due them, etc. I move that the memorial be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

COTTON INDUSTRY IN CHINA.

Mr. NELSON. I present a statement from John Goodnow, consul-general of the United States at Shanghai, on the cotton industry in China. It is very short, and I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7939) to amend an act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 773) to remove the charge of desertion from Augustus C. Pettengill, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3303) authorizing the Secretary of War to provide condemned cannon and carriages for ornamentation purposes in the national cemetery at Knoxville, Tenn., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2053) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of Joseph McGraw, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7594) granting a pension to Amelia Taylor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8128) to establish light and fog signal at Browns Point, in Puget Sound;

A bill (S. 3639) authorizing the establishment of a light and fog signal on the new breakwater, harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay; and

A bill (S. 3530) to fix the compensation of surfmen employed in the Life-Saving Service of the United States.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase of 10 acres of land in the District of Columbia for a municipal hospital, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3268) granting an increase of pension to James W. Kessler;

A bill (H. R. 493) granting a pension to Fanny M. Hays;

A bill (H. R. 5209) granting an increase of pension to Samuel A. Greeley;

A bill (H. R. 6904) granting an increase of pension to James J. Lyons;

A bill (H. R. 2397) granting a pension to Eliza S. Redfield;

A bill (H. R. 3635) granting an increase of pension to Timothy B. Eastman;

A bill (H. R. 3085) granting an increase of pension to William Sheppard;

A bill (H. R. 2999) granting an increase of pension to George M. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 5110) granting an increase of pension to Edward T. Kennedy;

A bill (H. R. 4828) granting a pension to Susie E. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 240) granting an increase of pension to George W. Wakefield;

A bill (H. R. 5211) granting a pension to Lizzie M. Dixon;

A bill (H. R. 3021) granting a pension to Eliza H. Getchel;

A bill (H. R. 8120) granting an increase of pension to David L. Wentworth;

A bill (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Carrie P. Dale; and

A bill (H. R. 457) granting a pension to Clara L. Harriman.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 24th instant, calling on the Secretary of War for certain information in regard to the soldiers, volunteer and regular, in the Philippine Islands, the number who have been killed and died from wounds since August 1, 1898, etc., reported it with an amendment.

CLERICAL ASSISTANCE FOR COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on yesterday, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be authorized to employ additional clerical assistance in connection with the work of said committee, to continue until the close of the present session of Congress, provided that the aggregate amount so expended shall not exceed $500, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3881) granting an increase of pension to Henry D. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3882) for the relief of Mary E. Parker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 3883) for the relief of the heirs of C. C. Moore, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 3884) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Edwin E. Saunders, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3885) granting an increase of pension to Henry Baker, alias Thomas Jones;

A bill (S. 3886) granting an increase of pension to Edward E. Curran;

A bill (S. 3887) granting a pension to A. F. Shields;

A bill (S. 3888) granting a pension to Charles F. Kimmel;

A bill (S. 3889) granting a pension to John Rhoades; and

A bill (S. 3890) granting an increase of pension to Americus V. Rice.

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (S. 3891) to correct the military record of James Cahoon;

A bill (S. 3892) granting an honorable discharge to W. D. Moore;

A bill (S. 3893) granting an honorable discharge to George W. Hendrixson, alias George Wright;

A bill (S. 3894) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Hiram B. Bell;

A bill (S. 3895) to muster into the volunteer service of the United States John H. Clark; and

A bill (S. 3896) granting an honorable discharge to James A. Smith, deceased.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 3897) to authorize the Chickasaw Nation of Indians to bring suit against the Chickasaw freedmen and the United States in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KENNEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3898) to pension certain soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion;

A bill (S. 3899) granting a pension to James Cook; and

A bill (S. 3900) granting a pension to Sarah Clark.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 3901) providing for allotments of lands in severalty to the Indians of the La Pointe or Bad River Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 3902) to remove the charge of desertion against Michael Hayes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 3903) for the relief of William Fowler, administrator de bonis non of Hickman Fowler, deceased;

A bill (S. 3904) for the relief of the estate of Elisha B. Clapp, deceased;

A bill (S. 3905) for the relief of Mrs. S. F. Prestridge;

A bill (S. 3906) for the relief of the estate of Presley W. Harden, deceased;

A bill (S. 3907) for the relief of Mary N. Westmoreland;

A bill (S. 3908) for the relief of Alfred O. Williamson; and

A bill (S. 3909) for the relief of Matthew N. Grimmett.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 3910) to correct the military record of Samuel J. Coyne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3911) to provide for restoring to national jurisdiction a part of that portion of the original District of Columbia which lies south of the Potomac River for founding a city to be called the city of Lincoln, and for establishing an institution of learning to be known as Washington and Lincoln Memorial University; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 3912) for the relief of Mrs. Mary E. Parker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to present some amendments to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, and ask to have them printed and lie on the table, if that will be sufficient notice under the general-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. PETTUS. And that will operate as notice?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. FORAKER. I give notice that at the proper time I shall propose the amendment which I send to the desk to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes. I ask that the amendment may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 to enable the Secretary of War to purchase the letters patent covering the Isham high-explosive shell and the exclusive and entire right for the United States to manufacture and use the high explosive "thorite," intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $40,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be assembled at the city of Buffalo, in the State of New York, representatives of different Indian tribes, as a part of the Pan-American Exposition, to be held at that city from June 1, 1900, to November 1, 1900, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment which I intend to propose to the Army appropriation bill, and inasmuch as I wish to call the special attention of the Military Committee to the amendment, I desire to make a very short statement.

Under the present law, section 3716 of the Revised Statutes, the Quartermaster-General in obtaining supplies for the military service is required to give preference to articles of American growth, production, and manufacture. I do not wish to change that in any way, but I wish to amend the provision by providing that as between merchants, manufacturers, and producers preference in those purchases shall be given to those merchants, manufacturers, and producers who are not members of any trust or combine.

I move that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

INFORMATION AS TO SICK AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That upon receipt of information by them that any officer, soldier, marine, or seaman in the Army or Navy of the United States has been wounded, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall, from time to time, at the expense of the United States, keep the family of such officer, soldier, marine, or seaman seasonably advised of his condition.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF INQUIRY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I present the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of the minutes, proceedings, and findings of the court of inquiry pursuant to the President's instructions of February 20, 1899, together with the final report of said court of inquiry and the action taken thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PROCTOR. As the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is absent for the moment, I ask that that resolution may lie over until to-morrow, and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will go over and be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 19, 20, 21, 22, 26, 28, 29, 30, 35, 36, 38, 41, 49, 53, 54, 57, 63, 66, and 68.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 23, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, and 76, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the last sum named in the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$4,800;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the word "Ottawa," inserted by said amendment, and strike out lines 19 and 20 on page 11 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Consuls-general at Halifax, Ottawa, and Vienna, at $5,500 each, $16,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$114,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$446,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment, insert the following: "Port Hope (Canada), Orillia (Ontario);" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
S. M. CULLOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ROBERT R. HITT,
ROBERT ADAMS, JR.,
HUGH A. DINSMORE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 911) to amend section 1176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 2882) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts.

BOARDING OF VESSELS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the vote by which the bill (S. 733) concerning the boarding of vessels was passed, which bill has been returned by request from the House of Representatives, be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. HANNA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2092) to incorporate the National Association of Manufacturers, which was favorably reported some time ago from the Committee on Manufactures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio for the present consideration of the bill named by him?

Mr. BERRY. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 470) granting a pension to Jane Dykes;

A bill (H. R. 1763) granting a pension to Ella F. Sydnor;

A bill (H. R. 2597) granting an increase of pension to Charles Kauffung;

A bill (H. R. 3012) granting a pension to Sarah Claggett;

A bill (H. R. 3538) granting an increase of pension to Charles Ross;

A bill (H. R. 5139) for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi;

A bill (H. R. 6700) granting an increase of pension to Maria Andrews; and

A bill (H. R. 6701) granting a pension to Serelda C. McGrew.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 5067) concerning the boarding of vessels; and

A bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 8245, relative to the island of Puerto Rico. In view of the fact that the time has been fixed for taking a vote on the bill, that quite a number of amendments have been proposed by the committee which have not been acted upon, and that a number of Senators, as I understand, wish to speak upon the bill, I hope that the bill will be proceeded with at this time and may continue under consideration until completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. PROCTOR. I desire to say that I have surrendered my place, according to the notice I gave that I would speak to-day on the unfinished business, to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], as he is called out of town by sickness in his family. I now give notice that I shall speak to-morrow, with the leave of the Senate, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] desires now to address the Senate on this bill. I ask the Senator whether he has an amendment that he proposes to offer at this time? The reason I make the inquiry is that we are now considering amendments, and it is the right, I think, under the rules of the Senate, of the committee to have their amendments first disposed of. I have yielded for the accommodation of Senators in two or three instances, and am quite willing to yield for the accommodation of the Senator from Indiana; but I think it is due that I should know whether there is an amendment to which the Senator wishes specifically to speak.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I understand that I offered an amendment to this bill a day or two ago. If that is not sufficient, it will be offered again.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is, of course, germane to the bill and entirely proper to be offered. All I want to know is whether it is to be considered as offered now, so that when the Senator concludes it may be disposed of, as we are disposing of other amendments as we proceed with the debate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I expect that it will be disposed of when the final vote comes, when the time arrives for voting on all of the amendments. I desire to speak on the general subject.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope that we may dispose of these amendments. They must be disposed of at some time. I wish to dispose of them as rapidly as they are offered. I think that is the privilege of the committee. I am disposing of amendments offered by the committee as rapidly as they can be acted upon. I do not want to dispose of them prematurely. If there is any other Senator, after the Senator from Indiana, who shall desire to speak upon this particular amendment, of course it can lie upon the table until he has secured an opportunity to do so. I only wanted to know the parliamentary status of the bill and of the Senator's amendment, so that we may take intelligent action upon it and make progress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be proper for the Chair to state that the unanimous consent given was that at 4 o'clock on Tuesday next a vote should be taken on the bill and upon all amendments of which notice had hitherto been given, and the Chair will hold that the presenting of an amendment, having it printed, and having it on the table is a notice.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. The ruling of the Chair is entirely correct; but it seems to me there should be added that in the meanwhile amendments that are offered may be disposed of. The agreement of the Senate was as to amendments that might be then pending.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to make that very interrogatory. Is it not competent for the Senate to dispose of amendments, if we are prepared to vote on the particular amendments, prior to the time of taking the final vote which we have agreed to take by unanimous consent?

Mr. FORAKER. Such has always been the practice, as I understand, and the committee have a number of amendments upon which we shall ask a vote as we proceed with their consideration. I hope to get all the committee amendments out of the way before 4 o'clock on Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given that the committee amendments should first be acted on.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not have to wait until 4 o'clock next Tuesday before I ask for the vote on them?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly not, nor does any other amendment have to wait until that time.

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is one that possibly several Senators may desire to speak upon before it is finally disposed of. So I hope the Senator from Ohio, in charge of the bill, will not press the immediate consideration of that amendment to the extent of asking for a vote upon it now.

Mr. FORAKER. I stated that I had no desire to do that, but only wanted to know what was the desire of the Senator from Indiana. If he wanted the amendment voted upon, I stated that I should be prepared to take action upon it when he concluded his speech. If any other Senator wishes to speak upon it, then that amendment can lie upon the table until it is the pleasure of the Senate to take it up and dispose of it.

[Mr. BEVERIDGE addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, Senators will remember that on yesterday I asked leave to reprint the bill with a rearrangement of the sections and showing the amendments as they would be proposed by the committee. That reprint is on each Senator's desk. There are a number of amendments which are of a minor character, which, I presume, will not be much discussed, if discussed at all. I will first call attention to those. The first amendment is on page 2 of the reprint, in line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The first amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 3, after the word "which," it is proposed to strike out "was" and insert "were;" so as to read: "which were ceded to the United States by the Government of Spain by treaty," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now propose to amend by striking out, after the word "treaty," in line 4, on page 2, the words "concluded April 11;" and inserting in lieu thereof "entered into on the 10th day of December;" so as to read:

By treaty entered into on the 10th day of December.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, the Secretary will read the proposed amendments in their order as they appear in the reprinted bill.

The Secretary read the next amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico, which was, in line 6, to change the date "1899" to "1898;" so as to read:

Which were ceded to the United States by the Government of Spain by enty entered into on the 10th day of December, 1898.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. PETTUS. Wait one moment, Mr. President. I want to know what is going on.

Mr. FORAKER. I can explain to the Senator from Alabama that, as this bill was originally drafted, it referred to the treaty between the United States and Spain, as "concluded April 11, 1899," and we are changing it so as to read "entered into on the 10th day of December, 1898."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. The Senator from Ohio has changed these things so often that it is almost impossible to follow him. I desire to know what he is doing as he goes along. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. I will take pleasure in helping the Senator to find out if he has any difficulty in doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment; which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Inasmuch as the amendments immediately following, I have no doubt, will be discussed more or less, I ask to have them passed over for the present.

Mr. PETTUS. Why not take them up as they come?

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection, except that there are a good many Senators out just now who were here listening to the speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. They have gone to get their luncheon, I suppose, and if I could accommodate them by taking up some of the minor matters, about which they did not very much care, I thought that would be preferable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments specified by the Senator from Ohio will be passed over unless there be objection. Will the Senator please specify what amendments he desires to have passed over?

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to have passed over all amendments, with a view of returning to them presently, until we come to page 6 of the reprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee on page 6.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, on page 6, line 2, after the word "citizens," it is proposed to insert "of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection."

Mr. MORGAN. What is it proposed to do there?

Mr. BACON. I shall certainly object to that amendment; and if the Senator wants to pass over those amendments which are objected to, he will have to skip that one.

Mr. FORAKER. I will pass over that and others of a kindred nature, if there be no objection. There is another amendment, in line 19, of a formal nature which might be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio had better specify the amendments which he will ask to have acted upon.

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose the Secretary has before him the reprint of the bill, showing the amendment in line 19, on page 6, inserting the word "statutory" before the word "laws."

Mr. BACON. I object to that amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. This method of proceeding——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that we may go back——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. We shall never reach a result with this method of proceeding with the bill. The committee have had opportunity after opportunity to present a bill here for the consideration of the Senate; here is the last reprint of it, and that is supposed to be the bill of the committee. That being so, it is open to amendment from end to end on the motion of any Senator on this floor, and I do not know of any privilege which a committee has got of coming in and picking up the amendments which it has proposed to its own bill, and suggesting that they should be gone over and over again by a vote of the Senate. I do not know of any such thing. I think, under the rule that is applicable to all legislation, this bill is now before the Senate and open to amendment. The question whether the committee have a priority of privilege here in offering amendments is one which may be disputed. Is there unanimous consent that such a course shall be pursued? That is what I wish to ascertain.

Mr. FORAKER. It was unanimous consent that I asked for; but if there is any objection——

Mr. MORGAN. No; I shall not make any objection to unanimous consent. I just want to know what it is. Is there unanimous consent that the committee shall have priority in offering amendments to this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there was an agreement that the amendments reported by the committee should be first considered.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I insist that the committee, therefore, shall take up their amendments, as they are reported on this bill, seriatim, beginning with the first and going on through to the end, and not skip about and waive consideration of some to suit the convenience of Senators. Let Senators attend here. Some of us have to attend in order to keep this machine in motion. Let them attend here or be responsible for the results if they do not do so. I insist that we commence with the first amendment of the committee and go through regularly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be followed, unless otherwise directed.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that order. In what I was doing I was trying to accommodate Senators who would probably dislike to be called from the restaurant when they are at luncheon, and quite a number of them are there now, I understand. But if there is objection to what I have suggested, I am willing to proceed with the amendments in order.

Mr. BACON. I want to suggest——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the Chair to state——

Mr. BACON. It is not to the amendment that I propose to address myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will let the question before the Senate be stated, and then he will be recognized as in order. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 6, after the word "name," it is proposed to strike out "Puerto Rico" and insert "Porto Rico."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it was objected by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that we should proceed irregularly, and I announced that I withdrew that request and would go back and take up the amendments for consideration in the order in which they occur in this reprint. The first amendment, therefore, will be the amendment proposed by the committee to section 2, on page 2, indicated by the italics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be stated.

Mr. BACON. I want to submit a suggestion to the Senator from Alabama, with the permission of the Chair, and that is that this is a bill certainly of the greatest importance, and Senators ought to be present when it is being considered. There are certain formal matters, to which nobody would object, that might be acted upon; and so I hope the Senator will not insist upon our proceeding in order. I think the suggestion is an admirable one as to the general course in which this matter shall be considered; but the amendment which is to be immediately considered now ought to be considered by a full Senate, and, as the Senator knows, a large number of Senators are now taking their usual luncheon. It might be well that action upon important amendments should be postponed until Senators shall have completed that important work.

Mr. MORGAN. I am as hungry as any of them, but I have not the opportunity of taking my lunch without deserting my post of duty at a moment when it is very important that Senators should remain in the Chamber.

The rule of the Senate is that when bills have been read they shall be taken up by sections for amendment, and that is what I insist on. If the amendments are immaterial, then of course they will not be discussed, but if they are material, we will give the gentlemen who are absent from the Chamber an opportunity to get in here and discuss them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 6, after the word "name," it is proposed to strike out "Puerto" and insert "Porto;" so as to read "Porto Rico."

Mr. FORAKER. No; that amendment on page 2 I withdrew, but the amendment I now propose is the amendment indicated on page 2, at the end of section 2, to insert a proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment which has been read by the Secretary withdrawn?

Mr. FORAKER. I withdrew it temporarily, because it was objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand. The next amendment will be stated.

Mr. MORGAN. That amendment is not withdrawn because it is objected to.

Mr. FORAKER. I withdrew it upon the Senator's objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not object to that.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator objected not to the amendment, but to our proceeding irregularly so that I might accommodate Senators who had been detained here to hear the speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and who are now temporarily absent. I was asking the Senate to pass on matters that I did not think there would be any particular debate about before we got to the real matters in controversy.

Mr. MORGAN. That is all right. Now, let us begin with the first section and let us go on regularly and in order.

Mr. FORAKER. We have gone back to the first section, the one the Senator first objected to, and I announced that I would withdraw the amendment. That perhaps was irregular and may have confused Senators who were not familiar with the text of the bill proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment in section 2, on page 2, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 2, line 15, after the word "countries," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That on all coffee in the bean or ground imported into Puerto Rico there shall be levied and collected a duty of 5 cents per pound, any law or part of law to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That all Spanish scientific, literary, and artistic works, not subversive of public order in Puerto Rico, shall be admitted free of duty into Puerto Rico for a period of ten years, reckoning from the 11th day of April, 1899, as provided in said treaty of peace between the United States and Spain: And provided further, That all books and pamphlets printed in the English language shall be admitted into Puerto Rico free of duty when imported from the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I offered an amendment this morning to amend the amendment by striking out the words following "Provided."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In what line?

Mr. PETTUS. Commencing in line 15, on page 2, section 2:

That on all coffee in the bean or ground imported into Puerto Rico there shall be levied and collected a duty of 5 cents per pound, any law or part of law to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Alabama if he calls for a division of the committee's amendment?

Mr. PETTUS. No; I call for action on my own amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To strike out the portion which the Senator has read?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out the first proviso.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that I have had pending for some days an amendment, which was to strike out this entire section and insert in lieu thereof a section which would practically apply to Puerto Rico the same tariff laws that are enforced in the remainder of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I believe the usual custom is to perfect the committee amendment, and then for a Senator to move a substitute.

Mr. BACON. I understand that is the parliamentary rule. Of course the section has to be perfected before a motion to strike out can be entertained. My object in now calling attention to it was to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the purpose he has in view would be better covered by a motion to strike out entirely than by a motion simply to perfect the text.

I want to call attention, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, to the fact that there are radical objections not only to that feature of this section, but to other features of it; and that simply the striking out of the objectionable provision mentioned by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama will not cure all of the defects. I am quite sure the desire of the Senator from Alabama is similar to my own, that there shall be a bill passed here which shall accord to the people of Puerto Rico the enjoyment of the same tariff laws that we enjoy in the other portions of the United States, and if so, not only that particular part of the section, but the entire section, ought to be stricken out; and there should be in lieu thereof inserted such a section as that which I have proposed in my amendment. Of course that is simply a suggestion. If the purpose is to remove from the bill the distinctive features which seek to establish one law for Puerto Rico different from the law that exists in the remainder of the United States, then simply the striking out of the provision does not accomplish that result, but the entire section will have to be stricken out to accomplish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I appreciate what has been said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but I want a distinct vote on the distinct proposition that you can tax by duties merchandise imported into Puerto Rico which is not taxed if imported into this part of the United States or any other part of it. This bill levies a specific tax of 5 cents a pound on coffee imported into Puerto Rico. We have no tariff now in the United States on coffee imported into the United States, and therefore I want a distinct vote on this distinct matter.

The other provisions, if they are objectionable, may go out with the Senator's amendment to strike the whole section out, but I want a vote on the idea that you can not put a tax on goods imported into Puerto Rico when you do not tax the same goods imported into the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator that the amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator that the amendment which I propose to insert in lieu of the one which I propose to strike out does distinctly state that fact, and in the conclusion of the amendment there is this language:

There shall be no duties or imposts levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into Puerto Rico from any part of the United States, and no duties or imposts shall be levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into any part of the United States from Puerto Rico.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not undertake as a layman to argue this much discussed constitutional question, and yet it occurs to me that inasmuch as we have a constitutional right to levy a duty upon coffee coming into the United States, which we do not do, that same constitutional right would enable us to levy a duty upon coffee going into Puerto Rico.

But what I do want to say, Mr. President, is that this proposed amendment of the committee is one of the beneficent features of this bill so far as the Puerto Ricans themselves are concerned. I trust the great newspapers of the country, some of which are indulging in misrepresentations as to the purpose of the Senate in this resolution, will take note of the fact that under the Spanish régime a duty was imposed upon coffee imported into Puerto Rico. The reason of it was that they raise in Puerto Rico a very superior quality of coffee, perhaps the best coffee raised in the world. The Puerto Ricans themselves have asked us to protect them in this matter so that the cheap grades of coffee from other countries and islands may not be sent into Puerto Rico and blended with their superior coffee and sold as Puerto Rican coffee, bringing their coffee into disrepute in the markets of the world. It is a protection to the Puerto Ricans themselves—a protection that they have asked us to give them; and I trust that the motion to strike this provision from the bill will not prevail.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about this matter before it is put to a vote. I recognize, as has been suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], who proposes this amendment to the amendment, that this does raise a very important question. It is an important question in a constitutional sense, and it is an important question in a practical sense, for it is true, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has just said, that this legislation is necessary to protect the principal industry in the island of Puerto Rico, and if we have not constitutional power to do that it will certainly be a very unfortunate thing for the Puerto Ricans.

They have always had a tariff duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico, for the protection of the Puerto Rican coffee, and that for the reason that the coffee raised in Puerto Rico, as the Senator from New Hampshire said, is of very superior quality. There is, perhaps, no better coffee grown in all the world than they grow in Puerto Rico. It is not very familiarly known in this country. Its markets heretofore have been in Europe, and there it commands the highest price, a better price than even Java or Mocha coffee.

Mr. SULLIVAN. What is the present tariff?

Mr. FORAKER. The tariff now on the importation of coffee into Puerto Rico is $12 per hundred kilos, which is, I understand, about 6 cents a pound. The tariff here proposed is less than the tariff that is now in force. That tariff is necessary because in Central America and in South America, particularly in Brazil, they raise cheap and inferior grades of coffee that sell for a much less price in the coffee markets of the world, and without a tariff that industry, which is now in a condition of prostration on account of the hurricane and the general poverty prevailing there, would be ruined.

As those interested in the industry said, if they did not have this protection not only will the industry be thus prejudiced by cheaper coffees coming into Puerto Rico, but another injury will be done that can not very well be estimated, for it is anticipated that if these cheap coffees could be brought in there they would be blended with the superior quality of coffee grown in Puerto Rico and sent out to the world in such way as to destroy the good name which Puerto Rican coffee now enjoys wherever it is known in the markets of the world, just as Puerto Rican tobacco, when there was free trade between Puerto Rico and Cuba, was sent into Cuba, and from there sent elsewhere to other markets of the world as Cuban tobacco in order that for the inferior quality of tobacco grown in Puerto Rico they might get the better price which Cuban tobacco, because of its recognized superior quality, always commanded.

Those who drafted and reported this bill and who are responsible for this amendment have no question but that we have the constitutional power in legislating for Puerto Rico to make the importation of coffee into that island subject to a tariff duty, although under our tariff laws imports of coffee into the United States will be without any duty.

Now, Mr. President, a word as to the other propositions in that proviso.

Mr. PETTUS. That is not embraced in the pending amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. It is true they are not embraced in this question, and I will take occasion to speak of them, if the Senator prefers, after the amendment of the Senator from Alabama is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, if you have a right to impose a tax with a free hand, as insisted by the Senator from Indiana; or, in other words, if you have a right to use a free hand to mutilate the Constitution of the United States, then you can pass this bill; but if the Constitution of the United States means anything when it says taxes and duties shall be uniform, then you have no such right. So the question is directly as to the power of Congress to levy a tax of 5 cents a pound on coffee coming into Puerto Rico, while it lets all coffee come into the United States free of duty.

If the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] were here, I would ask why not put a duty of 100 per cent on fruits coming into California? Why not? You have the same power to do it, sir, that you have to levy any tax on coffee coming into Puerto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. The suggestion of the Senator from Alabama is not hard to answer, and in the absence from the Chamber of the Senator from California, I will undertake to make answer to it, and answer it in a word.

The difference between Puerto Rico and California is that California is a part of the United States, while Puerto Rico is not. Puerto Rico is an outlying dependency, a possession belonging to the United States, with respect to which Congress has power to make all needful rules and regulations, whereas California is in the Union, and the Constitution of the United States is the organic law as to California, as it is as to all the other States in the Union, but not so as to this island. I ask for a vote on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but by an arrangement that pair has been transferred, and that gives me liberty to vote.

Mr. LODGE. My colleague, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is detained from the Senate by circumstances known to Senators, is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY], and that leaves the Senator from Alabama free to vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO].

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. As he has not voted, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. As he has not voted, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNEY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I understand the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I suggest to him that we transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is agreeable, I will say to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. KENNEY. I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. McBRIDE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I will transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. SIMON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I ask if the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has been paired?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No announcement has been made of a pair with that Senator.

Mr. WARREN. It has been suggested to me, and unless there is objection I will act upon it, that I transfer my pair so that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] will stand paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to state that a pair was announced yesterday with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I voted, and I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], if it is agreeable to him, as he is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], to transfer his pair so as to allow us both to vote?

Mr. McLAURIN. That arrangement will be agreeable to me.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I will let my vote stand.

Mr. PETTUS. The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] is paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana, and the Senator from New Jersey has voted.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not see how. I am permanently paired with him, and I protected him yesterday.

Mr. PETTUS. It was done by an arrangement with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He made the suggestion.

Mr. SEWELL. I have no definite knowledge of such a pair.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY] is paired with my colleague [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. BURROWS. I am talking about the senior Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McENERY] is the junior Senator.

Mr. PETTUS. I beg pardon, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I will let my vote stand, and the Senator from South Carolina can vote.

Mr. McLAURIN. I vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN. I announced a moment ago that I was paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I find that after the announcement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] I can transfer my pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] and in that way vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I believe no pair has been announced with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Before the announcement of the vote, I understand that there has been a previous arrangement with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] and therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Bacon,	Culberson,	Kenney,	Pettus,
Bate,	Harris,	Lindsay,	Turley.
Berry,	Heitfeld,	McLaurin,
Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,

NAYS—32.

Baker,	Foraker,	Hawley,	Platt, N. Y.
Bard,	Foster,	Kean,	Quarles,
Burrows,	Frye,	Kyle,	Ross,
Carter,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Clark, Wyo.	Gear,	McBride,	Shoup,
Deboe,	Hale,	McComas,	Spooner,
Elkins,	Hanna,	McMillan,	Warren,
Fairbanks,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Wetmore.

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Nelson,	Taliaferro,
Allen,	Davis,	Penrose,	Teller,
Allison,	Depew,	Pettigrew,	Thurston,
Beveridge,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.	Tillman,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,	Turner,
Caffery,	McCumber,	Proctor,	Vest,
Chandler,	McEnery,	Rawlins,	Wellington,
Chilton,	Mallory,	Scott,	Wolcott.
Clark, Mont.	Martin,	Simon,
Cockrell,	Mason,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Money,	Sullivan,

So Mr. PETTUS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the bill as it is now before the Senate has been so rearranged that matter which was heretofore in section 8 in the former bill is now in sections 2 and 3 of this bill. There is a pending amendment on the part of the committee, and therefore I am in order to move to amend the amendment. I move to strike out all of sections 2 and 3 and insert in lieu thereof the section which I send to the desk.

Mr. President, this is a matter of very considerable importance, and goes to the vital question in the bill. I hope that Senators will give attention to the reading of the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On pages 2 and 3 strike out sections 2 and 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That on and after the date when this act shall take effect there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries into Puerto Rico, which is hereby constituted a customs collection district, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897; and on and after the date when this act shall take effect, organizing and establishing civil government in Puerto Rico, there shall be no duties or imposts levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into Puerto Rico from any part of the United States, and no duties or imposts shall be levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into any part of the United States from Puerto Rico.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the first part of the amendment read again.

Mr. BACON. I ask that there may be order in the Chamber in order that the amendment may be heard by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read Mr. BACON's amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call attention of the Senate to the effect of this amendment.

Sections 2 and 3 of the bill, with the proposed amendments, establish certain rates of duty to be paid upon goods brought from Puerto Rico into any other parts of the United States. I am speaking of the bill now, not of my amendment, and I will repeat what I said, because I think this is a vital matter and Senators should appreciate what is to be voted upon.

My amendment proposes to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the bill and to insert the amendment which has been read; and I want in a few minutes to explain what is the proper operation of that amendment, if it should be adopted. Sections 2 and 3, which take the place of section 8 as it was formerly in the bill, provide a rate of duty between Puerto Rico and the balance of the world. Those two sections provide that upon goods brought from Puerto Rico to the United States a certain rate of duty shall be collected. It further provides that upon certain goods carried from the United States to Puerto Rico there shall be certain duties collected, and there are matters of detail carrying out those two general provisions. But you may state in brief that those are the provisions of these two sections levying and collecting a duty upon goods coming from Puerto Rico to the United States, and levying and collecting a duty upon goods going from the United States to Puerto Rico.

Now, the effect of the amendment which I propose is to strike out those provisions, to annul them, and to apply the Dingley Act to Puerto Rico in the same way it applies to all other parts of the United States. In other words, the proposed amendment says that on and after the passage of this act by which civil government will be organized in Puerto Rico—

There shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries into Puerto Rico, which is hereby constituted a customs collection district, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States"—

Which is the Dingley Act—

approved July 24, 1897.

That is one provision, that that rate of duty shall be collected in Puerto Rico upon all goods imported into Puerto Rico from any foreign country. The other provision of the amendment is this—

And on and after the date when this act shall take effect, organizing and establishing civil government in Puerto Rico, there shall be no duties or imposts levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into Puerto Rico from any part of the United States, and no duties or imposts shall be levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into any part of the United States from Puerto Rico.

I will say, Mr. President, there is the clear issue made. The bill, with the amendments proposed by the committee as found in sections 2 and 3, proposes definitely and distinctly that there shall be certain duties levied and collected upon articles coming from Puerto Rico to the United States, and with equal definiteness and distinctness provides that there shall be certain duties collected upon articles going from the United States into Puerto Rico. That is the bill as proposed to be amended by the committee and as found in sections 2 and 3. The amendment which I submit proposes to strike all of that out, and to insert in lieu thereof a provision that upon all articles going into Puerto Rico from any foreign country the Dingley Act shall be in force and duties shall be levied and collected in accordance with the provisions of the Dingley Act, and, furthermore, that as to all articles coming from Puerto Rico into the United States there shall be no duty, and that as to all articles going from the United States to Puerto Rico there shall be no duty.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the effect of the proposals is an indorsement of the Dingley tariff so far as Puerto Rico is concerned.

Mr. BACON. It is the recognition of the fact that the Dingley tariff is the law of the land. It is not a question of indorsement.

Mr. WARREN. Since the Senator advocates it, I conclude that that carries with it his indorsement of the Dingley Act as to Puerto Rico.

Mr. BACON. The suggestion of the Senator I think is entirely without proper basis. There are a great many things in the Dingley tariff act which the Senator from Wyoming well knows I do not approve; but there is one thing I do approve, and that is that so long as the Dingley tariff is the law of the land it shall apply to all the land, including Puerto Rico, and that whenever it is amended as to Puerto Rico it should also be amended as to Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad to notice that the Senator indorses more of the Dingley Act and indorses it more emphatically than he has done on earlier occasions.

Mr. BACON. I am not to be diverted by that suggestion, and at some other time, when the Senate has leisure and the Senators themselves are prepared to go into a side path, we may follow out the direction which the Senator now indicates. But it is the square question here now on this amendment whether or not the Dingley law shall be considered as applicable to Puerto Rico in the same way that it is applicable to any other part of the territory which we have heretofore called the United States, or whether there shall be the Dingley law applicable to the part of the United States which existed at the time of its passage and not applicable to Puerto Rico. Or, to state it more concisely, it is simply this: Shall there be a tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico on goods coming here, and shall there be a tariff upon goods going from the United States to Puerto Rico? The amendment which I submit provides that there shall be neither. It provides that upon all goods from foreign countries going into Puerto Rico there shall be collected the same rates of duty that are collected upon imports into the United States from any foreign country.

Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate with a discussion of this question.

Mr. SPOONER. The duties collected, of course, are to go into the Treasury just as if they were collected in New York?

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator makes no provision whatever for the temporary support of the government of Puerto Rico.

Mr. BACON. We have done that already in another bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think we have, but you do not do it by your amendment.

Mr. BACON. I do not. I do not want to complicate that question with this one. It is perfectly practical—there is nothing in the amendment that negatives that—after we have settled this question to decide what shall be done with the revenues. We have already passed a bill in which we said that all revenues collected from Puerto Rico shall be devoted to the purposes specified in that bill, not only those which have been collected in the past, but which may be collected in the future, and so far as the temporary purposes are concerned, the amount which will be covered by that bill and which is covered by it would certainly provide for temporary emergencies.

As to other matters of revenue, there is nothing in this amendment which in the slightest degree stands in the way of any other provision which Congress may choose to make as to internal revenue or as to any provision which may be made out of the United States Treasury or as to any provision by which the people of that territory or the people of other Territories may have power to collect taxes.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him for an inquiry?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood him to say that the adoption of his amendment to the amendment, or his amendment which I believe is proposed as a substitute for the whole section, would not stand in the way of such legislation as Congress might see fit to enact with respect to internal-revenue taxation in Puerto Rico or taxation in any other sense. I ask him if it is not true that in his amendment by express provision he says that this provision as to free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States shall be because of the provision of the Constitution, and if he has not referred to the section which requires uniformity of taxation, and if it was not his view and his purpose in proposing this amendment thereby to declare that the Constitution was in force and we were bound by that provision in regard to uniformity of taxation, and if that is not applied to internal as well as tariff taxation?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will study the phraseology carefully, he will find that those words are not in the amendment which was read from the desk.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh. I sent for the amendment. There was a great deal of confusion.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator that the amendment which has been read was originally drafted by me to be proposed to section 8 of the bill as it was formerly framed by the committee. As brought in this morning, sections 2 and 3 practically take the position of section 8, and therefore I have offered it as an amendment, striking out sections 2 and 3 and proposing the insertion of this in lieu thereof. As the amendment was originally drawn by me it did contain the words spoken of by the Senator. It contained these words:

> And on and after the date when this act shall take effect, organizing and establishing civil government in Puerto Rico, there shall be, in accordance with section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, no duties or imposts levied, etc.

Mr. President, I have, in offering the amendment this morning, purposely stricken out those words, not because I had any doubt as to the propriety of the words, but because I wanted it dealt with in as simple a manner as possible, with a view to direct practical results. I still believe that the action, if taken, will be in accordance with that article and section of the Constitution, but it is not necessary for Senators who may differ on that point to refuse to vote for an amendment where that is not expressed in it. The amendment as offered this morning has not that expression in it. It is simply the plain provision of statutory law that after the organization of civil government under this act there shall be no duties collected on articles coming from Puerto Rico into the United States, and that there shall after that time be no duties collected upon articles going from the United States into Puerto Rico.

I realize the fact, Mr. President, that if the amendment offered this morning had the same phraseology as the amendment which was offered by me several days ago, there might be Senators who would be willing to vote for it as an abstract proposition who would not be willing to commit themselves to the constitutional proposition which would be contained in it if those words were in it. Therefore, in recasting the amendment this morning, and offering it to sections 2 and 3, I purposely struck out the words; and the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, therefore, does not apply to anything contained in the present amendment.

Mr. President, as I was about to say when interrupted, I do not propose to discuss it, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this amendment brings up the square issue, Shall Puerto Rico have levied and collected at her ports a duty upon articles going from the United States into Puerto Rico, and shall there be levied and collected duties upon articles coming from Puerto Rico into the United States, or shall there be, as provided in this amendment, the application of the Dingley law as to Puerto Rico in the same way and to the same extent as, and in no other way and to no other extent than is applicable to the United States? I say it is as square an issue as can be made, and therefore I hope it may be voted upon with recognition of that fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I do not intend at any time during this debate to speak at any considerable length on this subject, which perhaps I might properly do, being a member of the committee which considered the bill, I wish to speak briefly on the proposed amendment. Before coming to a discussion of the propositions embraced in the amendment submitted by my friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], I will put into the RECORD two or three opinions as to our absolute right to impose the kind of legislation upon Puerto Rico which we are proposing to do in the bill now under consideration, after which I will endeavor to demonstrate the fact that the proposed legislation is wise and for the best interests of the people of the island.

The lawyers of the Senate have discussed the constitutional question pro and con, and I presume that both sides have satisfied themselves that they have made out a case. However that may be, I want to cite two or three opinions that have attracted my attention and have led me to believe that we are acting entirely within the limits and provisions of the Constitution in imposing tariff duties upon Puerto Rico. The first opinion I want to place in the RECORD is that rendered by Mr. Justice Bradley in the well-known and much-discussed case of The Mormon Church vs. United States (136 U. S., page 42). I will read it:

> The power of Congress over the Territories of the United States is general and plenary, arising from and incidental to the right to acquire the territory itself and from the power given by the Constitution to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States. It would be absurd to hold that the United States has power to acquire territory and no power to govern it when acquired. The power to acquire territory * * * is derived from the treaty-making power and the power to declare and carry on war. The incidents of these powers are those of national sovereignty, and belong to all independent governments. The power to make acquisitions of territory, by treaty and by cession, is an incident of national sovereignty. The Territory of Louisiana, when acquired from France, and the Territories west of the Rocky Mountains, when acquired from Mexico, became the absolute property and domain of the United States, subject to such conditions as the Government, in its diplomatic negotiations, has seen fit to accept relating to the rights of the people then inhabiting those Territories. Having rightfully acquired said Territories, the United States Government was the only one which could impose laws upon them, and its sovereignty over them was complete. No State of the Union had any such right of sovereignty over them; no other country or government had any such right. These propositions are so elementary and so necessarily follow from the condition of things arising upon the acquisition of new territory that they need no argument to support them.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator a question simply for information. Is not that opinion from Justice Bradley a dissenting opinion?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it is not a dissenting opinion. I do not understand that it is.

Mr. FORAKER. It is the opinion of the court.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the opinion of the court as delivered by Mr. Justice Bradley.

The next case is that of Brenner vs. Porter, which is to be found in 9 Howard, 242. Mr. Justice Nelson, in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, tersely said:

> They (speaking of Territories) are not organized under the Constitution nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government, as the organic law, but are the creations, exclusively, of the legislative department and subject to its supervision and control.

I also desire to put into the RECORD what is, perhaps, the latest judicial expression on this subject that has been made in this country. It was made only one year ago by Mr. Justice Morrow, whom many of us know, a distinguished judge in the Ninth district, who delivered the opinion of the court (I think there was no dissenting opinion) after having reexamined all of the authorities. It is manifest from the entire opinion, if the Senator from Alabama will take the trouble to read it, that Mr. Justice Morrow had gone all over this question carefully, and he delivered the unanimous opinion of the court in the following plain and unequivocal language:

> The answer to these and other like objections urged in the brief of counsel for defendant is found in the now well-established doctrine that the Territories of the United States are entirely subject to the legislative authority of Congress. They are not organized under the Constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government as the organic law, but are the creation exclusively of the legislative department and subject to its supervision and control. (Benner vs. Porter, 9 How., 235, 242.) The United States, having rightfully acquired the territory, and being the only Government that can impose laws upon them, has the entire dominion and sovereignty, national and municipal, Federal and State. (Insurance Co. vs. Canter, 1 Pet., 511, 542; Cross vs. Harrison, 16 How., 164; National Bank vs. Yankton Co., 101 U. S., 129, 133; Murphy vs. Ramsey, 114 U. S., 15, 44, 5 Sup. Ct., 747; Late Corporation of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints vs. U. S., 181, 11 Sup. Ct., 949; Shively vs. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 48, 14, Sup. Ct., 548.) * * * It may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality, and vary its regulations to meet the conditions and circumstances of the people. Whether the subject elsewhere would be a matter of local police regulation or within State control under some other power it is immaterial to consider. In a Territory all the functions of government are within the legislative jurisdiction of Congress, and may be exercised through a local government or directly by such legislation as we have now under consideration. (Endleman vs. United States, 86 Fed. Rep., 456.)

Turning to the treaty of peace between the Kingdom of Spain and the United States, under which Puerto Rico became the property of the United States, it is important that we do not lose sight of the fact that the treaty provides that "the civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress."

Mr. President, I am not a lawyer, and of course would not undertake to argue legal questions with any lawyer in this body, whether he is eminently learned or not so learned, but I read language with a view of grasping its evident intent and meaning; and it does seem to me that the position that a portion of the lawyers of the Senate have taken, that we have absolute legislative control over Puerto Rico and over the Philippine Islands, is incontrovertible, and that we can safely proceed upon the assumption that that position is unanswerable.

Assuming that to be so, I turn to the bill, and what does the bill provide? And what does the amendment of my friend the Senator from Georgia provide? In the first place, the bill provides, in the section which the Senator from Georgia proposes to strike out, that we shall protect the Puerto Ricans by imposing a duty of 5 cents a pound upon coffee going into that country, and I have heretofore explained why the committee thought that was a wise thing to do.

We furthermore, in section 2, propose—

That all Spanish scientific, literary, and artistic works, not subversive of public order in Puerto Rico—

I believe that is the language of the treaty, is it not, I will ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]?

Mr. FORAKER. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It proceeds—shall be admitted free of duty into Puerto Rico for a period of ten years.

And—

That all books and pamphlets printed in the English language shall be admitted into Puerto Rico free of duty when imported from the United States.

In other words, we are giving those people, in whom we have so deep an interest, and in whom our Democratic friends especially pretend to have such an overwhelming interest, the advantage of a duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico, and we give them books printed in the Spanish language, not subversive of public order, as well as books printed in the English language, free of duty.

Then, when we come to section 3, we provide the revenue that was contained in the bill that came here from the House of Representatives, which is 15 per cent, and which has excited so much interest, and concerning which so much false sympathy and unjustifiable misrepresentation have been indulged in in certain sections of our country. We do not impose the full Dingley rates upon these people, as the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia proposes to do. We simply impose a rate of 15 per cent, and whether that is a revenue or a protective duty I will not stop to argue.

We furthermore provide that after that money has been collected it shall be kept as a separate fund, and under the direction of the President of the United States shall be used for the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico. Not one dollar of it is to go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia proposes to strike out those sections. He is going to deprive the Puerto Ricans of this duty upon coffee imported into the island. He is going to deprive them of the right of having, free of duty, books printed in the Spanish language, which the treaty provided they should have, and he is going to deprive them of books printed in the English language, free of duty, exported from the United States, and then he is going, in addition, to impose upon those poor people the full Dingley rate upon products imported into their country, not from the United States, but from foreign countries. That money is to go into the Treasury of the United States, to be used for the benefit of the people of the United States, and no part whatever of that money is to be applied to the people of the island.

I submit, Mr. President, that so far as the people and the interests of Puerto Rico are concerned—of course I understand the Senator from Georgia is raising a constitutional question here——

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. And very likely he wants to have a vote on the proposition whether we have a right to impose these duties that we have imposed under this bill. Of course the Senator will not deny that he wants that question adjudicated before the question upon the final passage of this bill is reached.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is not exactly stating me correctly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. On the contrary, the amendment which has been offered to the bill, as it was previously framed did have the constitutional question in it. In order that it might be eliminated, that it might be taken care of at some other time, if practicable, and that Senators, regardless of the constitutional question, might pass upon the naked question whether or not there should be free trade between Puerto Rico and the remainder of the United States, I eliminated it and it is not in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, in passing upon the provisions that are now found in the bill, that question does arise. I submit, and it is all I care to say at this time, that the bill as it stands to-day is infinitely more liberal toward the people of Puerto Rico than the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia. The provisions of the bill will do infinitely more to relieve the distress and the suffering that exist in that island than can possibly result from the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

In conclusion, I wish to emphasize the fact that whatever individual Senators may say or do, the committee, which for three long weeks patiently listened in a close and uncomfortable committee room to a long hearing upon the subject of Puerto Rico, had only one object in view, and that was to legislate for the best interest of that people, and in such way as to relieve the distress and suffering that everybody who was before us testified existed in the island. The committee certainly have no disposition in any way to oppress those people or to wrong them, but, on the contrary, we want to lift them as speedily as possible from the suffering and the sorrow that are upon them and place them in a position of independence, of happiness and contentment.

Mr. President, in view of that fact, having gone over this matter with great care and deliberation, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], having this purpose and this purpose alone in view, I do sincerely hope that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia may not be agreed to, and that the bill, so far as the sections under discussion are concerned, may be agreed to without any change whatever.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I do not feel that I am subject to the criticism of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I have not insisted that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States. I have not insisted that the Constitution now applies to Puerto Rico or that in legislating for Puerto Rico we are bound in all respects to conform to all the limitations of the Constitution; and I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be so perfected that when the Senate comes to vote upon it no Senator shall be constrained to vote against it because in any degree or to any extent it undertakes directly or by inference to settle the vexed question of our power to legislate in regard to Puerto Rico. Fearing that the amendment he proposes may give some Senator an excuse to vote against it upon the idea that it does express an opinion one way or the other, I shall ask him to accept an amendment to his amendment which will certainly take out of the amendment anything that looks to the expression of an opinion one way or the other.

I shall do this for the purpose of affording the Senate an opportunity to vote upon the question of free trade between the people of Puerto Rico and the people of the United States, and I shall do it because it is an American island. I shall do this because these people, whether in or out of the Union, are American people, and I shall do this because without its being done we will not keep the pledge we made to these people when they accepted the authority of the United States and disclaimed any further allegiance to Spain. I shall do this to keep the pledge made by General Miles when he occupied this island. I shall do it because it is just in itself as recognized by the military governor of Puerto Rico, recognized by the Secretary of War, and as recognized by the President of the United States when he said to Congress that it was our plain duty to establish free trade between the people of the United States and the people of Puerto Rico, and when he explained that he had forborne to do it himself because he had no power to suspend the operation of the Dingley tariff act as to goods brought into the collection districts of the United States.

I shall ask the Senator from Georgia so to amend his amendment as to strike out all after the word "ninety-seven," in line 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And on and after the passage of this act trade between the customs collection district hereby established for the island of Puerto Rico and the customs collection districts of the United States, now in existence or which may hereafter be established, shall be free from all import or tariff duties, and all laws or parts of laws now or heretofore requiring or authorizing the collection of import or tariff duties on articles of commerce between any of the customs collection districts herein named are to that extent hereby repealed.

Mr. BACON. With the consent of the Senate, I will accept that amendment and let it stand as the original amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the amendment as modified may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia modifies his amendment as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 12, after the date "1897," it is proposed to strike out:

And on and after the date when this act shall take effect, organizing and establishing civil government in Puerto Rico, there shall, in accordance with section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, be no duties or imposts levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into Puerto Rico from any part of the United States, and no duties or imposts shall be levied, collected, or paid upon any articles imported into any part of the United States from Puerto Rico.

And to insert:

And on and after the passage of this act trade between the customs collection district hereby established for the island of Puerto Rico, and the customs collection districts of the United States now in existence or which may hereafter be established shall be free from all import or tariff duties, and all laws or parts of laws now or heretofore requiring or authorizing the collection of import or tariff duties on articles of commerce between any of the customs collection districts herein named are to that extent hereby repealed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry in order that I may get the precise parliamentary status. The Senate had under consideration an amendment proposed by the committee to section 2. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] moved to amend that amendment by striking out the first proviso. That proposition to amend did not prevail. Thereupon the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] offered an amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee, which was to substitute what he proposed for the entire section. Now, what is it that the amendment as it has just been changed is proposed to take the place of?

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] asked me to accept an amendment to the amendment offered by me, to take the place of the last clause of my amendment. In other words, if the Senator has my amendment before him——

Mr. FORAKER. I have it before me.

Mr. BACON. The proposition of the Senator from Kentucky is to strike out all after the date "1897," on page 12.

Mr. FORAKER. I am familiar with that, but what I wanted to know was what is it that is offered in lieu of that—the whole of sections 2 and 3?

Mr. LINDSAY. Sections 2 and 3.

Mr. BACON. Sections 2 and 3. I suggest to the Secretary, as stated by the Senator from Kentucky, to read the entire amendment as it will appear after the acceptance of his amendment by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment, as requested by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FORAKER. In answer to the Senator's inquiry, I will say that we were proceeding to perfect the bill in accordance with the amendments proposed by the committee in so far as they might prevail. It seems to me that the amendment now offered ought not to be offered until after the amendment proposed by the committee shall have been acted on. Then the Senator can move to strike out sections 2 and 3, as the Senate may agree upon them after the amendments have been acted upon. It is a little irregular now to move to strike out those sections, because they have not been perfected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has the undoubted right to offer any amendment which he wishes, and the Senator from Ohio has the undoubted right to perfect the two sections before final action on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I not right in the suggestion that if those amendments should be adopted, they would not then be amendable until the bill came into the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; it would be in order to move to strike out the entire section.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that now, beyond question, is the proper time to move to strike out the sections, if it is to be done as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, it seems to me there ought not to be a motion to strike out the sections until after they have been perfected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree to that.

Mr. FORAKER. As soon as they are perfected the Senator from Georgia can offer his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of sections 2 and 3 it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 2. That on and after the date when this act shall take effect there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries into Puerto Rico, which is hereby constituted a customs collection district, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897; and on and after the passage of this act trade between the customs collection district hereby established for the island of Puerto Rico and the customs collection districts of the United States now in existence or which may hereafter be established shall be free from all import or tariff duties, and all laws or parts of laws now or heretofore requiring or authorizing the collection of import or tariff duties on articles of commerce between any of the customs collection districts herein named are to that extent hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], on behalf of the committee, to section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the committee to section 3; which will be stated.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, there is an amendment proposed by me to that section which I suppose, under the ruling of the Chair, will have to wait until the committee amendments are acted upon. I have already proposed an amendment to strike out of that section down to the word "countries," in line 9; that is to isolate the question as to the tariff duties on goods from Puerto Rico to the United States and from the United States to Puerto Rico and make it a question in itself without any other question connected with it. I want that acted on at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been printed?

Mr. PETTUS. It has been presented, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORAKER. I presume that will come up after the committee amendments have been acted upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator desires to amend the proposed amendment of the committee, it is entirely in order.

Mr. PETTUS. What I propose is not an amendment to the committee amendment; it is an amendment of the original text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment proposed by the committee to section 3; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, section 3, after the end of line 1, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That on and after the date when this act shall take effect all merchandise and articles, except coffee, not dutiable under the tariff laws of the United States, and all merchandise and articles entered in Puerto Rico free of duty under orders heretofore made by the Secretary of War, shall be admitted into the several ports thereof, when imported from the United States, free of duty, all laws or parts of laws to the contrary notwithstanding; and whenever the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Puerto Rico, by this act established, and shall by resolution duly passed so notify the President, he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereupon all tariff duties on merchandise and articles going into Puerto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Puerto Rico shall cease, and from and after such date all such merchandise and articles shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty; and in no event shall any such duties be collected after the 1st day of March, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Alabama proposed an amendment to the committee amendment which has just been stated?

Mr. PETTUS. I have not; but my amendment was presented in the Senate this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not yet been printed?

Mr. PETTUS. It has not yet been printed, I suppose; but it was presented to the Senate this morning. It is simply to strike out all of section 3, on page 3, from the beginning down to the word "countries," in line 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be entirely in order after the committee amendment shall have been acted upon.

Mr. PETTUS. This is not an amendment to the committee amendment at all, Mr. President. It is an amendment to the original text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That, then, will be in order at any time.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments by the committee to sections 2 and 3.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no further amendments to offer to those sections on behalf of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg to say that under the amendment which has just been adopted—and I am gratified that it was adopted—the free list—and the Senator from Ohio will correct me if I make a misstatement—which the President of the United States has by Executive order made for Puerto Rico, which includes breadstuffs, and perhaps the Senator from Ohio can tell what other articles, is enacted into law, and that that free list, if this bill shall become a law, will apply to the people of Puerto Rico, giving them free trade in many of the necessaries of life.

Mr. FORAKER. It very largely increases the free list of the Dingley law. The free list, made by Executive order, does not correspond exactly with the free list of the Dingley law. It extends to flour, rice, corn meal, fish, and other articles known as food stuffs, and the like, that will go into Puerto Rico under this provision free of duty; and only such articles as are not embraced in the free list of the Dingley law, or in some Executive order, will pay the 15 per cent going into Puerto Rico.

Now, in answer to the inquiry of the Chair, the committee has no further amendments to offer to sections 2 and 3; but we have amendments to offer to section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama would be in order as affecting section 3.

Mr. BACON. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama is an amendment to that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to that section, as the Chair understands.

Mr. PETTUS. It is an amendment to section 3.

Mr. BACON. And because it is an amendment to section 3 the amendment I have moved would be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be clearly in order as soon as these two sections are perfected so far as the Senate desires to perfect them.

Mr. BACON. That is the reason I made the inquiry as to whether the amendment of the Senator from Alabama was directed to section 3.

Mr. PETTUS. I now desire that the Secretary shall report to the Senate the exact amendment proposed—what I propose to strike out—so that Senators may see that it applies to nothing in the world but the tariff on goods going from the United States into Puerto Rico and the tariff on goods coming from Puerto Rico into the United States. It includes that idea and nothing else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The SECRETARY. On page 3, section 3, beginning in line 3, it is proposed to strike out:

That on and after the passage of this act all merchandise coming into the United States from Puerto Rico and coming into Puerto Rico from the United States shall be entered at the several ports of entry upon payment of 15 per cent of the duties which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles of merchandise imported from foreign countries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I understand that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is absent and not paired. I will take the liberty of transferring my pair to him and of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). Under the arrangement entered into this morning I transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but on this question he authorized me to vote, saying that he would vote against any of these tariffs between Puerto Rico and the United States. Therefore, independently of any arrangement that was suggested by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] this morning, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. HOAR] yesterday, upon leaving town, directed me to say that he would vote for any free-trade amendment and against the passage of the bill if it did not contain a free-trade amendment. He asked me to release the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] from his pair and to find him another pair, which I have done, and my colleague now stands paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] on all these questions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am authorized by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] to pair him, and he stands paired, under the announcement made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I propose to transfer that pair, so that he will stand paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I should like to inquire whether the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I should like to inquire further if Senators upon the other side have any idea as to how the Senator from North Carolina, if present, would vote upon this question?

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite satisfied that the Senator from North Carolina, if present, would vote "yea" on this proposition.

Mr. WELLINGTON. That being the case, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANNA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], which I transfer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCBRIDE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired generally with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE. My colleague [Mr. SIMON] if present would vote "yea." I announce his pair, as stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], who has charge of the pairs, with the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], who if present would vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT. My colleague [Mr. ELKINS] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON]. My colleague would vote "nay," if present.

Mr. PLATT of New York (after voting in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] and inquire if he has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] is absent by reason of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Texas were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I ask if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Then I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea," if at liberty to vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Montana that he transfer his pair with the Senator from Indiana to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent without a pair.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I shall be very glad to do that. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bacon,	Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Kenney,	Sullivan,
Berry,	Culberson,	Lindsay,	Turley,
Clark, Mont.	Harris,	Morgan,	Wellington.

NAYS—33.

Allison,	Foraker,	Kean,	Scott,
Baker,	Foster,	Kyle,	Sewell,
Bard,	Frye,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Carter,	Gallinger,	McBride,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Gear,	McComas,	Warren,
Clark, Wyo.	Hale,	McMillan,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Hanna,	Perkins,
Deboe,	Hansbrough,	Quarles,
Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Ross,

NOT VOTING—38.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	Money,	Stewart,
Allen,	Heitfeld,	Nelson,	Taliaferro,
Beveridge,	Hoar,	Penrose,	Teller,
Burrows,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Thurston,
Butler,	McCumber,	Platt, Conn.	Tillman,
Caffery,	McEnery,	Platt, N. Y.	Turner,
Chilton,	McLaurin,	Pritchard,	Vest,
Daniel,	Mallory,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Martin,	Rawlins,
Depew,	Mason,	Simon,

So the amendment of Mr. PETTUS was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Several Senators on this side of the Chamber have requested that this amendment be not acted on to-day, but that it be allowed to go over until to-morrow without losing its place. I have consulted with the Senator from Ohio and he is willing that it may be done, in order that the amendment as it has been amended may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Georgia that his amendment shall go over until to-morrow. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask consideration of the amendment proposed by the committee to section 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 5, section 4, insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate the several ports and subports of entry in Puerto Rico and shall make such rules and regulations and appoint such agents as may be necessary to collect the duties and taxes authorized to be levied, collected, and paid in Puerto Rico by the provisions of this act, and he shall fix the compensation and provide for the payment thereof of all such officers, agents, and assistants as he may find it necessary to employ to carry out the provisions thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that there may be added to that amendment the following as an addition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment just adopted insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That as soon as a civil government for Puerto Rico shall have been organized in accordance with the provisions of this act and notice thereof shall have been given to the President he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereafter all collections of duties and taxes in Puerto Rico under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the treasury of Puerto Rico, to be expended as required by law for the government and benefit thereof instead of being paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I introduced this morning a substitute for section 5, which the committee propose to strike out. It is section 33 of the Dingley law. The amendment as I sent it to the desk this morning has been sent to the Public Printer, and therefore I will ask to read it from the Dingley law with just such variations, which are very slight, as are necessary to make it applicable to this bill.

I propose the following as a substitute for section 5, which I move to strike out; that is, I move to strike out section 5 and to insert the following as section 5:

That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported from Puerto Rico, for which no entry has been made, and all goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by this act and to no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof: Provided, That when duties are based upon the weight of merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse, said duties shall be levied and collected upon the weight of such merchandise at the time of its entry.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope the Senator will briefly explain that amendment. I have not seen it.

Mr. FORAKER. I will take pleasure in doing so. I am looking for a letter I received this morning, if I can find it; but I can explain it without the letter. I do not find it just at the moment, but the information has come to me by various letters which I have received that the people in Puerto Rico, many of them, becoming impatient about our action, have shipped goods to the United States, some of which are now on the sea, while some have been entered in bond, the idea being in shipping them here now that they would put them in bond in anticipation of our action until we legislate, and then they would be taken out of the bonded warehouse.

The purpose of it is to make the same duty applicable to goods that are now on the way here, and goods that may be received before this measure becomes a law, or which have already been received and may be now in bonded warehouses, that will apply to goods that will be shipped from Puerto Rico and be entered here after the law goes into effect; in other words, they would thus pay only 15 per cent instead of the full Dingley rates. I believe in every tariff act that we have enacted there has been a similar provision, that goods entered in bonded warehouses without the payment of duty before the act takes effect shall, when taken out after the act takes effect, pay only the duties provided by the act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Ohio will please follow the amendment as read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 14, strike out section 5 and insert:

That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported from Puerto Rico for which no entry has been made, and all goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by this act and to no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof: Provided, That when duties are based upon the weight of merchandise deposited in any public or private bonded warehouse, said duties shall be levied and collected upon the weight of such merchandise at the time of its entry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I now propose to amend by inserting on page 6, line 2, after the word "citizens," the following: "of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection."

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator wants to change the numbering of the sections, but I presume the clerks will do that.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought that later I would ask that the numbering be changed to correspond with such changes as may be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator do with section 5, "that the capital of Puerto Rico shall be in the city of San Juan, etc.?"

Mr. FORAKER. That is the committee amendment. I beg pardon. Let it be acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 5. That the capital of Puerto Rico shall be at the city of San Juan and the seat of government shall be maintained there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment to section 5?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. We are now acting on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it was section 5, the former amendment. Now comes the amendment to section 6.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment to section 6 will now be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment to section 6.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 23, insert:

SEC. 6. That all inhabitants continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in Puerto Rico, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain on or before the 11th day of April, 1900, in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on the 11th day of April, 1899; and they, together with such other citizens of the United States as may reside in Puerto Rico, shall constitute a body politic under the name of The People of Puerto Rico, with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred, and with power to sue and be sued as such.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to amend, on page 6, line 2, by inserting, after the word "citizens," the words "of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection."

Mr. MORGAN and Mr. BACON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, two of us were on the floor objecting to the amendment when the Chair was putting the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is still open.

Mr. BACON. I only take the liberty of speaking because the Senator from Alabama did not make himself heard. I want also, however, to address the Senate upon the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States provides, in Article XIV of the amendments:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

The Supreme Court has passed upon that very recently, and they have held that a child of Chinese parents born in the United States is a citizen of the United States. I forget exactly where that child was born—whether it was in a Territory or in a State.

Mr. FORAKER. It was born in California.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; it was born in California. They have upheld, in other words, the provisions of the Constitution of the United States as to those persons who come into existence here of parentage, neither of whose parents is a citizen of the United States. It seems to me that that decision and that clause of the Constitution are violated by the proposed amendment now presented by the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. You mean as to the children?

Mr. MORGAN. As to the children and as to the persons; certainly as to the children, because the children who are born in Puerto Rico after the date of the passage of this bill are at least born so much within the United States as to be citizens of the United States thereof, for we extend the laws of the United States over that country, many of them specifically, and in a provision here nearly all of them generally. So we are excluding now by an act of Congress those people from citizenship hereafter to be born in Puerto Rico who are made citizens of the United States by the Constitution.

Now, there can not be any sound reason, Mr. President, in party politics for going around the Constitution in this absurd way. We had better come up to our duty and recognize these people, as the Constitution of the United States recognizes them, as being citizens of the United States by the decree of the supreme power of the land. I have never in my life seen, nor has anybody else ever seen, so much twisting and turning for the purpose of finding some opportunity to get this bill through without recognizing the authority of the Constitution of the United States in a territory that we have acquired in sovereignty by a treaty with a foreign power; and it is not proper, it is not meet or becoming, that the Senate of the United States should treat the Constitution of our country in such a light, frivolous, and improper way.

But the text of the amendment itself contains a most objectionable feature. The text of the proposed amendment now is that they shall be held to be citizens of Puerto Rico. Citizens of Puerto Rico! What is Puerto Rico? Whether it is a part of the United States or whether it is a dependency, it can not have a citizenship separate from the citizenship of the United States unless it is really an independent sovereign power, and that is more particularly emphasized in the following part of the same amendment:

And as such entitled to the protection of the United States.

Citizens of Puerto Rico, a separate government, entitled to the protection of the United States! Are we going in there as intruders to give our protection to a country over which we refuse to recognize the fact that we exercise dominion enough to make their people citizens of the United States? Now, is this intended to give protection to the citizens of Puerto Rico or is it intended to give protection to Puerto Rico itself as a political entity?

What is a government, Mr. President, but the people who occupy it? It is not the houses and the land and the ocean that surrounds that island that makes a government. If there were no people there, there would be no government there. When there are people there and they are spoken of in this aggregated sense as citizens of Puerto Rico, the government that we recognize there is a government of, by, and through the citizens of Puerto Rico as a body politic. Therefore the effect of this arrangement, whatever may be its purpose, is to give protection to Puerto Rico as a separate political entity, as a foreign power, as a power under our protection. That is what it means. That is what it means in the law. That is what everybody is obliged to understand that it means by the simple reading of the text.

Now, a government can not be protected by another government that has no sovereignty. The idea of protection in all diplomatic usage and in the laws of nations always implies that the party that is protected is a sovereign power, but is suzerain, under the subjection of the other government to a certain extent; and whenever we undertake to give to the citizens of Puerto Rico, individually or as a body or as a body politic, protection, we at once recognize their independence, their separation from us, their autonomous condition, their right of local self-government.

In what respect are we going to protect these people and against whom are we going to protect them? Protect them against themselves? Protect them so as to give them the benefits of the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the United States? Protect them against their own government, their own people, or against foreign powers? What is meant by the protection that is furnished in this amendment over the people of Puerto Rico? Who will give it a legal definition? Who will undertake to say what the Government of the United States pledges itself to here when we solemnly assert and avow that we intend to give to the people of Puerto Rico protection? It can not have any other meaning than that we give them protection against foreign powers or against some emeute or insurrection or turbulence that may occur within the limits of their island, within the power of that government.

We give protection to our people here, not with armies and not with acts of Congress simply, but we give them judicial protection. We have in times of peace, when a state of war is not existing in any part of the United States or any of its dependencies, no power to give protection to the citizenship except to the agencies of the law executed by the police or military power of the Government of the United States, or executed by the judgment of its courts.

Now, what protection is it that we are promising to these people? Is it something, Mr. President, that is to be of no value, undefinable? Will the Senator from Ohio define before the Senate of the United States the character of the protection he proposes to give to the people of Puerto Rico under this act and the agency through which that protection is to be extended? Unless that can be done this is a vain and empty declaration. It is something that ought not to be in the bill. It is an attempt to meet the argument that some man suggests on this floor, that after all he does not want the people of Puerto Rico to be citizens of the United States, or that they are not such, or that they shall be prevented from becoming such by an act of Congress; that is all.

Now, unless the Senator from Ohio or this committee can explain to the Senate what is meant by the protection they propose to give, then, Mr. President, we are engaging here in a vain endeavor to do something that we ourselves can not state what it is. We are not driven to these extremities by any emergency or exigency of legislation or politics here to-day. We had very much better take these people in hand as we have taken in hand our relations to all the other people we have ever annexed to the United States, and treat them as all those people have been treated—as citizens of the United States.

We made an engagement of that kind in regard to every country that we have annexed, even in regard to Russians in Alaska. All the people, including the Indians, the Kamchatkans, or whoever they may be up in that region in Alaska, are made citizens of the United States. So they were in Florida; so they were in the Louisiana territority; so in Texas; so in Mexico, and so in Hawaii. We take the whole body, black and white, red and yellow, rich and poor, into the bosom of the citizenship of the United States, and no one has ever heard yet of any difficulty or trouble coming to the United States on that account. There is no reason why we should not do it. But there is every reason why we should not abandon the principles of the Government of the United States and create in Puerto Rico a separate autonomous government under our protection.

Why, Mr. President, a government under our protection is not an autonomous government; it is not a government republican in form. A government republican in form is one that has the right of local self-government to whatever extent the sovereign power chooses to confer it. We are pledged in the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution that we will give to every State in the American Union a government republican in form. Now, can a government be republican in form that stands outside of the American Union, or that stands within the range simply of its protection? No, sir. There is no protectorate provided for in our Constitution. Our Constitution in the initiation of it founded, as I had occasion to remark in the Senate a few days ago, the great Northwestern Territory, now comprising four great States, in a state of organization as a Territorial government under the articles of confederation. The Congress of the United States in one of the very first acts that it passed took up the Northwestern Territory and continued that government, and that government made the people of the Northwestern Territory citizens of the United States. Even the Indian tribes were made citizens of the United States.

By that I mean, Mr. President, they were given the right to the protection of our flag, the right when they came to be tried by civil tribunals to trial by jury, the right to be taxed equally with other people, because in the basis of representation we expressly refer to Indians that are not taxed and exclude them, and only them, from the basis of representation. When they are taxed, then what are they? Does a tax change the citizenship? No, sir. They are citizens of the United States in that broad and general and magnanimous idea which conveys over them all of the benefits of the protection of the Constitution and laws of the United States administered under the Constitution and in accordance with it.

These people can not have protection given to them by the Government of the United States as an emperor would give to his subjects and dole it out to them without reference to the organic law which controls its action. When we come to protect these people in the island of Puerto Rico, are we to protect them free from the restraints of the Constitution? Are we to give them some kind of protection not known to the Constitution? Where will this power of protection find its sanction? Where will it find the element of its authority and the direction it shall take? In the Constitution of the United States, or nowhere.

So that this attempt, Mr. President, merely to gratify the idea of some gentleman who can not see through the subject, or does not want to see through the subject, is an effort on the part of this committee to do something which violates the very organic law and the fundamental principles of the Government of the United States. I think that ought to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is a very important question. It certainly can not be decided by the small number of Senators who are here. I therefore suggest——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest, in view of what he is about to say, that we pass this over until to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. And allow me to ask that the sections which by reason of what we have adopted have become unnecessary, sections 8, 9, and 10, may be stricken out, so that we may have a reprint of the bill to-night.

Mr. MORGAN. I make no objection.

Mr. PETTUS. Not to change it?

Mr. FORAKER. No; not to change it; simply striking out. Shall I proceed in regular order until I come to those? Upon the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, I will pass over that amendment, if there is no objection, and ask that we may take up the other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the subject being passed over? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORGAN. This amendment goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. It goes over until to-morrow, and I think section 7 also. I think the word "statutory" is to be inserted there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, section 7 will be passed over.

Mr. FORAKER. Sections 6 and 7. New section 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the section.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Commissioner of Navigation shall make such regulations, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, as he may deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants of Puerto Rico on the 11th day of April, 1899, and which continued to be so owned up to the date of such nationalization, and for the admission of the same to all of the benefits of the coasting trade of the United States; and the coasting trade between Puerto Rico and the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. When this was up before, this very amendment was adopted; but there was added to it at the end by making the period a comma and adding "of the United States."

Mr. FORAKER. The statement made by the Senator from Alabama is correct, as I very well remember. It was overlooked because it appeared at a different place in the RECORD from where the amendment was adopted. I ask that those words may be inserted.

Mr. PETTUS. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. FORAKER. It already has been adopted. After the word "districts," at the end of section 8, as it is in this reprint, the period shall be changed to a comma, and the words shall be added "of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the next amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 9. That quarantine stations shall be established at such places in Puerto Rico as the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States shall direct, and the quarantine regulations relating to the importation of diseases from other countries shall be under the control of the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. That for the purpose of retiring the Puerto Rican coins now in circulation in Puerto Rico and substituting therefor the coins of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to redeem, on presentation in Puerto Rico, all the silver coins of Puerto Rico known as the peso and all other silver and copper Puerto Rican coins now in circulation in Puerto Rico, not including any such coins that may be imported into Puerto Rico after the 1st day of February, 1900, at the present established rate of 60 cents in the coins of the United States for 1 peso of Puerto Rican coin, and for all minor or subsidiary coins the same rate of exchange shall be applied. The Puerto Rican coins so purchased or redeemed shall be recoined at the expense of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into such coins of the United States now authorized by law as he may direct, and from and after three months after the date when this act shall take effect no coins shall be a legal tender, in payment of debts thereafter contracted, for any amount in Puerto Rico, except those of the United States; and whatever sum may be required to carry out the provisions hereof, and to pay all expenses that may be incurred in connection therewith, is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish such regulations and employ such agencies as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes hereof: Provided, however, That all debts owing on the date when this act shall take effect shall be payable in the coins of Puerto Rico now in circulation, or in the coins of the United States at the rate of exchange above named.

Mr. MORGAN. On page 8, line 20, I propose to strike out "sixty" and insert "one hundred."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Section 10, page 8, line 20, after the word "of" it is proposed to strike out "sixty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to read "one hundred cents."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words about the amendment. We have heard a great many complaints about the poor, distressed, and dilapidated condition of Puerto Rico. For my part, I have not been able, with any degree of accuracy, to locate the facts upon which those propositions have been based. Senators speak about a storm-swept island and about the failure of crops and the various distresses that have been visited upon it by the appearance of troops in their midst. So far as the appearance of troops in Puerto Rico is concerned, I have no doubt it has been a great financial resource to those people. The payment of our soldiers there and the trading that has been done in Puerto Rico have furnished those people with a large amount of money in commercial dealings that otherwise they would not have had. So I do not think the presence of the army there has inflicted any particular harm upon those people. Our troops have not devastated their farms or orchards nor robbed their houses or anything of the kind.

Perfect order has been maintained and was maintained while General Miles was there and in the command since that time. No Puerto Rican, I think, has ever sent a complaint to the United States of irregularity, or injustice, or maraud against the Army of the United States. We can dismiss any consideration in connection with their poverty as resulting from a supposed infliction of harm upon them by the presence of the army. The tornado has been very largely compensated for. A great amount of money has been spent there in public works and otherwise to give those people employment. The million of inhabitants in Puerto Rico have had more money spent upon them by the Government of the United States since the flag of Spain was lowered upon that island than any million people have ever had spent upon them in the United States, the Indians not excepted, and we have spent mints of money upon the Indians. So I do not credit fully these clamors of distress that are coming from Puerto Rico.

There is a better reason than that for it all. If Senators will examine a table which I extracted from General Davis's report and put into the RECORD a few days ago, they will find that there are $31,000,000 of mortgage indebtedness upon the million people in Puerto Rico, fastened, of course, upon the land, and that that debt bears interest all the way from 6 per cent to above 24 per cent. Very large blocks of it bear interest at 16, 18, 20, 24, and above 24 per cent. It is a mortgage-ridden, usury-ridden people in that country, and they are suffering from it as no people ever suffered before, unless it may be in the island of Cuba or the Philippine Islands under Spanish rule. It has been a part of the Spanish system of rule to throw the virtual ownership of land in all these outlying islands into the hands of certain favored sons of Spain or certain favored people residing in them and to establish in connection with a system of peonage there the utter subordination of those people as laborers in that way and to that degree that it is impossible almost for them to live.

Now, while we are dealing with this subject we might as well look at that fact as being the one hideous and monstrous fact that is the cause of the distress in Puerto Rico. We will have it here after a while. It is on the gradual ascendency in this country, and our people in times to come will feel the burden of the same outrage and calamity. But it is enough to deal with it here now. Here are the facts stated authentically by Governor Davis, and in all the debates that have gone on and in all the investigations of the committee not one word has been said in regard to this terrific burden of debt resting upon the island of Puerto Rico. All this clamor about tariffs and duties and the like of that comes more from the men who absorb these crops under these mortgages than it does from the poor laboring wretches who go about barefooted and hunt their way through pathless forests to the field of labor. That is the truth about it. We had better look into this subject a little bit more narrowly than we have been doing before, and with a better and keener eye to actual human relief and justice.

Now we come to their financial condition. Here are the pesetas, the small coins of small Puerto Rico, and the peso, the larger coin, corresponding to our dollar, which, under the laws of Spain, are legal tender for debt. The debts in Puerto Rico have been contracted with reference to this very currency. When we have gone there we have not altered the legal-tender laws. There has been no change in the legal-tender laws of Puerto Rico. A peon can buy his food and a debtor can pay a debt in Puerto Rico to-day in the currency that we found there when we took possession of the island—legal-tender silver currency. Our coins have gone in there, and the merchants have priced them at 45 to 50 per cent above the nominal value of the Spanish coins—that is to say, a Spanish peso, which represents an ounce of silver, $1, is worth at the counter of the merchant or banker in Puerto Rico 45 or 50 cents. That is where we find it.

We propose to change that in Puerto Rico and to give them a substituted currency; and what do we do with those people? We say to them, we will raise the price from 45 or 50 cents on the dollar to 60 cents on the dollar, and we will give you 60 cents on the dollar in American silver coin for your peso. That is what we propose to do. We will make that much speculation out of you. This bill also requires that that bullion, when received, shall be coined into coins of the United States, thereby becoming legal-tender coin of value equal to the value of gold. We say, then, to the Puerto Ricans, "We will take your coins at 60 cents, and we will coin them into a dollar, and we will give you 60 cents for this coin in legal-tender money of the United States."

We make 40 per cent off the Puerto Ricans, off this poor, wretched, debt-ridden, miserable, starving country down there, and this bill, with a shameless effrontery, brings that measure before the Senate of the United States and the people of this country, and asks us to adopt it. We can not afford to do it. It is not a benefaction to those people to say to them, "We will take your money at 60 cents," when they can send it to Spain and get a dollar for it. Can they send it to Spain? Yes, sir; they can; but they can starve while it is absent from the island. We are compelling those people to exchange their silver bullion, their pesos, which are legal tender now in Puerto Rico, for 60 cents of legal-tender money of the United States, the Government of the United States covering the balance of it into the Treasury.

Now, I do not think that that is dealing fairly with these people. If we intend to buy their coin and force them, as I think they ought to be forced, to take American coins into that island to supplant and eject Spanish coins, let us pay a hundred cents on the dollar for it, because that is what we make out of it. We get an ounce of silver, nine-tenths fine, in every one of these pesos, and we convert it into a legal-tender dollar, and the man in Puerto Rico who has to give it up under our laws ought to be entitled to his dollar back. Can we take from these people, poor as they are represented to be, this 40 cents in every dollar and put it into the Treasury of the United States, and go home and go to bed and sleep with our own consciences? You can not do it, Mr. President. If we take that money at all, we ought to pay to them what it is worth to them under their legal-tender laws, and we ought to take what that ounce of silver is worth in the United States when it is coined into a standard coin, nine-tenths fine, and made a legal-tender dollar here. There can not be a more cruel injustice practiced upon a people than just that, and it is done in the name and under the guise of magnanimity.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Ohio will accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. FORAKER. I can not do so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The silver money that the people in this island have has been coined under the law under which they live, at a ratio, I suppose, of 15½ to 1. I think that is the ratio. Now, we propose to change it to a ratio of 16 to 1, which will be a loss of 3 per cent to them, or more than that; and as they are living under the law, they having accepted their coin under the law, it does seem to me to be grossly unfair for the Government of the United States to compel those people to have that coin changed into another coin at a loss of 40 per cent of its value. We ought to allow those people to bring their silver to this country and have it changed into American coin without loss to them. If they bring a peso here and take it to the mints and have it coined and given back to them, they ought to have it all. There ought to be no charge to them to have the silver coin circulating amongst them converted into the coin of the United States. It is to our interest to have that done. We believe it is to their interest to have it done. It is just and fair, and I hope the committee will agree to the amendment. It is so perfectly just that it seems to me it ought not to be objected to by anybody.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I think the fact ought to be clearly recognized that these unfortunate people will absolutely lose 40 per cent of the money value of the present coin, and I can not see what public policy requires that we should make them suffer such a sacrifice. If the proposition were one which largely increased the volume of silver money, I might understand that those who are opposed to such increase would think that this sacrifice on the part of the people was required in order to prevent what, in their estimation, would be a great public evil; but the amount is very small. It would be inappreciable, in comparison with the volume of money in this country, if all the silver in Puerto Rico were brought to this country and kept here.

If it is an absolute fact that it will destroy 40 per cent of the money of these poverty-stricken people, these people in such distress that we have absolutely appropriated here more than $2,000,000 for their relief, I think there must certainly be some reason for it. There must be some ground on which such action is based. Not only so, but it not only destroys 40 per cent of their money, but we take that 40 per cent ourselves and put it into our Treasury. We destroy in their hands 40 per cent of their money; and we not only destroy it in their hands, but we keep it alive in our own hands and put it into our Treasury. If that is not so, I should like for the Senator from Ohio to explain wherein I am incorrect; and if it is so, I am sure the committee must have some good reason for it, and I think it ought to be spread upon the records of the country if there is a reason for it to justify the action, because, unless there is a reason for it, it certainly must meet with condemnation.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the truth is that, as I understand it, it is not so, to employ the language of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Ohio is correct.

Mr. FORAKER. The peso and other Puerto Rican coins that are in circulation in Puerto Rico are not passing as our coins pass there, with the legal-tender quality and the credit of the United States behind them, the equal of gold coins.

Mr. MORGAN. They are legal tender in Puerto Rico for debt.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; but they are worth about 43 to 45 cents in our money in Puerto Rico.

Mr. MORGAN. In the payment of debts?

Mr. FORAKER. That is to say, 45 to 50 cents of American coin will buy as much as the Puerto Rican peso will buy.

Mr. MORGAN. We understand that, but I am speaking of paying debts. Can you not pay a dollar of debt with a peso?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. MORGAN. How much can you pay?

Mr. FORAKER. Sixty per cent of what an American dollar will pay, and no more.

Mr. BACON. Because of the order of the President.

Mr. FORAKER. Not because of the order of the President. I will say but for the order of the President you could not pay with a Puerto Rican coin more than 45 per cent of what you could pay with an American dollar. I have before me the report of General Davis and desire to read from it.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to be informed about this matter.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to read from this report for that purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. Had not the Puerto Rican debtor, under the laws that stood at the time we acquired the island, the right to pay a dollar of debt with a peso?

Mr. FORAKER. He could pay a peso of debt with a peso, but when we went in with our coins you could pay two pesos of debt with one American dollar.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not speaking of the American dollar; I am speaking of the peso.

Mr. FORAKER. You could do it to-day except only for the President's order, which has given to the peso 60 per cent instead of about 50 per cent of value, which it had before.

Mr. MORGAN. I will not interrupt the Senator further, but I will answer him.

Mr. FORAKER. I read from General Davis's report to the War Department under date of September 30, 1899, at page 31, where he says:

> The relative value of the peso to the silver dollar—bullion value—is stated by the Secretary of the Treasury to be as 93.5 to 100. The undersigned is not advised as to the present market value of silver, but this is supposed to be such as to make the bullion value of the United States dollar about 43 cents, which would give the peso a similar value of about 40 cents.

I saw a statement somewhere recently that the present market value of silver was such as to give to the silver in the peso a value of about 45 to 48 cents in our money. Whichever it may be, it is less than 50 cents. It is true that we propose to take their silver in exchange for our dollars at the rate mentioned—60 cents of our money for a peso—and we propose to recoin that in the manner provided in the bill, and it is true that after we recoin it and put our stamp on it, it will have the value that Senators have alluded to.

But we are not taking anything from the Puerto Ricans in giving that value to their recoined pesos. We are simply putting behind that silver the credit of this Government; something we have, but something they have not. We are not depriving them of anything, but in giving them 60 cents for each peso we are giving them at least 10 cents in our money more than the silver in the peso is worth in the market as bullion or in the market as money with which to pay for goods.

So the talk about our working some hardship is to my mind entirely unwarranted by anything that is connected with the facts in the case. I do not know of any Puerto Rican who is making any complaint about it. I have not heard of any exception on the part of anybody. On the contrary, I have heard that everybody in Puerto Rico is well pleased with the idea that we are to allow them 60 cents of our money for what in their money, as compared with ours, is worth less than 50 cents.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I will not pursue the argument suggested by the Senator, although probably before the discussion is over there will be a reply to what he has said. I wish to ask him a question right in this connection. It is true, I suppose, regardless of what may be the value of the Puerto Rican coin as estimated in our own coin, that when that silver is brought here and coined into American money it will not make 60 per cent of a legal-tender dollar, but it will make a 100 per cent legal-tender dollar.

Mr. FORAKER. That is substantially true.

Mr. BACON. Under this bill a party who brings to the mint here a hundred dollars' worth of silver, estimated at its coining capacity, will get back 60 legal-tender dollars. I wish to know of the Senator what will become of the $40 under this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. As I said a moment ago, if there be 40 per cent of value added, it is because we have put our credit behind it to that extent.

Mr. BACON. I am not talking about the reason.

Mr. FORAKER. We have given to it something they did not have. Nobody is required to bring his peso in and have it exchanged. This is a privilege which we propose to confer upon them. If they do not see fit to avail themselves of it, they do not need to.

Mr. BACON. I understand that fully.

Mr. FORAKER. We are not compelling anybody to exchange the coins.

Mr. BACON. Is it the purpose of this bill that those who do avail themselves of this provision shall leave in the Treasury of the United States, without other consideration than the fact of coining it by the United States, $40 out of every hundred dollars coined out of that man's silver?

Mr. FORAKER. If we take the silver bullion, treating it as bullion, and coin it into dollars, of course it has as money the increased value of which the Senator speaks. But that does not belong to the Puerto Rican.

Mr. BACON. The $40 is to go into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. It goes to the United States, of course, because it belongs to the United States. It does not belong to the Puerto Rican. We give him not only full value for all he owns, but we give him more than full value. We do not compel him to sell it. We simply hold out to him the privilege of having his silver money coined into our money, if he wants it, at a fixed price, which we name. That is all. He does not have to have his money changed, but we propose to give him an opportunity to do so. As to the benefit of the transaction, I will speak of that presently.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I am surprised that there should be this difference and discussion. The distinguished Senators seem to think, in the discussion with the chairman in charge of the bill, that somebody somewhere is injured and the United States somehow has profited. The suggestion is original and primary here. The commissioner examined, and his report is full, and reported to the President, the Governor-General of Puerto Rico so reported and testified before the two committees of Congress, and every person, native or resident in the island, who testified said not only that this ratio of exchange of coins to put the people upon the permanent and stable currency of our country is just and adequate, but uniformly testified that it is most liberal to the people of Puerto Rico, and the people of Puerto Rico who were interrogated on that subject were quite pleased and uniformly assented to the proposition.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] seems to be troubled about some 40 per cent, as if there were a Puerto Rican dollar, denominated a peso, which, by section 10, is to become depreciated in value 40 per cent. The peso has a distinctive value in co-relation with our own currency. Those who are connected with our customs, those who are concerned in the trade, those who made reports to the Executive, and those who have testified are unanimous in the agreement—there is no exception—that this is a wise, just, and liberal provision. Nobody makes anything by it except the people of Puerto Rico, and I think the testimony will show that according to the exchange of pesos in the last couple of years from Puerto Rico, in foreign trade, in the payment of debts, under this proposition the citizens of Puerto Rico would make a fraction in the advantage of the exchange. There is a proviso here "that all debts owing on the date when this act shall take effect shall be payable in the coins of Puerto Rico now in circulation or in the coins of the United States at the rate of exchange above named." It leaves open, in that relation, to the debtor——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Of course we all understand that the silver is scattered all through the island, in the pockets of the people. The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: If this bill provided that the party who brought Puerto Rican silver to the United States mint to be coined should receive the full coining value of that silver, would it not raise the value of every silver coin in the pocket of every poor Puerto Rican 40 per cent over what it now is?

Mr. McCOMAS. I think not, Mr. President. The uniform testimony of everybody is that in foreign exchange and domestic contract and payment of obligations the rate of 60 per cent is liberal and overliberal in the adjustment. If the Senator from Georgia is asking me what is the equivalent face value of a peso, according to its legal definition in Spain and in Puerto Rico, the amount may or may not be a little in excess of 60 per cent. But my point is that everybody who deals in Puerto Rico, every government functionary, all the people there think this is a most wise and liberal provision for them. And why should the proposition thus vex the soul of the Senator from Georgia, if everybody concerned says it is liberal to them?

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me. He has not answered my question, and I think there can be but one answer to it. Regardless of what may be the present exchangeable value of Puerto Rican silver, so soon as the bill passes by which all Puerto Rican silver can be coined into American standard legal-tender dollars, of course that bullion is worth a hundred cents on the dollar.

Mr. McCOMAS. Of course. Why?

Mr. BACON. Pardon me. And necessarily it must be true, as suggested by me in the question I asked of the Senator, that when a law is thus passed it will increase the value of the silver coin in the pocket of every poverty-stricken Puerto Rican up to the value of 100 cents on the dollar, whereas under this bill it would be only 60 cents on the dollar. So that those people, whom we are so anxious to befriend and to be benevolent to, stand in this position, that by the passage of a law we can make their money worth in their pockets to-day 60 cents on the dollar or we can make it worth 100 cents on the dollar; and we assume to determine to make it worth 60 cents instead of 100 cents. That is all there is in it; and all the inducement there can be to us to do otherwise is that we ourselves will put 40 per cent of it into our own pockets.

Mr. McCOMAS. The distinguished Senator from Georgia, I suppose, calls that a question. I think the first member of his argument was a question, but certainly the remainder of it was not. As to the peso at an exchange value of 60 cents being convertible into our dollar, they do receive the full value and the added value, because the President's order has fixed the value in that island above the real value, as was stated by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio; but my purpose, Mr. President, in seeking the recognition of the Chair was to make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio, and if he will allow me to turn back to page 4, lines 10 to 12—and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. FORAKER. I am looking at it in the bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. In lines 10, 11, and 12, on page 4, I want to suggest to the chairman whether he had not better, between now and to-morrow morning, make a slight change in the language. I would suggest that it should read, "That whenever the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted a local law to provide for the support of the government of Puerto Rico by this act established," etc., the President shall proclaim.

Mr. FORAKER. I trust the Senator will not ask us to go back to that now. I am trying to get the amendments disposed of in their order; but I will take into consideration the point suggested by the Senator, if there is a point in it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will make my suggestion. I shall not ask to go back now, but I will suggest, under the well-recognized law on that subject, the language as it now is might be construed to leave a discretion to legislate elsewhere, either in the President or in the legislature of Puerto Rico. In the case of Field vs. Clark, in 143 United States Reports, it was there held, in respect of the President's proclamation as to reciprocity by a majority of the court, the Chief Justice and one other dissenting, that because in that act the President was simply to proclaim a fact when he ascertained it, and then to proclaim the cessation of certain duties, there was no discretion or legislative power. In looking at this language it seems to provide that the President may make a proclamation when "the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Puerto Rico by this act established." It is a discretion——

Mr. SPOONER. That is not all.

Mr. McCOMAS. "And shall by resolution duly passed," etc. But it seems to me, to avoid any trouble, it will suffice if the legislature of Puerto Rico shall enact a local law to provide for the support of that government. That is an act which can be made known to the President, whether it does meet the necessities, or whether, indeed, it be intended to meet the necessities. It seems simpler, to guard against the danger of saying that either the legislature of Puerto Rico or the President may legislate, to use the simple phrase "That whenever the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico shall have enacted a local law to provide for the support of the government hereby established," whether it falls short or is in excess of the support and maintenance of that government, and upon the ascertainment by the President that the act has been passed simply for that purpose, and they have resolved that he shall be so informed, he shall then proclaim, and the features of this section shall be noneffective.

I only suggest that point; I will not now make a motion; but it seems to me the language will be beyond cavil if we simply say that when they pass an act, a local law, for the support of the local government intended to be established by this act, and they shall by resolution notify the President that they have passed such an act, that thereupon he shall make proclamation, and under the ruling of the majority of the Supreme Court in Field vs. Clark the statute would be safe from the objection either that the President legislates or that the assembly of Puerto Rico legislates.

I suggest to the chairman whether the language I have suggested will not be an improvement in that direction. I merely wish now to bring it to his attention.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator that I have given that matter consideration before, but I will again take it up, in view of what the Senator has stated, to see whether there is any trouble about it. There is not at present.

Mr. MORGAN. I was unable to get the Senator from Ohio to make a statement, which I hoped he would be able to make, as to whether or not the pesos were a legal tender for debts in Puerto Rico at the time we acquired the islands.

Mr. FORAKER. Is the Senator informed about that?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not; but I have always believed that the pesos were legal-tender money.

Mr. FORAKER. I am of the opinion that they were; but they were worth, although a legal tender in the payment of debts, only the ratio indicated.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. By the rate of exchange provided.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no; no government in the world ever provided that the money that it coined should be a legal tender at the commercial ratio as between that and gold.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not say that. What I said was that that money was never at any time since we have had anything to do with Puerto Rico at any greater value when compared with our money, nor as great as the rate of exchange established by Executive order.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that perfectly; but the poor Puerto Rican can go and pay his debt of a hundred dollars with a hundred pesos; and he can do that, notwithstanding the commercial value may be only 40 cents on the dollar.

Mr. FORAKER. Or he can do it with $60 of American money.

Mr. MORGAN. He can not, because the American money is not legal-tender money there, unless it has been made so by some military law.

Mr. FORAKER. It is to be made so by the provisions of this proposed act. This act explicitly provides for that.

Mr. MORGAN. I am speaking of what exists there now, and not what will exist.

Mr. FORAKER. What exists there now, if the Senator will allow me, we are not responsible for.

Mr. MORGAN. We are.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, in a certain sense we are, of course.

Mr. MORGAN. In every sense we are.

Mr. FORAKER. We went there upon our own motion; but I mean we did not put that money there, or give it the value that it has.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to detain the Senate more than three or four minutes; but I want to put in the RECORD this evening, so that Senators can see it, the statement in the report made by General Davis. He says:

It is impossible to ascertain more than approximately what is now the volume of the circulating medium. Some light is thrown upon this by Mr. Carlos Soler, the subdirector of the Banco Español de Puerto Rico, whose letter dated August 10, 1898, will be found in the appendix. He estimates the amount of provincial silver placed in circulation at 6,576,000 pesos, and the copper at 70,000 pesos, giving a total of 6,646,000 pesos. Disregarding the gold noted in Mr. Coll y Toste's statement, it would appear that Mr. Soler's total exceeds the other by about 149,000 pesos.

Respecting the volume of this Puerto Rican coinage remaining in circulation at this time, no better information is at hand than that contained in Mr. Soler's letter, cited above. It will be seen that he places the silver at 5,875,000 pesos, and the copper at 45,000 pesos, giving a total of 5,920,000 pesos. He also states that the estimated sum of 600,000 pesos has been sent or taken out of the country by the returning Spanish troops and private individuals; but as this silver peso is worth in Puerto Rico about 20 cents more than anywhere else, it is safe to assume that it will all drift back here in time, and therefore it should be taken into account in any study of the currency of this island.

As respects the volume of American money now circulating, it is impossible to furnish a satisfactory estimate.

I just want to add one statement which I believe to be a fact. The larger part of the money in Puerto Rico must be in the hands of the laboring population. The men who came here to testify before this committee were doubtless men who had influential relations in Puerto Rico and probably were moneyed men there. Let us get hold of these poor working people down there and find out what will be the effect upon them.

Pass this bill, and they will sell their dollars that they work for at 40 cents on the dollar to the men who came here to have these laws passed and men like them. Then those men will sell them to the United States for 60 cents on the dollar, making 20 cents on the dollar. The United States will then coin them into silver legal-tender dollars and pay for them in those very dollars, or in dollars like them, making a profit of 40 cents. So that the profit of 60 cents on the dollar that will be earned amongst them will come out of the laborer. It goes first into the pockets of the usurers, who have mortgages upon property at 24 per cent per annum, and 40 per cent of it goes into the hands of the United States Government. I am willing to let the argument rest there.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 30, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 29, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BROSIUS, for one week, on account of important business.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House bills with Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were severally read.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, the amendments were concurred in.

A bill (H. R. 1763) granting a pension to Ella F. Sydnor;

A bill (H. R. 3012) granting a pension to Sarah Claggett;

A bill (H. R. 6700) granting an increase of pension to Maria Andrews;

A bill (H. R. 3538) granting an increase of pension to Charles Ross;

A bill (H. R. 470) granting a pension to Jane Dykes;

A bill (H. R. 6701) granting a pension to Serelda C. McGrew; and

A bill (H. R. 2597) granting an increase of pension to Charles Kauffung.

JOSEPH BACIGALUPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5139) for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi, with Senate amendments; which were read.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MINNESOTA AND MANITOBA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8876) granting the right of way to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company across the ceded portion of the Chippewa (Red Lake) Indian Reservation, in Minnesota.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs were read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two before consent is given.

Mr. EDDY. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. Is this bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. EDDY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDOX. Unanimously?

Mr. EDDY. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that the ceded portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until order is obtained.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota if the bill was reported unanimously from the committee?

Mr. EDDY. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. The Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. EDDY. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MADDOX. It is a long bill——

Mr. EDDY. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit, I will say the ceded portion of the Red Lake Indian Reservation occupies a peculiar legal status. As the gentleman is aware, there is a general law providing for a right of way across the public domain of the United States; there is also a general law providing for a right of way across Indian reservations, which passed in 1899. When this Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad reached the western boundary of the ceded portion, they applied to the Secretary of the Interior, under the law of 1875, for a right of way across this ceded portion, supposing it was public domain. They decided that it was not under their jurisdiction; that it was not public land; consequently they turned the matter over to the Indian Office, and they decided that it did not come under the law of 1899, because it was not an Indian reservation; and so the Department advised that a special bill be drawn to cover this particular case. The bill was drawn by the Department, amended by the Department, and unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman respecting the amendments. I could not catch them exactly as they were read. I had not a copy of the bill before me. What is the effect of those amendments? Are they committee amendments?

Mr. EDDY. They are committee amendments, proposed by the Indian Office.

Mr. CURTIS. They are Department amendments.
Mr. EDDY. They are Department amendments.
Mr. RICHARDSON. But amendments recommended also by the committee?
Mr. EDDY. Yes, sir.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.
The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. EDDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 268) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the northern district of New York, to divide the same into two districts, and provide for the terms of court to be held therein and the officers thereof and the disposition of pending causes.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read the bill at length.
Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the reading of this bill, and it shows the importance of listening to it, and I call for the regular order.
Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not object.
The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the regular order is demanded.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair, for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.
The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of an appropriation bill the title to which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriation for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent to go back to a paragraph passed on yesterday, and I would like to make a statement as to why I do it.
The CHAIRMAN. What was the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas?
Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent to return to a paragraph that was amended yesterday, preparatory to submitting a request.
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state what the paragraph is?
Mr. McRAE. It is a paragraph giving the 20 per cent to enlisted men and 10 per cent to officers.
The CHAIRMAN. On what page?
Mr. McRAE. On page 14, beginning with line 12. I want to make a statement first.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to return to line 12, page 14.
Mr. HULL. I object, Mr. Chairman. I want to get through with this bill first. I do not object to the gentleman making a statement.
Mr. McRAE. If I can not convince the gentleman from Iowa——
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that he may make a statement.
Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman from Iowa will give me his attention——
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to return to page 14, line 12, for the purpose of making a statement in reference thereto.
Mr. McRAE. Preparatory to submitting a request.
The CHAIRMAN. Preparatory to submitting a further request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. McRAE. I think if the gentleman from Iowa will give me his attention I can show him that we did on yesterday what we did not desire to, and what I would not have consented to if I had known the full purport of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. The paragraph as amended would read as follows:

For additional 20 per cent of pay of enlisted men $4,524,000: Provided, That hereafter the pay of all officers and enlisted men serving in Puerto Rico, Cuba, the Philippine Islands, and Hawaii shall be increased 10 per cent for officers and 30 per cent for enlisted men.

Now, before this paragraph was finally amended, the gentleman from Iowa stated that this increased compensation only applied to times of war. I knew that to be the law. Now, we have made it, with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, to apply to Puerto Rico, Cuba, and to Alaska, when in fact it ought only to apply to the Philippines, where there is an insurrection, or war, as you may be pleased to call it.
It seems to me that we can not justify giving an increased compensation to people in Puerto Rico when we do not give it to soldiers at Tampa or in any other part of the United States where the duties are just as arduous, and I hope the gentleman will consent to return to that paragraph for the purpose of giving just exactly what he said was intended, and he said it before the amendment was finally adopted. This extra compensation was originally intended to apply to those engaged in warfare. That is as far as we should go.
Mr. HULL. I am not willing, Mr. Chairman, to go back now. But in my opening speech last Monday, I called specific attention to this provision, and explained it at some length. I want to say that the gentleman from Virginia offered his amendment after consultation with—I do not know how many members of the committee, and I had no objection to it; but the question of Puerto Rico and Cuba and the Philippines for the next year presents this additional complication as to the officers and men serving there: The officers have no quarters and no commutation of quarters in many of the cities.
It costs them more than 10 per cent in their forfeiture of commutation of quarters, which it has been held they are not entitled to. The expenses of supporting their families at home continue while they are supporting themselves abroad. I know of some officers, having no means for their support except their salaries, who have made special requests to be ordered home for the reason that they are constantly getting behind in their expenses, being obliged to support their families at home and at the same time meet their expenses abroad, their salaries being insufficient to cover both. I think the provision is a very mild one. As to whether it should extend to all these islands, the gentleman from Virginia has made an investigation. For the purpose of expediting the bill I object, at least now, to going back.
Mr. McRAE. I made two efforts to get the paragraph as amended read on yesterday, but could not. I supposed after the statement of the gentleman that the provision applied only to places where actual war or insurrection existed. If it is the gentleman's idea that in time of peace we should give 20 per cent additional to the enlisted men and 10 per cent to officers, then the bill as amended will accomplish that.
Mr. HULL. My opinion is that until there is a radical change of conditions in those islands the extra pay ought to be allowed; and even then it does not equalize the pay with what they received before the war.
Mr. McRAE. But there is no such condition, as I understand, applying to Alaska or Hawaii.
Mr. HULL. The committee for the last three years have been trying to get in an amendment giving extra pay to the men in the military service in Alaska; for we all know that living is more costly there than anywhere else.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CANNON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:
H. R. 4001. An act authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on the Navajo Indian Reservation, Territory of Arizona.
The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:
S. R. 103. Joint resolution providing for the introduction of testimony in behalf of the defendant in all preliminary hearings of a criminal nature; and
S. R. 86. Joint resolution for the printing of English interpretation of foreign terms as to weights, measures, and so forth, occurring in Government publications.
The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:
Senate concurrent resolution 39:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That upon receipt of information by them that any officer, soldier, marine, or seaman in the Army or Navy of the United States has been wounded, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall, from time to time, at the expense of the United States, keep the family of such officer, soldier, marine, or seaman seasonably advised of his condition.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Incidental expenses: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts or on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers; and to enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees of the Army, who have died, or may hereafter die, while in the employment of the War Department in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines; and that in all cases where they would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement may be made of expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred by individuals of burial and transportation of remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed what is now allowed in the cases of officers, and for the reimbursement in the cases of enlisted men of what is now allowed in their cases may be paid out of the proper funds appropriated by this act, and that the disbursing officers shall be credited with such reimbursement heretofore made; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement under court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmiths' tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmiths' tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operation of the Army and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $2,400,000: Provided, That such sum as may be necessary to return bodies of civilian employees of the Army as provided in this act shall be immediately available.

Mr. HULL. The committee instructed me to move to strike out, on page 19, all after the word "soldier," in line 3, down to and including the last part of the word "Philippines" in line 8; and it is intended to offer at the close of the section a further amendment, which has been submitted by the Quartermaster-General as covering what the committee desire to do more fully than the amendment which we originally incorporated in the bill. If the amendment I first stated shall prevail, I shall move to insert at the close of the section, striking out the proviso which now closes it, the following:

To enable the Secretary of War in his discretion to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while in the employ of the War Department in Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, including the remains of any honorably discharged soldiers who are entitled under the terms of their discharge to return transportation on Government transports and who die while on said transports, the sum of $100,000, which is hereby made available for the above purposes as long as it may be required.

Mr. McRAE. I will ask the gentleman whether that is not done now?

Mr. HULL. No; it is not. So far as discharged soldiers are concerned, they are now being sent back; but if they die on transports, there is no provision for continuing their transportation after they have died, and they are buried at sea. This proposed amendment removes that objection and is better than the provision originally inserted by the committee, because it provides for returning the bodies of all who die on transports on their way home.

Mr. McRAE. Then, as I understand, lawful provision is already made for returning the bodies of those who die in service, but not of those who die on transports, and this is intended to reach the latter cases.

Mr. HULL. This provides for sending home the bodies of those who die on transports.

By the construction of the present law it has been held that when a man dies on a transport there is no authority for bringing his remains home. In this proposed amendment we provide for the return of all our soldiers who die on transports. They are now bringing back the remains of those who die on the islands.

Mr. McRAE. Have they not been doing that?

Mr. HULL. They have; and this gives additional authority. There is now no authority to return the bodies of civilian employees of the Government who die there. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT] brought this matter to the attention of the committee, and they agreed that the provision was very proper.

Mr. McRAE. I make no objection to the provision. I think the bodies should be returned to their families at the expense of the Government. I simply wanted to know whether what it proposes is not done now; and if so, why this authority.

Mr. HULL. This is in addition to what is done now.

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a case of this kind which recently occurred in my district. A soldier was discharged while in Cuba. His discharge came to him while he was in the hospital, not able to travel, and he died there. We applied for transportation and it was denied on the ground that he was a civilian, having been discharged from the Army, and that there was no provision by which his remains could be transported to this country. Will the amendment provide for cases of that kind?

Mr. JETT. I will say to the gentleman that it would.

Mr. BOREING. Then by all means the amendment should pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if there is not a regulation of the War Department at the present time which allows the family or legal representatives of a deceased enlisted man $35 for burial expenses and the family or legal representatives of an officer $100?

I should also like to ask if the Comptroller of the Treasury has not ruled that where bodies have been taken and thrown into a trench upon a battlefield in Cuba or the Philippines, in some cases seven or eight bodies being thrown into the same grave, that this was a burial by the United States Government, and that therefore the families of the deceased soldier, or the family of the deceased officer, have been denied this money?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the Comptroller of the Treasury has done in regard to the matter. We have had nothing before the committee on that subject at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who I think is very anxious to do everything that is proper and right for the family of the private soldier and the officer, that that is a fact. It was reported in all the papers of the country, and a transcript of the Comptroller's decision was given.

This being the case, it seems to me that the matter ought to be remedied, because there have been numberless cases occurring every day where claims for this money are thrown out.

The bodies have been sent to the families of the deceased soldiers, and when they arrived at the homes of the soldiers, and after burial, their families were deprived of the $35 which was supposed to be available from the Government for the burial.

If there is no objection on the part of the chairman of the committee, I will ask that this amendment be incorporated in the bill: "That in the case of any officer $100 is hereby appropriated to the family or legal representative, and in the case of an enlisted man, $35 is hereby appropriated, irrespective of any moneys expended by the Government."

Mr. HULL. I object to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If that is the law, it seems to me that we ought to place it beyond the power of the Comptroller of the Treasury, by any decision such as I have indicated here, to prevent the proper persons from receiving the money to be applied to burial expenses. The Comptroller of the Treasury holds that when a body is thrown into a trench five minutes after the man is killed, that is a burial.

Mr. DENNY. Why does the gentleman from Massachusetts in his proposed amendment make this discrimination between the officer and the enlisted man?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Because the existing regulation of the War Department makes this distinction now, and I am compelled to follow out this language.

Mr. HULL. I shall have to raise the point of order to the gentleman's proposed amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If there is a law or regulation in existence, let us see that it is enforced, and not let it be subject to the whim of the Comptroller.

I desire to say upon the floor at the present time that there are thousands of cases held up by the Comptroller of the Treasury of claims resulting from the Spanish-American war where soldiers have been deprived of their rights and their just dues; and it seems to me that if we are going to have a law, we ought to insist upon its being enforced.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I must raise the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman; and I want to say that my reason for doing that is that almost daily the Government is now bringing the remains of soldiers back to their homes. When they deliver them to the family at the place where they live, the remains are turned over to the family to be buried in their private burying ground; and there is no reason that I can see why, after the Government goes to the expense of returning the remains and putting them in the hands of relatives and friends, that the Government should then make an indiscriminate allowance of a hundred dollars for each officer and $35 for each enlisted man. In my country, at least, if it should ever occur in the future that a soldier's family was unable to bury him, the patriotic people of that locality will see that he has a soldier's burial.

Mr. Chairman, this opens up an entirely new line, one that is entirely new to the committee. The amendment proposed here simply enlarges the scope of what is now being done. Within the last thirty days one of the soldiers killed at Manila was brought to my home in Des Moines and buried there, and other soldiers' remains are being brought home in the same way; so that the gentleman's object can be only this, that after the Government has disinterred the remains, after it has furnished a hermetically-sealed casket, to return the remains to this country—a thing that it does in every case—after it has transported the remains to the place of enlistment, or where the family of the soldier reside; after it has turned the remains over to the family and friends, that then the Government, regardless of the circumstances, whether the people are poor or rich, shall give to the heirs or family of every enlisted man $35 and to the heirs or family of every officer $100, I am not in favor of that, and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. MANN and Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts adressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, and after that the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I should like to state, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, that the families of dead soldiers should not be compelled to look for charity in this matter of burial.

Yesterday we listened to a grand appeal from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in regard to the liberality of the United States Government in providing such excellent quarters for the officers on the transports. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS] instanced the fact that $8,000 has been paid for a silver service, so that the officers could be provided with extravagant furnishings on these transports.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to the fact that there is at the present time a regulation in existence in the War Department by which some of the families of deceased soldiers get $35 and some of the families of officers get $100, but the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that in the cases of men killed in battle, who have been buried in a trench, the families of those men can not get the money, and it is to remove that inconsistency that I wish the amendment, which I have presented at the Clerk's desk, incorporated into law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts wants an amendment that contemplates that $35 shall be paid to the heirs or representatives of a dead soldier after he has been brought home and buried by the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. No; they are not buried by the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are they not brought home at the expense of the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Certainly. You would not expect the family to pay the cost of transportation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And is not the casket furnished by the Government, and are not all the funeral expenses paid?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The casket is furnished by the Government and the transportation is furnished.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do you think they ought to be paid $35 in addition to that?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I certainly do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do you think they ought to be paid $35 for funeral expenses when the Government has borne all the expenses of the funeral?

Mr. DENNY. The Government simply pays the transportation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Government pays everything.

Mr. BERRY. I think the gentleman will find that they do not pay the expenses of carriages and such things as that.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. They do not pay any expense except that of bringing the bodies home. I do not know what the custom is in Mississippi, but I know the average funeral in the Northern States costs all the way from $50 to $100 for carriages and necessary expenses other than the casket, and I say that in view of the fact that this Government has spent over $200,000,000 in the conduct of the war, and in view of the fact that the soldiers are expected to go away thousands of miles to fight for this Government under the American flag, at $15 a month, the least consideration that this Government can show to the families of these soldiers, who are generally poor people, is to see that this $35 is paid.

I submit to the members of this House the first part of the decision of Comptroller Tracewell, November 18, 1899. This decision was given in answer to the claim of a widow who had incurred quite a large expense in the burial of her son:

The soldier was killed in battle at El Caney, July 1, 1898, and was buried there, presumably at the expense of the Government.

Just think of the throwing of the remains of soldiers killed in battle into a grave—and in some graves it appears that four or five soldiers have been buried—being considered a burial expense at the hands of the United States Government. I think this decision an outrage, and Congress should remedy the matter by passing a law which will not be set aside by the Comptroller.

I understand that hundreds of claims of enlisted men in the Spanish-American war are held up in the office of the Auditor for the War Department. I do not think this is a proper mode of procedure, and I am of the opinion that these claims should be passed upon as soon as the proper evidence is available.

Conditions that prevail now are nothing like those prevailing during the civil war, when it was impossible at all times to get the proper facts. Every means is at hand to obtain the truth regarding these claims, and the soldiers themselves and their families should not be denied what is just and proper through any parsimony or lack of decision on the part of the proper Government officer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the case presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts seems a hard one, yet I question whether it is much worse than the provision of allowing $35 by the Government. I know of many cases where members of the First Illinois Infantry died either in Cuba or at Montauk and their families have been unable to obtain the payment of a cent for burial expenses. I know the case of a widow who spent almost the last dollar that she had in taking home the remains of her dead son who died at Montauk Point, and whose bill and claim for $35 is yet pending in the Auditor's Office. I think the boy died in September, 1898, and it has been almost impossible, it seems, to obtain any information from the Government in reference to the claim. I myself have had correspondence with the Auditor for the War Department, and I say anyone who obtains a claim of that sort and has it allowed has more than earned the $35. It takes more than $35 to prepare the papers necessary to present to the War Department; and I question very much whether the gentleman would gain anything if his amendment were adopted, because I believe the claimants would much more than earn the money before they got it.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to say a word about this matter. It was before the Committee on Military Affairs, and I quite agree with what has been said by the chairman of that committee, and I think the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is a good and liberal provision. I do not believe that anyone, any of the relatives or representatives of the soldiers, officers, or employees of the Government, are going to ask more at the hands of the Government than is provided for by this amendment which is offered now by the chairman. I know what my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] has said; but when the Government goes and pays the expense of furnishing the coffin and defraying all the expenses necessarily required to convey the remains to the former place of abode of the soldier or civilian employee, they are satisfied, and they ought to be satisfied, and they ought not to ask more of the Government than they are offering to do and as provided for by this amendment. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to the fact that this same provision is, I understand, made for the transportation of those civilians who died in the acquired territories as made in this bill for the transportation of the bodies of the soldiers. Is not that the fact?

Mr. JETT. How is that?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I understand that the same provision is made for the transportation of the bodies of civilian employees to their homes as is made for the soldiers.

Mr. JETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I call the attention of the House to that glaring inconsistency. The civilian employees who go down to those islands get from $1,000 to $2,000 salaries, while the soldiers who go there are paid from $180 to $200 a year, yet the civilian employees are given the same privileges, or it is given to their folks, the Government paying the whole expense; now, should not the soldier, who only gets $180 to $200 a year, or his family, be allowed this extra $35 for burial expenses in view of the discrepancy in their pay and that of civilian employees?

Mr. JETT. I want to say this to my friend from Massachusetts, that during the recent war it was just as necessary to the interests of the Government to have civilian employees as to have the soldiers to fight the battles. For instance, take those who are engaged in that department known as the Signal Corps. They were placed in just as hazardous positions, many times, as the soldiers themselves when they were sent out to put up poles and string lines of wire before communication could be had. I think it is only just and proper.

Now, there is only this difference between the civilian and the soldier, whilst the soldier, of course, was in duty bound to respond to the direction of his superior officer, so was the civilian employee in duty bound to obey orders or else prove himself an infamous coward.

And whenever the directions have been given to them they have gone in every instance, and they ought to receive the same consideration at the hands of Congress as do the soldiers.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I would like to remind the gentleman from Illinois that the Signal Corps were a part of the Army.

Mr. JETT. But many civilian employees were not a part of the Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But it is a fact that the civilian employees, many of them, get from one to two thousand dollars a year, while the soldier only gets $180 a year.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to strike out the proviso and insert the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 16, after the word "dollars," strike out the proviso and insert "to enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while in the employ of the War Department in Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, including the remains of any honorably discharged soldiers who are entitled under the terms of their discharge to return transportation on Government transport, and who die while on said transport, the sum of $100,000, which is hereby made immediately available for the above purpose as long as may be required.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, is that amendment susceptible of another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I move to amend by adding a provision that the family of deceased officers shall receive $100 and the family of deceased soldiers be allowed $35, to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, irrespective of any expense incurred by the Government. I make the distinction in amount because this is the established rate paid under regulation of the War Department.

Mr. HULL. To that I raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment:
"That in the case of deceased officers $100 is hereby appropriated for the family or legal representative, and in the case of enlisted men $35, irrespective of any money expended by the Government."

Mr. HULL. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that amendment states what it is for. I do not understand that this is a limitation on that. I do not understand that it is for the return of the bodies to their homes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the amendment offered to that by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] will again be read.

There was no objection.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. I rise to propose an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already one amendment to the amendment pending.

The Clerk again read the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa raise the point of order that the amendment to the amendment is not germane?

Mr. HULL. I do; it is an entirely different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The original amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa provides a method of payment by the Government for the removal of bodies from the scenes of action to the United States, and my amendment provides, in connection with the removal of these bodies, that an additional amount shall be paid to the families of the deceased soldiers and officers, $100 in case of officers and $35 in case of enlisted men. I can see no reason for the objection; this is in line with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, on the same subject, and makes an additional expenditure of money. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is in order, I do not see that there can be any objection made to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clear to the Chair that the amendment is not germane and is subject to a point of order.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following: "After the word ——, in line ——, page ——."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in proper form; it does not indicate where it is offered.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. It is to be a new paragraph and to follow the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new paragraph, as follows:
"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $50 for funeral expenses of each soldier serving in the Spanish-American war or since, who died or shall die while absent on sick leave."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on that.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order until the gentleman from Pennsylvania can be heard.

Mr. HULL. I will allow the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not insist on his point of order. The amendment I have offered, to my mind, will supply a want and relieve many poor parents throughout the United States who have found it difficult to keep the expenses attending cases where soldiers of the United States Army have contracted disease, and have obtained sick leave, gone to their homes, and there died.

I have in my mind at the present time the cases of several soldiers, some of whom contracted disease at Chickamauga and others in Cuba. They were sent to hospitals, and when they had sufficiently recuperated were ordered by the officers in charge to a northern climate, where it was expected they would recover their health much more rapidly. Two soldiers from my district in Pennsylvania who served in the Spanish-American war and who contracted disease while in Cuba were sent to the hospital, and from there back to their homes in Pennsylvania, where they received medical treatment, but in consequence of a relapse died.

Now, the law at the present time makes no provision for paying the expenses of the burial of such soldiers who thus die at their homes while absent on sick leave. I hope, therefore, the amendment will prevail. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw the point of order. Of course, a soldier dying in hospital or in actual service in the Army would be buried at the expense of the Government; but when he dies while absent on sick leave he must be buried at the expense of his relatives or friends. There is no provision that the Government of the United States shall pay such expense.

Mr. HULL. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. MADDOX addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question before the point is decided.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. Of course I yield for a question.

Mr. MADDOX. Is there now any provision of law providing for the burial of soldiers who die while on furlough?

Mr. HULL. The bodies, as I understand, are now brought home and then turned over to the families of the deceased or to their friends. This provision is for a little extension beyond what has been provided for heretofore.

My reason for raising and insisting on the point of order is that this matter has never been brought before the committee; we do not know what it will cost; we do not know whether it would be a proper thing to do or not. The gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Massachusetts said yesterday that these questions ought to be considered by somebody before they are brought in here.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman did not get my point. I wish to know whether there is any law now authorizing payment by the Government for the interment of a soldier who dies while on furlough.

Mr. HULL. There is provision for the burial of any man who dies in the service. I do not know whether that refers to those who die on furlough; I think not. There is a provision of law—I read it from the present bill, for it has been on the statute books for years—to this effect:

Expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts or on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to call attention to one case within my knowledge? A soldier, having contracted disease at Chickamauga, was granted sick leave and died after leaving the hospital, but before reaching home, perhaps within one day of his destination.

Mr. HULL. I should think that under the existing law the family would have a claim against the Government for his funeral expenses.

Mr. MADDOX. The War Department refuses to pay such claims.

Mr. HULL. I understand not.

Mr. MADDOX. It does; because I have brought that very case to the attention of the Department.

Mr. HULL. Then probably I am mistaken.

But my point is this: This amendment proposes to extend these expenditures into a line that has never been considered by the Military Committee and never brought to the attention of the House by any authorized officer of the Government; and while the proposition may be the best on earth, yet we ought to have more consideration and we ought to have more information about it than we possibly can have at this time.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know about that. I was trying to get information on this by bringing the matter to the attention of my friend from Iowa.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to bring to the attention of the gentleman from Iowa and the House a case occurring in my own district, in which a soldier died while at home on sick leave. His parents were so poor that neighbors and friends were obliged to come to their relief in meeting the expenses of the burial. I wrote to the Secretary of War acquainting him with the facts, and he replied, stating that he sympathized very much with the parties in question, but that there was no law authorizing the Department to pay the expenses of burying a soldier who died while at home on sick leave.

Mr. HULL. Here is all the information I can give. It is contained in a provision which has been the law for years and is now embraced in this bill:

Expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field or at military posts or on the frontiers or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers.

Now, those cases are covered absolutely by existing law. To extend it without any consideration except what springs up on the floor of the House is something to which I am opposed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McRAE. I want to be heard briefly on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asked recognition first.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, prior to this time I have not been acquainted with the exact wording of this law as read a moment ago by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. After having heard him read the law I am of the opinion that this amendment is not a change of existing law, but would be merely a declaration of what the existing law is, although it would cause a change in the administration of the law and the construction of it by the Department. The law as read by the gentleman says that these people shall be buried at the expense of the Government when they are under orders.

Now, a man at home upon sick furlough, or on his way home or on his way back from home, is, in a military sense, under orders. That is to say, he is under the control and orders of his military superior, and is going to a place by a military order. It seems to me, therefore, that the construction placed by the Department upon the existing law has been wrong and that for the House now to pass an amendment would be a mere declaration of what the existing law is, to prevent misconstruction.

Now, this sort of a case happened in my own district: A soldier was sent home upon sick furlough, and, having gotten there, while being treated by a physician, died. His captain furnished the money to the physician to treat him and paid his funeral expenses out of his own pocket, furnishing him with the money before he left to do those things. That captain, a young friend of his, has never been reimbursed for that expenditure. I had myself proposed to offer an amendment covering not only the question of burial expenses for soldiers upon sick leave and furlough, but medical expenses as well to a limited amount, but was of the opinion that it would be a change of existing law. It seems to me now, however, that it would be merely a declaration of the right construction of existing law, because undoubtedly a soldier upon sick furlough is a soldier under military orders, and that is the language of the existing law.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. McRAE. I do not, if the Chair is satisfied; but if the Chair is not satisfied that the amendment is in order, I should like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is perfectly clear on the question. The statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] does not at all relieve the situation, because it has been repeatedly ruled by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole that a declaration of the intent of the law is not in order.

The amendment to the amendment is not germane to the amendment, and the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. McRAE. I only wanted to say that I think it is germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa and, inasmuch as the amendment proposed by him was subject to a point of order, that he ought not to make it against so modest and just an appropriation as this, even if good. But his having been accepted as pending, this should not be ruled out if germane to his.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact that one amendment relates to civilians and the other to soldiers.

Mr. McRAE. They are all in the service of the Government and make a part of the military establishment, and certainly the expense of burying soldiers should not be ruled out and the expense of burying civilians admitted on the Army appropriation bill. The paragraph under consideration relates to transporting and burying those who die in the military service of the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is subject to a point of order, but I do not intend to raise it at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to raise that point of order now, the matter having been discussed for half an hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I do not intend to raise it anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 7, strike out the words "Puerto Rico"——

The CHAIRMAN. Line 7 has already been stricken out of the bill—the entire line.

Mr. HULL. All after the word "soldiers," down to and including the word "Philippines," in line 8, was stricken out by instruction of the committee.

Mr. HAY. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on page 18, in line 25, after the word "officers," I move to insert the words "noncommissioned officers and soldiers;" and in line 2, page 19, after the word "orders," to strike out the words "and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers" and insert the words "and on furlough or sick leave."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read, as follows:

On page 18, line 25, after the word "officers," insert "noncommissioned officers and soldiers."

On page 19, line 2, after the word "orders," strike out the words "and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers" and insert "and on furlough or sick leave."

Mr. HULL. I did not catch that amendment. I should like to have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HULL. I, of course, could not raise the point of order to the proposition transposing the words, but the gentleman's further amendment is a change of existing law and changes the wording of this; and, as gentlemen are so anxious to keep us down to the exact wording, I shall raise the point of order, if he insists on that.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Why, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on that point of order. It is a mere amendment of the words and a declaration of existing law, as I understand existing law to be.

It takes up the question of furlough. This is a matter of equity and fairness. If a man dies at Chickamauga he is entitled to be sent home and buried. If he is sent home sick and dies there, I can not see why he is not entitled to the same consideration. I can not see the proper ground for such a variation in the ruling. Now, this is the proper place to put the amendment, it seems to me. It is about what I had intended to do, only if the chairman will read that—the latter part of the sentence in the bill practically means nothing—where it says "and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers." This simply extends it to take in those persons who actually should be taken in—men who die on furlough or on sick leave. It will make no difference in the amount of the appropriation required, and it must be germane to the subject. There is nothing in this that prevents us from making an enlargement of this class, and I can not see how the point of order can possibly be sustained.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the language of the bill follows the item in the bill for the past twenty years at least in regard to this matter of the construction of the section, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN] adds to that words which must in the nature of things be new legislation or utterly worthless.

The CHAIRMAN. The present law does not provide for soldiers on furlough or sick leave.

Mr. HULL. The present law provides just as I have read. It does not use those words.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask the gentleman whether, because it has been in bills for a number of years, that is any particular reason why we should conform to the exact language?

Mr. HULL. It seemed to be so held yesterday by several gentlemen on this floor in regard to what I regarded very important matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any provision of law with reference to soldiers on furlough and sick leave at the present time?

Mr. HULL. My understanding is that the appropriation bills as passed have been the law, and that they follow the law exactly as to what should be done.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Then, Mr. Chairman, if that is the case, if the appropriation bill passed now becomes a law, and if that is proper, why should not this be embodied into it?

Mr. HULL. The general law fixes the compensation for burial. I will say to the gentleman that I have been anxiously contending for the right of the Committee on Military Affairs to adjust the wording from year to year of different provisions of the bill, but I have always been overruled, and if it is to be applied all through I raise the point of order on the other.

Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in response to your inquiry as to whether there was a provision for the burial of soldiers——

The CHAIRMAN. That was not what the Chair was asking for. It was whether they were entitled to traveling expenses while on furlough or sick leave.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. This is simply the burial expenses where they died on furlough. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN (reading). "Traveling under orders and on furlough or sick leave."

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. But above that it comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there at present any provision for paying expenses while they are traveling on furlough or sick leave?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Yes, but not after they have reached the place of their destination.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. If they died traveling, as I understand it, this bill covers it; but if they reached their destination it does not cover it.

Mr. HULL. The Government has never paid the expenses of a man on furlough except in the case of the civil war where they enlisted as an organization and had thirty days' leave, and the Government transported the regiment back to their homes and then back to the field; but there never has been any other case where men receiving a furlough can get their traveling expenses on the furlough.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that when the soldier dies at the camp or while traveling in the service he is buried? Now, if he is sent on a furlough or sick leave it is not true, and why should there be a difference made?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the point before the Chair. The question is whether it is obnoxious to the rule; and it seems to the Chair that if it is not obnoxious to the rule, it is not necessary. If it is existing law, it is already provided for. If it is not existing law, it is obnoxious to the rule and can not go on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. But I understand we are making existing law here in regard to that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same: Provided, That no part of the money so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel or for quarters to officers or enlisted men, $3,000,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, that was a misprint in that respect. The words "three million dollars" should be stricken out of line 9 and inserted after the word "same," in line 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "three million dollars," in line 9, and insert them before the word "same," in line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to strike out the comma (,) after the word "fuel," in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment on the same page, to line 7, after the word "dollars," which has just been inserted by the chairman of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 7, after the word "dollars," insert:

"Provided, That of said sum there shall be expended $75,000 for continuing construction of permanent buildings at Fort Riley."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order and let me make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I reserve it, if the gentleman wishes to make a statement.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I do.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the point of order will apply in this case; but before I address myself to that subject I want to ask particular attention to the matter. This is one of the most important and largest military reservations in the United States, as there are 22,000 acres of land and more than $750,000 worth of buildings on it that have been put there since 1887. It was established under the direction of General Sheridan at the time he was Lieutenant-General, for the purpose of establishing there a training school for cavalry and artillery. It was intended, I believe, as a twelve-company post of cavalry, with the addition of five batteries of light artillery.

Buildings have been constructed there from time to time for the purpose of completing the post for the uses for which it was intended. There yet remains, according to the original plan of General Sheridan and the plan which was adopted in establishing the post buildings, enough to amount to $250,000 to complete the plan. During the lifetime of the late Senator Plumb careful attention was paid to the appropriations from year to year for the purpose of continuing the construction of these buildings; but since his death no appropriation has been set apart by the Department for this purpose; no use has been made of this item in the annual bill for the purpose of continuing the construction of buildings at this post.

In the Fifty-fourth Congress, by an item in the sundry bill, $75,000 was given for the purpose of continuing the construction at this post. There is no question but that the construction of these buildings should be continued until the post is completed. There is no doubt about that matter in the mind of General Miles or in the minds of the officers of the Army who are acquainted with the post. In the disposition of these funds placed in the hands of the Secretary of War by this item I do not know what influences prevail, but it happens that Fort Leavenworth is also situated in my State, in the First Congressional district. That Congressional district is represented in Congress by two Senators and, at the present time, by two members of Congress. Their influence usually prevails in the disposition of funds for the purpose of carrying on the building at Fort Leavenworth, and Fort Riley is allowed to stand idle.

Now, recently, since the committee have considered this bill, one siege battery has been ordered to Fort Riley. Day before yesterday I called on Colonel Miller at the War Department, who has charge of the construction of barracks and quarters, and he gave me a memorandum. He said there would be needed barracks for the siege battery, stables for the siege battery, a gun shed, and one double set of officers' quarters. The aggregate estimate, according to the original estimate of the buildings required for the completion of this post for these items which he named to me, amounts to $100,000. The estimate for the buildings that are needed to complete that post are in a statement which I will have printed with my remarks, but which I need not read now. I will say, however, for the cavalry quarters there is needed $100,000, for the artillery $107,000, and for the medical department $19,965, a total amount of between $240,000 and $250,000 for the completion of the entire post according to the original plan.

Now, it is a very small item to set apart $75,000 at one session of Congress and $75,000 at another session until that post is completed. The statement of Colonel Miller to me was that $100,000 would be necessary for the completion of the buildings for the siege battery which has been ordered there, and that battery has been ordered there as a part of the permanent garrison. It is for the purpose of training the men in the use of different arms of the service from time to time, and while the battery is not to be removed, the soldiers are sent there for the purpose of drill and training.

I want to state a little further concerning the post that no post in the United States is better equipped with the same amount of expenditure. As I said, I think it is the largest military reservation which the Government owns. There are 22,000 acres of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I would like to have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks for three minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The statement of the War Department is that the horses for the cavalry and artillery are maintained with less expense than in any other post in the United States. The fact is, the post has on it quantities of native stone, which is used for rubble work, and the buildings have been constructed for less money than any other buildings of the same size and quality at any post in the United States.

Now, I know it is not a gracious thing to ask this committee to distribute the fund, to apportion it to this post and that post, but

I think the committee is justified in this instance in appropriating this much for continuing the construction of this post, in view of the fact that the siege battery has been ordered there at this time, which was not known to the committee at the time they had the bill under consideration. I do not think the chairman will object to it. If I had had the opportunity I would have presented the matter to the committee before the bill was reported. It is not subject to the point of order which the gentleman has raised. It is not a new appropriation. It is merely directing the Secretary of War to segregate from his annual appropriation for this purpose this amount for the construction of the buildings at Fort Riley.

The committee has a perfect right, and Congress has a perfect right, to direct that matter. It is not subject to the point of order that it is new legislation. The post has been under construction since the year 1887, and it is not completed according to the original plans, and it will not be until all the quarters that I have recited have been constructed. On that I think the point of order is not well taken.

On the other point, the wisdom of directing the Secretary to segregate this appropriation, I appeal to the House for that direction, for the reason that if it is not done there are Senators and members of Congress to use their influence that the amount shall be segregated after the appropriation goes into the hands of the War Department and use it for the continuation of construction at other places to the neglect of Fort Riley, which needs it.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have said all that I desire to say upon this matter.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Are you afraid to risk the Secretary of War?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. For the reason I have stated, that there are Senators whose interest is in other places and members of Congress who are interested in other posts to use their influence with the Secretary of War to secure additional buildings at their posts, while the district in which Fort Riley is located has only one member of Congress to speak for this post.

Mr. SIMS. If we can not risk him in this instance, we should have to parcel it all out.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. That, of course, would be the objection. The House must use its own discretion in the matter. The committee might have used their discretion if the matter had been presented at the proper time. I think this is an instance in which the House can properly use its discretion in this matter, and I do not believe the chairman of the committee will object.

The following is the paper referred to by Mr. CALDERHEAD:

When the school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery was established here it was intended that the garrison should consist of one regiment of cavalry and not exceeding five batteries of light artillery, and the construction of the post has been carried on with the view of providing for a garrison of that size.

To complete the post as thus planned the following buildings are required:

For the cavalry:
2 sets field officers' quarters	$14,000.00
1 double set officers' quarters	12,765.00
3 double sets noncommissioned officers' quarters	11,461.00
1 set band barracks	5,000.00
7 stables	60,000.00
7 workshops	8,400.00
Total	112,053.00
For the artillery:
3 double sets officers' quarters	38,300.00
2 barracks	42,000.00
3 gun sheds	24,000.00
3 workshops	3,600.00
Total	107,900.00
Medical department:
1 field officer's quarters	7,200.00
1 double set officers' quarters	12,765.00
Total	19,965.00
	240,419.76

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, but I am compelled to object to the amendment. I think the committee would have a right to go through all the posts in the United States and make a specific appropriation for each one. And we have repeatedly adopted provisos of this kind. I do not care to discuss the amendment unless it is held by the Chair to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems perfectly clear to the Chair that the rule prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills does not preclude this amendment, but that the amendment is a provision which should be carried on the sundry civil rather than the military bill.

Mr. HULL. Provisions of this kind have repeatedly been placed on the military bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman is correct about that, the amendment would be in order here, because it is not new legislation; it is clearly a provision for the continuance of a work in progress.

Mr. HULL. Provisions of this kind have repeatedly been put on the Army appropriation bill. For instance, in the last Congress we made a limitation on the appropriation for hospitals by providing that a certain amount should be expended at Hot Springs, Ark. At one time since I have been a member of the committee there was a proviso adopted that a certain amount of the appropriation for barracks and quarters should be expended at Columbus, Ohio. I could recall, if necessary, many other instances. I suppose that we would have the right to appropriate a lump sum, letting the War Department distribute it as it pleased, or we would have the right to take up all the posts of the United States and make a specific appropriation for each, would we not?

The CHAIRMAN. The understanding of the Chair is that the appropriation for military posts has always heretofore been carried upon the sundry civil bill, not the military bill.

Mr. HULL. I think that ever since the appropriation bills were distributed among different committees, we have incorporated provisions of this kind in the item for barracks and quarters for troops, storehouses, etc. I do not say that some appropriations of this class are not carried upon the other bill, because I find that the Appropriations Committee frequently reports appropriations on the sundry civil bill for almost anything on earth that seems to them proper.

But we have jurisdiction of the question of barracks and quarters; the language of this bill gives us that jurisdiction. We have always had it from the time the appropriation bills were distributed among the different committees.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may interrupt the gentleman from Iowa, he desires to say that in the sundry civil bill for 1896 there is a provision "to continue the construction of buildings at the Fort Riley, Kans., military post, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $75,000."

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The Chair will allow me to say that I was at that time a member of Congress and made an appeal to have that appropriation adopted on the sundry civil bill. I want to say, however, that at that time I felt that the jurisdiction was entirely with this committee. My proposition happened to come in accidentally, as it were, in connection with an appropriation asked for by Mr. Hyde, of Washington, for the post at Spokane. Upon his appeal that appropriation was granted; and afterwards the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations consented to an amendment by which each of these posts obtained an appropriation, Mr. Hyde obtaining his appropriation for the post at Spokane and I obtaining the appropriation for Fort Riley.

I think the truth is that this is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of this committee. As the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL] has just said, they might report separate appropriations for each of the military posts, according to their own discretion. It is a matter for their judgment. I am asking this appropriation at this time for the reason I have stated, and I urge earnestly that it is for the purpose of continuing construction work at one of the best and most important military posts in the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Was not this at the outset specifically authorized in some separate bill?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no. It follows the same language as other appropriations of the same class, except where some limitation or proviso has been added; but there is no law authorizing this particular language.

I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that these matters come up on a question of jurisdiction. I assume that what the Chair now has in his mind is the question of jurisdiction between different committees, not the language.

The CHAIRMAN. That is it. There is no question that this is for the continuation of a work now in progress; and as such it is entirely competent for the Committee of the Whole to make this appropriation on some of the appropriation bills. The only question is which is the proper bill.

Mr. HULL. If the Chair will look back through all the appropriation bills reported from the Military Committee since the distribution of the appropriation bills, he will find in all of them substantially the language of this bill, with the exception at different periods now and then of a provision that a certain amount of the appropriation should be expended at some particular point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas provides for continuing the construction of permanent buildings, whereas the body of the bill provides simply for the construction of temporary buildings and for repairs, not for continuing the construction of permanent buildings.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I would not undertake to limit the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations and say what it might or might not admit in the sundry civil bill, only that it has always been perfectly clear to my mind that this committee had jurisdiction of this subject; and that if it had a right to make appropriations for the construction of temporary buildings it also had a right to make appropriations for the construction of permanent buildings, and it certainly had the right to make an appropriation to continue the construction of buildings at posts that were already established.

If it has a right to appropriate at all for the construction of barracks and quarters at any military post in the United States, it certainly has the right to appropriate for the construction of barracks whether temporary or permanent, and it has the right to segregate any item from the amount of the appropriation at any time for any post. As the chairman has just said, it has been done from time to time in different instances. If it had not been perfectly clear to my mind that it had the right to do that thing in this instance, I would not have troubled the committee or the chairman with the proposition; but I believe this is the proper place to ask for this distribution of that fund, and I ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will overrule the point of order as raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, then I want to say that I am opposed to the amendment. I do not believe that we should go into the business of segregating these items without any information whatever from the War Department. We have had no information from the Department leading us in any way to take up this question. The gentleman from Kansas spoke to me some time ago about it, and I requested him to get a recommendation from the War Department in order to strengthen his position.

Now, he has submitted this morning an estimate of what it will cost to continue this work; but, Mr. Chairman, that question could not be determined by us because we do not know whether it is necessary to continue the work at this time or not. I hope this amendment will be voted down, because, without any information whatever before the committee, without any information to-day before the House, except the gentleman's statement which I do not challenge, but which is not official from the proper authorities, I think we shall be entering into the wrong course of legislation to attempt to segregate these items that are appropriated in a lump sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment. I agree fully with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been the custom to set aside in each of these appropriation bills a certain amount to be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the improvement of these various posts. Now, this practice has been adopted, as I understand it, in order that the Secretary of War, in his discretion and with the information at his command, might put this money in the different places where it is most needed. Now, if there is any particular merit in this request of the gentleman from Kansas, why, I am sure the Committee on Military Affairs would consider a bill to appropriate money to continue the construction of this post, and it should receive favorable consideration in this House, just like other measures which are pending for that purpose; but for this committee to incorporate in this bill a limitation upon the power of the Secretary of War, a reflection upon his discretion, in his official action, is something that it appears to me should not be done. I would leave it in his discretion and permit him to expend this money.

Now, the gentleman says this post requires it particularly. Nobody knows that better than the Secretary of War does, if that be true, and there is no reason why we should favor this particular post to the disadvantage of all the other posts in the country. Now, there may be special reasons for it, but I can not see them. I would say to the gentleman that right in the city of New York, in the borough of Brooklyn, is situated Fort Hamilton, one of the most important posts in this country—one of the defenses of the city of New York. At that post immense sums of money have been expended in perfecting the batteries, but the quarters for officers and men are hardly fit for dogs. Now, if you want to limit the power of the Secretary in this matter, there would be the proper place to compel him to expend the money, so that these men, in one of the most important defenses of the country, could exist with some degree of comfort and security, and for that reason I am opposed to any special favoritism of this kind for any post.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition close in ten minutes. That certainly ought to be enough, and I am perfectly willing to say in five minutes, if nobody objects.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I would like to have a little more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this question close in five minutes.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Make it ten.

Mr. HULL. In ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I wish to say in reply that I do not intend to cast any reflection upon the Secretary of War or anybody in the War Department as to the manner of their distribution of the funds that are placed in their hands for the construction of military posts or the completion of them. Congress never reflects upon their judgment in this matter, and there is no reflection on their judgment in doing this thing. Year after year the Military Committee gives to the Quartermaster-General or to the War Department from two to three or four million dollars to be used for the construction of barracks and quarters and for the completion of military posts. It puts in his hands a fund; and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will give me his attention, I will say to him that it puts in the hands of the Quartermaster-General a fund for the purpose of keeping up Fort Hamilton, as well as all the other forts, and the Secretary of War or the Quartermaster-General, under his direction, has expended more money in repairs at Fort Hamilton in the last three years than I ask for the purpose of carrying on the construction of permanent buildings at this fort.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Fort Hamilton has cost more money in any twenty years of its existence——

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The money has been expended for batteries and defenses, and not for buildings and quarters. As far as I can learn, there has been no money expended for that purpose——

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. "The gentleman from New York" has the figures.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Here in the RECORD, in the speech made the day before yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN], is a statement of expenditures for buildings within the last five years, showing $96,000 expended for that purpose within that time at Fort Hamilton. At Fort Sheridan the sum of $715,000 has been expended; at Spokane, $205,000; at Fort Bliss, in Texas, $358,000; at Fort Harrison, $366,000; at Fort Logan, in Colorado, $622,000; at Fort McPherson, in Georgia, $722,000; and at Fort Crook, Nebr., $722,000.

These moneys have been distributed under the direction of the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General, according to their judgment. Now, while Congress has implicit confidence in their integrity and in their judgment as to the necessities of these various cases, it remains the fact that the final responsibility is upon Congress, and we leave it to the Military Committee.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. He made the statement that $96,000 was expended for buildings at Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Does the gentleman know what that was expended for?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. "Cost of buildings constructed since January 1, 1895, or under construction on March 19, 1900"——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. But that includes a lot of temporary structures put up there in 1898——

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I will just read the list and then you will see.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I have the list before me.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. If the gentleman has the list he will see that the bulk of that money was for repairs to buildings that were already there, and that was disbursed and expended according to the discretion of the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. How much of it was for repairing permanent barracks?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. If the gentleman has the items there he can easily see by reading them.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. It says, for temporary barracks, $17,000, and for plumbing in the same, $4,200 more.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. It does not say temporary works alone. It also says—

For forage storehouse, $7,180.41; wagon shed, $2,500.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. It says—

Six temporary pavillion hospital wards, $17,124.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. And right opposite that it says—

Four double set noncommissioned and staff officers' quarters, $17,537.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. You state the use part of the money was put to, and a part of it was not.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I certainly wanted to be fair, and I know the gentleman does.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Now, how much has been spent on the post you speak of?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Not a solitary cent in the last two years, except what was spent for the repair of the roofs and ordinary repairs.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. You have talked about the $96,000 that has been spent for Fort Hamilton. Now, how much was spent on that fort?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Within the last ten years there has only been expended $75,000 at Fort Riley in the construction of buildings, and this was obtained in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. And how old a post is it?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. It is not a question as to how old the post is; the question is, What is the use of the fort there? It was established as a training school for cavalry and artillery, and is now used for the training of a siege battery in connection with it. It is one of the permanent posts of the Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. You will only consume my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Certainly, if he does not take too much of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I would like to ask if the gentleman thinks it is more necessary to spend a sum of money to put up buildings where soldiers are trained or quarters where they have to live and care for the defenses of the country?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. There is no question about that. Will the gentleman be candid enough to say when Fort Hamilton was established?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. The memory of man goes not to the contrary.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Exactly.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. And the people are living there now as they were.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I say that Fort Hamilton is one of the oldest posts of the country, and there has not been a year from its foundation that it has ever lacked the necessary appropriation through Congress or by the necessary distribution from the War Department—not at any time. The very fact that within the last two years more money has been expended in the construction of buildings there and in the repairs of buildings and quarters there than have been expended on the post at Fort Riley within the last ten years——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Does not the gentleman know that these buildings were temporary buildings for the accommodation of sick soldiers?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Seventeen thousand dollars were, but $17,500 is for permanent headquarters for noncommissioned officers, and the remaining items for permanent buildings. But I do not intend to detract anything from the merits of Fort Hamilton. I am only asking for a fair distribution; and I say now that it is entirely within the power of the committee and Congress to direct the Secretary of War where the money shall be expended, and a double responsibility is with the committee. It was not necessary that I should bring to the committee as a private member of this House or as a private citizen—it was not necessary that I should bring to the committee notice of the demands of these several posts. The committee is organized for the purpose of ascertaining what is required at these several posts, and for the purpose of directing the distribution of its appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I have only two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The committee is organized for the purpose of determining what is required. It was the duty of the committee to know that the post at Fort Riley was not completed according to the plans that were authorized in 1887; it was the duty of the committee to ascertain whether the construction of the buildings had been carried on there according to the original plans or not.

Whether it was by the direction of the Secretary of War or by the direction of the Quartermaster-General, who supervises the buildings, it was the duty of the committee to ascertain whether that post had been completed according to the plans and directions upon which it was established. And the final responsibility and duty is on Congress to say where and how its military posts shall be constructed. Congress has heretofore directed by its own act that the post at Fort Riley shall be completed for a post where soldiers shall be trained in the use of the different arms of the service, and it is now the duty of Congress to make the appropriation to complete the post, and I ask this amendment of this bill for this purpose.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted by order of the committee, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: Transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses for recruiting;" of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster's stores, from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots, and from these depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and subsistence stores from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as trainmasters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; for procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings, at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of Army transportations lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act, a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at the time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service, $30,000,000: Provided, That $100,000 of this sum can be used in Alaska, and shall be immediately available, for the construction of military roads and bridges in Alaska; and said appropriation shall be continuous until said sum shall be expended.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the provisos to this paragraph.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. McRAE. I want to make some inquiries about the provisos, and therefore reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LEVY. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman from New York desired to debate the proposition. The committee will first dispose of the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. It is only to the proviso to that section; I want some explanation of it. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman from Iowa to explain the matter.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order, for we are now legislating in this section for military roads for troops; but I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a communication received from the War Department, which sends it to the Committee on Military Affairs to put in the proviso in this way in place of letting it go in the other way.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 12, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the War Department has this day transmitted to Congress, through the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, an estimate of appropriation for the sum of $100,000 for the construction of military roads and bridges in Alaska under the title of "Transportation of the Army and its supplies."

It is requested that the subject of this estimate be considered in connection with the estimates for the support of the Army now pending before your committee; and as the working season is so short in this region, it is also requested that the appropriation be made available immediately and be continuous until work is completed or appropriation exhausted.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 12th instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation for "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," being for the construction of military roads and bridges in Alaska, $100,000, the same to be made immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Respectfully,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 12, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith for transmission to Congress an estimate ($100,000) of appropriation for "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," for the construction of military roads and bridges in Alaska, and to request that the funds, if appropriated, may be made available for immediate expenditure and remain available until the appropriation is exhausted.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 13, 1900.

SIR: This office has learned that request has been made to Congress for an appropriation "for the purpose of connecting headquarters Department of Alaska, at St. Michael, by military telegraph and cable lines, with Fort Egbert, Cape Nome, and other military stations in Alaska."

General Randall, department commander, informs me that it will be necessary to construct roads in connection with above lines, and also to build other military roads. It is therefore recommended that an appropriation of $100,000 be requested "for the construction of military roads and bridges in Alaska."

As the working season is so short in this region, this work will probably extend over two or three fiscal years, and it is requested the appropriation be made available immediately and be continuous until work is completed or appropriation exhausted.

Estimate in regular form is transmitted herewith.

Respectfully,

M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, by the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Transportation of the Army and its supplies—

For the construction of such roads and bridges in Alaska as may be found necessary for military purposes in that Territory (submitted) $100,000

NOTE.—It is respectfully recommended that this sum be added to the $38,578,547 already estimated for "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," and that the language of that appropriation be made to provide that $100,000 shall be immediately available for such construction of roads and bridges, and remain available until exhausted.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the provision which makes this appropriation continuous is beyond all question subject to a point of order. There ought not to be any policy initiated here which will make appropriations immediately available and continuous. Appropriations should be for the next fiscal year; and if the road is not completed by the 1st of July, 1901, other money can be appropriated. I do not question the necessity for it, for I do not know anything about it. I do say that such appropriation should not be made for Alaska when it is not made for other places. If the gentleman will modify his amendment and strike out the words "continuous appropriations"——

Mr. HULL. This came to us after the bill had been reported to the House, with an estimate, and also with the draft of a bill to be introduced independent of the appropriation bill, or, if put on the appropriation bill, it was suggested that it ought to be in addition to what we had already appropriated. The committee examined that matter and believed the appropriation already reported was ample for the current fiscal year, and would be ample with this amount taken out. Now, Mr. Chairman, the only question, as I understand it, which the gentleman raises on the point of order would be that to make it continuous and immediately available.

Mr. McRAE. I think it is all subject to a point of order, but that is all I insist on.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe the part outside of those words would be subject to a point of order. The season up there is very short.

Mr. McRAE. The fact that the season is short seems to me to be no reason for making the appropriation continuous.

Mr. HULL. The appropriation in the bill each year comes in too late for them to get the full benefit of the work. For instance, this appropriation goes into effect from the 1st day of June, and they ought to be at work as soon as this, or as soon as they are able to get to work, to take advantage of the short season. Therefore this provision making the appropriation continuous and available is desirable; but if the gentleman wants to limit it to two fiscal years, I would not object to that. There is a general law that all appropriations are covered back into the Treasury if not used in two years.

Mr. McRAE. I think when we make it immediately available that is sufficient. If there is any pressing necessity for it, they can certainly spend $100,000 in a year and a half. It is against the well-established policy to make appropriations continuous, and I now object to changing that wise policy, rule, and law.

Mr. HULL. I am willing to strike out the words "continuously available."

Mr. McRAE. Strike out all after the word "and?"

Mr. HULL. All after the word "Alaska," in line 24, page 23.

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. HULL. That would make it available for the balance of this fiscal year and for the next fiscal year, when Congress can further legislate in regard to it.

Mr. McRAE. No doubt it will all be spent by that time. Then, Mr. Chairman, with that understanding, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 23, all after the word "Alaska" down to and including the word "expended," in line 2, on page 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, in line 12, insert after the word "ocean," the following:

"That from and after the 30th day of June, 1900, all the powers exercised and duties performed by the Secretary of War in relation to Army transport, their officers and crews, shall be exercised or performed by the Secretary of the Navy, and said transports shall form an auxiliary of the naval service of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon the requisition of the Secretary of War, provide for the transportation of all troops, stores, and accouterments of the Army as may be necessary, the responsibilities of such transportation to begin at water's edge at embarkation, and end at water's edge of destination: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect or impair the present powers conferred or duties devolved by the laws of the United States, upon the Secretary of War regarding the transportation of said troops, stores, and accouterments, by land."

Mr. STEELE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly obvious that that is obnoxious to a point of order, which I make.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GROSVENOR). The Chair thinks the amendment should be read in full to the House.

Mr. HULL. Does the Chair desire that it shall be read through?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. STEELE. It is perfectly obvious that it is a change of existing law.

Mr. LEVY. I think it is germane to the question.

Mr. STEELE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order temporarily for the purpose of having the amendment read through.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War, at the close of the fiscal year, shall transfer from the War Department to the Navy Department all Army transports, together with all records appertaining thereto, their appurtenances, and all things belonging or pertaining to said vessels.

SEC. 3. That transports belonging to the United States shall be officered and manned from the Navy: Provided, That when transports are chartered by the United States the officers and crews thereof in whole or in part may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be included in the charter party.

SEC. 4. That from and after the passage of this act there shall be established in the Navy Department a bureau of transports.

SEC. 5. That the chief of bureau of transports shall be appointed from the list of line officers of the Navy not below the grade of commander in the same manner and under the same provisions as other chiefs of bureaus in the Navy Department. He shall perform, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, all executive duties relating to transportation afloat which are or which may be hereafter placed under the control of the Navy Department.

SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the Navy Department to provide vessels for the transportation of officers and men, as well as of other persons attached to the Army or Navy, and of all stores, equipment, and accouterment for both branches of the service as may be necessary; to prepare plans for the quick conversion of merchant vessels to the needs of the transport service, and to provide proper regulations to govern the transport service.

SEC. 7. That all contracts entered into by the Secretary of War for the maintenance, construction, and repair of the Army transports in force on the 30th day of June, 1900, shall remain in force the same as if made by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. STEELE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very clear that the point of order should be sustained. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing, and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning, when necessary; for equipage, and for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge, for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $3,000,000: Provided, That on application of the governor of any State or Territory the Secretary of War is authorized to replace the quartermaster stores which the volunteers from said State or Territory carried into the service of the United States Army during the recent war with Spain, and which have been retained by the United States exclusive of such stores as have been allowed for in the office of the Auditor for the War Department and such award accepted by a State.

Mr. HULL. I move to amend by striking out, in line 17, page 24, the word "stores" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "supplies." "Stores" is not a proper word to be used in that connection. "Stores" applies to the Ordnance Department, and "supplies" to the Quartermaster's Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I move further, to amend by striking out the word "stores," in line 21, page 24, and inserting "supplies."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I am instructed by the committee to offer a further amendment—to insert after the word "million," in line 15, the words "five hundred thousand;" increasing the amount of this appropriation on account of the provision for returning these quartermaster's supplies to the several States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including, also, all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., except quarters for the officers, $250,000: Provided, That for the purpose of improving and repairing the Army and Navy General Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the reconstructing and refitting the interior of the bath house, for the construction of a boiler house and the purchase of boilers, for establishing ice and electric plants, and for the construction of a reservoir with a capacity of 150,000 gallons, the sum of $55,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the foregoing may be used, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MAHON. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee how many soldiers there are in this hospital at Hot Springs?

Mr. HULL. I think about 70. The Surgeon-General's report will give the gentleman the exact information. Let me say to the gentleman that the President issued an Executive order admitting to that hospital soldiers discharged from the Volunteer Army.

Mr. MAHON. I want to call the attention of the committee to the construction of this section. The first appropriation is $250,000. The Secretary of War can apply all that, or nearly all of it, if he sees fit, to this hospital at Hot Springs.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no. The law prohibits the erection of any of these hospitals or buildings at a cost exceeding $20,000.

Mr. MAHON. A good deal of money is being expended on this institution. If the committee thinks this expenditure absolutely necessary, I will not object. But I want to understand the reason.

Mr. HULL. The report of the Surgeon-General and the papers received from the War Department ask that this appropriation be made.

Mr. MAHON. We are spending a good deal of money on this institution. There is in this bill a specific appropriation of $55,000 for it. Now, if we need this sort of a hospital to accommodate 60 or 70 men, all right; but at this time, when we are making these enormous appropriations for our armies in the field, these other matters, I think, might wait. Why roll up the amount of this bill by these large appropriations? I move to strike out the whole of this proviso appropriating $55,000. I think that out of the $250,000 provided for in the other part of the paragraph there will be enough money for this hospital.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. MAHON, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 5, down to and including the words "Secretary of War," in line 15.

Mr. MAHON. If this hospital needs further expenditure, let it be taken out of the $250,000 provided for in the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. I call attention to the fact that this is not an appropriation of $250,000 for the naval hospital at Hot Springs. It is for construction and repair of hospitals at military posts, and as a matter of fact only $55,000 of that sum is appropriated for the hospital at Hot Springs.

Mr. MAHON. A few minutes ago the gentleman from Kansas wanted to appropriate something like $3,000,000 to be expended in his district; and an objection was raised that this appropriation should be distributed according to the discretion of the Department; that it was not proper to pick out any particular institution and appropriate for it specifically.

Mr. HAY. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the whole of this money was for the hospital at Hot Springs.

Mr. MAHON. Let me read:

For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and including, also, all expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., except quarters for the officers, $250,000.

The hospital at Hot Springs is thus provided for in the first part of the paragraph; and then you go on and make an additional appropriation——

Mr. HULL. No; we do not.

Mr. HAY. Nobody who understands the English language should put such a construction on this provision——

Mr. MAHON. Now, just wait. The bill reads:

Provided, That for the purpose of improving and repairing the Army and Navy General Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the reconstructing and refitting the interior of the bath house, for the construction of a boiler house and the purchase of boilers, for establishing ice and electric plants, and for the construction of a reservoir with a capacity of 150,000 gallons, the sum of $55,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the foregoing may be used, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Now, you propose that this $55,000 shall come out of the general appropriation of $250,000. Is that so, or is that an addition?

Mr. HAY. Fifty-five thousand dollars of the $250,000 is appropriated for the hospital at Hot Springs.

Mr. MAHON. You appropriated before for a hospital at Hot Springs.

Mr. HAY. The proviso provides how much of that appropriation shall be set apart for that particular hospital.

Mr. MAHON. That is exactly what I am getting at.

Mr. HAY. No; the gentleman said the whole thing was for the one single hospital.

Mr. MAHON. The committee, a short time ago, opposed the setting apart of any portion of a general appropriation for a particular place.

Mr. HAY. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, but I can not yield for a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has the floor.

Mr. MAHON. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I will take it again.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; the gentleman can do that when he has the opportunity. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor and yielded for a question.

Mr. MAHON. I had the floor, and the gentleman asked me a question and I yielded.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in error. The gentleman from Virginia had been recognized, and yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I will get the floor again.

Mr. HAY. I will yield now for a question, if the gentleman wishes to ask a question.

Mr. MAHON. I want to ask this question: Did you not, a while ago, oppose the taking of any of the $3,000,000 for buildings at fortifications and applying it specifically to Fort Riley because you said it ought to be left to the discretion of the Secretary? Now, this is a provision that a certain part of the general appropriation for construction and repair of hospitals shall be set apart and used for a particular hospital.

Mr. HAY. Because this is a very different proposition.

Mr. MAHON. Not at all.

Mr. HAY. The committee last year made an appropriation, which it was understood should, a part of it, be for the hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; but the general law was so worded that the amount which was intended to be used there could not be used. So this is put in this form for the purpose of allowing this sum to be used at Hot Springs. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to make a little statement it may simplify the matter. We made an appropriation for hospitals, including the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, of $250,000. Now, this is on a different basis to the other, for this reason: There is a law upon the statute books providing that the Department shall not expend to exceed $20,000 on any one hospital without express authority of law, and this proviso comes in and provides that so much of this $250,000 shall be expended at Hot Springs. This is on a different basis again, because I have the report here of the Surgeon-General on the proposition, in which he says:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
January 15, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War. This bill is based upon an estimate made by the commanding officer of the Army and Navy General Hospital, as shown by the inclosed communication. In my opinion the improvements asked for are necessary, and I recommend approval of the bill.

GEO. M. STERNBERG,
Surgeon-General, United States Army.

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 27, 1900.

Respectfully returned to Hon. J. A. T. HULL, chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the foregoing indorsement of the Surgeon-General, United States Army, and to the accompanying papers therein referred to.

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Last year we started out and put in 70 new cots to make room for the volunteer soldiers that are admitted there. We then gave an appropriation of $25,000. That has been expended, and the Surgeon-General says this amount is necessary to complete and perfect the hospital. That is all there is of it.

Mr. MAHON. If that hospital is to opened up to the volunteer soldiers, I have no objection. I know it is a good place, and I am perfectly willing that the money shall go there; but to expend a thousand dollars for every man you have got there, as you have been doing, it appears to me is a pretty expensive business, and that you ought to get more men in there.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will hear my colleague [Mr. LITTLE] who represents the district in which the city of Hot Springs is located. I am certain he will be able to convince him that this improvement should be made.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection?

Mr. MAHON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Then I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn, if there be no objection, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, including the purchase of necessary books of reference and periodicals, $10,000; and the disbursing officer of the Medical Department, at Washington, D. C., shall be credited with all payments from the appropriations for the library for the years ending June 30, 1898, June 30, 1899, and June 30, 1900, heretofore or to be hereafter made by him for such publications upon accounts approved by the Surgeon-General.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that paragraph, for the purpose of inquiring what the language means. The language, as I understand it, beginning with line 7, and down to the end of the paragraph, is new, and I confess I do not understand the purpose of it.

Mr. HULL. I have not the testimony taken at the hearings before me, but as I remember it, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will perhaps remember it better than I do, it was simply a question of disbursement; that the disbursing officer was frequently held up until he had the approval of certain other officers, where the matter of fact, the Surgeon-General was the sole judge of the expenditure for books to be placed in the library of his office. I have not paid any particular attention to it because it was a small matter, but it refers entirely to the library of the Surgeon-General.

Mr. McRAE. It seems to me this proposition is to pay for some things that have been already purchased, and which is not allowed under the present law. If that is true, let us know the facts.

Mr. HULL. It is simply a question of the matter of expenditure by the Surgeon-General for books for the library of his office. It can be looked up. My recollection is that the disbursing officer's accounts are held up on account of some technicality as to the disbursement of the fund for the purchase of the books during the years referred to.

Mr. McRAE. Were the committee satisfied that the money had been properly expended?

Mr. HULL. The committee are satisfied on that point.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is no division in the committee about that.

Mr. McRAE. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of material for use of United States Engineer School and for instruction of engineer troops at Fort Totten, Willets Point, in their special duties as sappers and miners; for land and submarine mines, pontoniers, torpedo drill, and signaling, and for travel expenses of officers on journeys approved by the Chief of Engineers and made for the purpose of instruction, $1,500.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to reserve a point of order against the last three lines of this paragraph, for the purpose of inquiring why that provision is inserted. I refer to lines 9, 10, and 11, on page 27, reading as follows:

And for travel expenses of officers on journeys approved by the Chief of Engineers and made for the purpose of instruction, $1,500.

That seems to be new language. I should like to know why it is inserted.

Mr. HULL. Well, as far as I am concerned, I do not remember the details of it. I think we simply followed the Book of Estimates, without any particular discussion of the matter.

Mr. McRAE. I think the gentleman will find that it is entirely new. There ought to be a reason for inserting that language, and unless it can be given it should go out.

Mr. HULL. There has been no amendment talked of relating to that.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The officers would get their mileage under the law without that provision.

Mr. HULL. But, as I remember it now, this would give them, on that kind of travel, their actual expenses. These officers of the Engineer Corps are sent from one place to another, and where they are sent short distances and then kept at a place for several days before they can complete their investigation and report their mileage does not cover their actual expenses. A man going from Philadelphia to Baltimore, or from Washington to Baltimore, and remaining there for several days on necessary work, would not find his mileage sufficient to pay his actual expenses. The Engineer Corps are a corps by themselves. They have charge of this river and harbor business, and in my judgment this language will give them their actual expenses, when ordered to report, under the language of the bill.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The same difficulty runs all through the Army service. Officers have to travel upon their mileage and stay away upon duty and subsist upon their pay.

Mr. HULL. This is when they are sent on journeys approved by the Chief of Engineers. The idea is that the mileage account of the officer does not pay the actual expense.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me for a moment——

Mr. HULL. I do not remember exactly the details of the statement which was made to us on the subject.

Mr. HAY. The object of it was to provide funds for the officers of the engineers to travel for the purpose of instruction, which you will find in the bill, and which heretofore had not been provided, when ordered by the Chief of Engineers to go somewhere and instruct a school. It is exactly the same amount as heretofore appropriated.

Mr. HULL. While the language means that, an officer may be sent to Baltimore, and they have no mileage, and he may have to stay there several days in order to accomplish the actual purposes for which he is ordered there, and it is only done with the approval of the Chief of Engineers. It is in the line of fair dealing with the engineers.

Mr. McRAE. If there is no danger of allowing two expense accounts for the same work, I can see no objection to it; but we know that the Army officers are supplied with transportation and all their expenses are paid. This language has never been carried in appropriation bills before, and I think we ought to have some explanation as to why it is here now. If the gentleman insists on it, however, I shall not make the point, if he will insert the words "actual traveling" instead of the word "travel;" so there can be no doubt about what it means.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa why there is any reason to give a different treatment to the engineer officers in traveling to that given officers of the cavalry and infantry who are traveling for the same purpose? There may be some reason, but it does not appear on the surface.

Mr. HULL. There is a difference in the work. Their work is somewhat the same as private individuals.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. While the paragraph deals with instructions to engineer troops at Willets Point, the travel expense is an expense incurred while traveling for the purpose of instruction. Now, why should the officers of the other arms, having to do the same thing, not have the same provision made for them? If we put this provision in here, the other branches will come and apply for the same thing.

Mr. HULL. If this is placed on here, whenever a member of the Engineer Corps was ordered from here, this would necessarily give him the amount of the actual expenses and will be saving to the Government. The Chief of Engineers in his hearing made no remarks upon that subject at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Arkansas does not make the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I said I would withdraw it if the gentleman would insert "actual traveling" for the word "travel."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I renew the point of order, then.

Mr. HULL. The chairman of the committee is not informed about it so as to combat it, and cares nothing about it. But the committee believed to such an extent in what the Chief of Engineers said, believing that the Corps of Engineers was doing important work, we simply met his recommendation in the matter, and therefore we put in this provision.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I have not looked up the old law; but I have just spent two hours with the Paymaster-General of the Army or a gentleman from his Department, and am considering the whole law governing the traveling allowances of officers of the Army. This is a departure from the principle heretofore adopted. It seems to me, just fresh from that conference, it would be very unwise for us to do it in the absence of a fuller explanation than the gentleman from Iowa is now prepared to give.

By the present law an officer would be allowed his mileage at 7 cents a mile when he is traveling without troops under orders. Now, then, that is what is given as travel compensation under existing law, and he would have to subsist himself; and the 7 cents a mile is supposed to be sufficient for that purpose. Now, there are very many cases where the distance traveled would be short and the stay at the end of the journey very long, and the mileage by no means compensates the officer. This provision would have to extend to other branches of the service if we begin to make a change in the law here.

Mr. HULL. There is no question in my mind that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the point of order is sustained, beginning with the word "and," in line 8, down to and including the word "dollars," in line 11.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; to the word "instruction," in line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; that is correct.

Mr. HULL. That is all they can raise the point of order to.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly; the gentleman is correct.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies: For manufacture or purchase of metallic ammunition for small arms and ammunition for reloading cartridges, including the cost of targets and material for target practice, ammunition for burials at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and at Soldiers and Sailors' State Homes, and marksmen's medals and insignia for all arms of the service, $750,000: Provided, That hereafter the Chief of Ordnance is authorized to issue such obsolete or condemned ordnance, gun carriages, and ordnance stores as may be needed for ornamental purposes to the Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, the Homes to pay for transportation and such other expenses as are necessary.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask——

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I desire to ask, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the language employed in line 13, page 28, whether it is customary to make the appropriation for the purchase as well as the manufacture of small arms and ammunition?

Mr. HULL. I think it is. I am looking for the old bill.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. My information is that this is a departure from the language heretofore employed in this particular appropriation.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Massachusetts is right about it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I trust the gentleman will strike that out. The evidence before our committee is that the arms manufactured in the Government factories are superior to those manufactured in the private factories, and are cheaper. The experience in our late Spanish war would indicate that we had better continue the manufacture of our own arms and ammunition.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. We may be suddenly in need of ammunition. Everybody knows that ammunition is a thing that gets away. If we need it, we ought to have the opportunity to buy it. I can not help speaking about this matter earnestly, because it seems to me that when it is necessary to buy arms and ammunition the Government ought to have the opportunity and the power to do it.

Mr. McRAE. I make the point of order against these words in that paragraph, "or purchase," in line 13, and the words "Soldiers and Sailors' State Homes," wherever they occur, and against the word "hereafter," in line 21. It has been clearly shown in the Committee on Appropriations that we can manufacture ammunition cheaper and better than we can buy it. We have the factories with which to do it, and we ought to do it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is perfectly well understood that we make it when we can. Nobody wants the Government to purchase supplies when it has them; but the Secretary of War can not make ammunition at all times in a sudden emergency, and he ought to have the authority to buy it.

Mr. McRAE. I am not going to suppose an impossibility nor assume any emergency will arise in the next year.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If we shoot it all away in the Philippines and can not get any more immediately, he ought to have the opportunity to buy abroad.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, this question of striking out the power to purchase these supplies will not be consented to by the committee at least. If the Chair decides that we can not keep it in the bill, we bow to his decision. As the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] very properly says, we ought to have the opportunity to buy supplies when we need them. We did need ammunition terribly only a short time ago. We are using a vast amount of ammunition to-day. If we do not need it, it will not be bought; if our own factories can manufacture it, it will not be purchased; but if the time comes in the next fiscal year when the United States wants to buy ammunition, or has to go without it, it seems to me that we ought to have the right to provide that they can buy it.

Mr. McRAE. If the time comes that we can not manufacture all the ammunition necessary to overcome any force now in the field or that may hereafter assail us, permission can be had to buy it very easily and quickly.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; if Congress is in session.

Mr. McRAE. We do not need it now, and I am opposed to giving authority to any officer to buy ammunition in time of peace, when we can make better ammunition in our own factories. We have all the machinery and appliances necessary to make it, and if necessary, build more of them. I believe our success in the last war was due more to the fact that we made our own ammunition and had fresher and better than our foes had. The Spanish Government bought theirs abroad, and a good deal of it was utterly worthless as compared with that used by our men.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Was not there complaint all through the Spanish war that our soldiers were dying because we had not smokeless powder and ammunition and the enemy had and every shot with our black powder revealed the presence of our troops?

Mr. McRAE. The other fellows did the complaining in the Spanish war, because our men located them; and so it will be in any war when they stand up against American soldiers armed with American guns loaded with material which our factories turn out. I think, Mr. Chairman, these words ought to go out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas covers only the words "or purchased," in line 13.

Mr. McRAE. And the words "at Soldiers and Sailors' State Homes," wherever they appear, and the word "hereafter," in line 21. That seeks to make this a permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that a part of the point of order is well taken and a part not. If the gentleman is willing to have the Chair rule upon any part of the paragraph——

Mr. McRAE. Of course, I do not object to that. Each one should stand alone.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the words "or purchase" are not susceptible to the point of order; and so far as those words are concerned the Chair will overrule the point; but he will sustain the point of order so far as relates to the words "and at Soldiers and Sailors' Homes" and the word "hereafter."

Mr. McRAE. I submit, without appeal, to the ruling of the Chair, and move to amend by striking out the words "or purchase."

Mr. HULL. I sincerely hope that this amendment will not prevail. By no possibility can the language proposed to be stricken out do harm, and it may do a vast amount of good. There is no danger in allowing an officer of this Government to purchase munitions of war which it may be necessary for the Government to have and which it can not manufacture.

So far as I am concerned, I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas and to this committee that I am in favor of the Government of the United States accumulating a surplus of powder and munitions of war, including metallic ammunition. We went into the last war practically without anything. Our arsenals were bare, our munitions of war absolutely worthless, because Congress had not provided for proper supplies of that kind. I believe that this Government ought to provide small arms; and we have provided for the erection of another plant at Rock Island for the purpose of increasing the supply of small arms.

I believe the Government ought to have not simply the powder it uses from year to year, but a reserve of powder that will enable us to do something effective when war breaks out, without sending our agents scurrying over the world to buy the supplies we need. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not prevail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it was stated yesterday in the discussion on this bill that repairs were being made to Government vessels, War Department vessels, at private navy-yards, whilst—and I did not hear the statement contradicted on the floor—whilst the Government navy-yards were working at half time. It was openly stated and charged here that a bill was rendered against the Government for $8,000 for repairs which ought not to have cost $2,000.

What is the result? The provision now before us is just in line with that proposition. Whenever you leave questions of this kind open as to whether a private contractor can get these contracts from the Government, you institute at once a lobby here and a lobby at the War Department to take out of the hands of the Government the manufacture or repair of Government material and put that work into the hands of private contractors for political purposes; and that is especially true in the face of a campaign, when by giving out this class of contracts you can probably make votes for the party that controls the giving out of those contracts.

There is no question that the experience of this Government in the manufacture of great guns and in the manufacture of carriages for guns has demonstrated beyond a doubt that these materials can be manufactured better by the Government than by private contractors. When the materials are to be used solely by the Government, when the Government is the sole purchaser, the sole competitor for such materials, it is better for the Government, so far as regards the quality of the material, and also cheaper for us to establish our own factories, as we have done in this case, and carry on the manufacture for ourselves. We have now factories for making powder.

The gentleman from Iowa says that we should carry a supply on hand, and that is the reason he gives for wishing to retain in this paragraph the words "or purchase," because the Government needs to carry a supply of powder. Of course it does; but, sir, the limitation of the appropriation, which in this instance is $750,000, is a limitation upon the amount of ammunition that we are to keep on hand, whether it be manufactured by the Government or by private contractors. There is nothing to indicate that within the next six months or during the coming recess of Congress we shall have any great or extraordinary demand for powder. We have already established our factories, and they are prepared to manufacture this powder, and I see no reason why the Department should be authorized to go into the field and give out these contracts, possibly for purposes which if known would not be approved. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am regularly in order, because I have already spoken on this amendment; but I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may have, say, ten minutes to answer the objections of the gentleman from Alabama, continuing those of the gentleman from New York, with reference to the transport Sumner.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] may proceed for ten minutes without interruption. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, we had a very interesting speech yesterday with reference to the transport Sumner, a speech which was the more interesting because it was not in the words of the honorable gentleman who introduced the matter [Mr. DRIGGS], but in the words of a newspaper article. We heard of "A palace of the seas is this Army transport. Where and how the Government lavished $750,000 on the Sumner."

In the short time which I have I can not read the whole article over, and I would not if I could; but I want to call attention to the facts in the case as distinguished from the statements made in that article.

The transport Sumner was a collier belonging to the Navy. She was transferred to the Army to be changed into a transport, at the sum of $160,000. The newspaper article says that since that time she has been converted into a floating palace at an expense of over $750,000.

Fact No. 1. The sum of $100,000 was paid to the Navy Department for necessary ship work, and her total expense since she was bought from the Navy Department, including that amount, is less than half of the sum mentioned in the article quoted. The total was expended in different places and can not at this moment be exactly stated.

Mr. DALY of New Jersey. What newspaper article are you reading from?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am reading from the RECORD of yesterday, reprinting an article and statement in the Brooklyn Eagle, read by the gentleman from Brooklyn [Mr. DRIGGS] yesterday. We are told in that statement that the Sumner was slightly injured coming up New York Bay and that the expenses of her repair ought not to have been over $2,000, but that they cost $8,000, and the criticism is made that she ought to have been sent to a Government dock, where she could have been repaired for not over $2,500, instead of being sent to the Erie Basin, where the work was done. This brings us to fact No. 2. The actual cost of repairs to the transport Sumner at the Erie Basin, New York City, was not $8,000, but $1,945, or less than the estimates at which the article says the work should have been done.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I can not yield. There are a number of different statements of fact in that article which was referred to which are as wholly erroneous as those to which I have referred. If the gentleman wants to know where I got these figures, I will say that I got them from the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, where the gentleman [Mr. DRIGGS] should have gone himself before he made these statements, if he had desired to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. How much did the gentleman say these affairs cost?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The total will be given when they get all the bills together at the Department. Part of the bills are from the Navy Department and have not come in.

The tumblers and water bottles in the staterooms were referred to as wondrously costly cut glass. The tumblers actually cost 39 cents and the water bottles $1.25, respectively, at retail, the cost in this case being much less, as they were purchased in a lot.

The fine linen on board was referred to in that article. This is the kind of fine linen that it is. The tablecloths cost 87½ cents a yard; the napkins 23 cents apiece. The sheets cost 47½ cents each, the pillows 14 cents each, and the pillow slips 14½ cents each—ordinary linen and nothing more. We heard again about the engraved frosted glass covering the front doors of these magnificent staterooms. The glass covers for the front doors of the staterooms cost 50 cents apiece and is the ordinary frosted glass used in doors of such character.

We heard about mahogany furniture. Yes, the furniture in the cabins is actually mahogany. It was put in by the Navy, as they always do in their own ships, because mahogany stands sea air better than any other wood; and while the original outlay is greater, it pays better in the end. The tables in the dining room were made by the workmen at the Norfolk Navy-Yard, not by private contract.

A sideboard was referred to. It was described as being at one end of the saloon, about 10 feet long and 3 feet wide, and extending to the ceiling with "great beveled-edged French plate mirrors, costing $1,500." The fact is that the sideboard was built and put in by the Navy Department, and the three mirrors cost all together $12.50 instead of $1,500. The largest mirror on the stairs cost $35.

We heard a great deal about $8,000 worth of silverware in that sideboard. There is not one piece of silverware aboard the ships. It is simply plated ware throughout, and the total silver plate for soldiers, officers, and everybody on board ship—not merely on the sideboard, but all through the ship—cost $1,298.99 instead of the $8,000 stated to be the cost of the silverware in the sideboard alone.

We heard of wonderful velvet carpet. We heard about costly rugs. The carpets on board that ship are the ordinary body Brussels carpet, costing $1.10 a yard, and the rugs are ordinary Smyrna rugs, averaging $10 apiece.

We heard of wonderful bathrooms and porcelain tubs. We all know something about the cost of plumbing. The entire plumbing aboard the ship, including everything, bathrooms, bath tubs, shower baths, washstands, and all pipings and fixtures for officers, soldiers, crew, and hospital, cost $12,983.81. The average cost per bathroom, including all fittings, was $354.96.

Mr. DRIGGS. I did not quite understand the gentleman's figures as to that item.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The whole plumbing throughout the ship was under $13,000. The average cost per bathroom was $354.96.

Mr. DRIGGS. Is that bill itemized?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; I have got some items here. I will hand the list to the gentleman when I have finished my statement or I will put it in the RECORD. They talk about tiling on the bathroom floors. Yes, there is tiling on the bathroom floors, because it is the only material that resists water and rust together. It costs 60 cents per square foot and is the only kind of material that should be used in such places.

They talk about bunks. Oh, yes; "each man will be given a berth, a sleeping place arranged on galvanized frames," as if that was too much to give them. Berths are better than hammocks as used in the Navy, for they can put more men in a given space and they are more comfortable. They cost $6.50 per bed, while the cost of the Navy hammock, with pads and half stands, which would be necessary, averages $6.63 per man. So the berths were cheaper as well as better.

Then we come to the automatic egg boiler, which it is said cost $75. It actually did cost $60, and the quartermaster reports that, with the large amount of cooking which is necessary to be done for the different messes, it is an essential and not absolutely or relatively a costly article.

Mr. Chairman, why do we not get facts instead of imagination?

Mr. OTEY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will, with pleasure, if I can.

Mr. OTEY. How many eggs will that thing boil at a time? [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I can hardly answer that.

Mr. OTEY. Is it for the officers or for the men?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is for the officers and men both. The statement of the Quartermaster is that with the large amount of cooking that is necessary to be done for the different messes it is necessary. It is for all the officers and men, as I understand it.

Mr. OTEY. But do you know how many eggs it will boil at once?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; I am not an expert in boiling eggs. Why do not gentlemen get the facts? The Quartermaster's Department is accused of extravagance, and the statement is repeated here without any investigation. It is said that the sum of $750,000 was expended in changing a transport, in nonessentials, and the proof is that the bulk of the changes were made in our own navy-yards, as our own ships are built, and, thank God, all men—Democrats and Republicans—since Manila, now stand by the Navy, and know that honest work is done there. [Applause.] The rest of the work was not done in the navy-yards because it could not be done there. These are the facts as to the fitting up of this transport to carry so many soldiers, so as to give them comfort in large numbers in a hot climate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will simply ask to insert this statement in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 28, 1900.

MY DEAR MR. PARKER: The inclosed list will give you practically what you wish. I have been unable to get as yet from the Navy the total expense for the repairs to the Sumner at the Norfolk Navy-Yard, but as soon as they can obtain a reply from a telegram sent to Norfolk Navy-Yard I will send the amount up to you.

Very sincerely,

J. B. BELLINGER,
Major and Quartermaster, U. S. V.

Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

1. The cost of the repairs to the transport Sumner at Erie Basin, New York City, was not $8,000, but was $1,945.

2. The tumblers and water bottles in the staterooms were included in a sum-total bid for all crockery, but can be bought at retail for 30 cents and $1.25, respectively, the cost being much less, of course, purchased in the lot.

3. The linen on board is of good quality, but is not the best, the cost of same being as follows: Tablecloths, 87½ cents a yard; napkins, 22 cents each; sheets, 47½ cents each; pillows, 14 cents each, and pillowslips, 14½ cents each.

4. The glass covers for the front doors of the staterooms cost 50 cents apiece, and is the ordinary frosted glass used in doors of such character.

5. The tables in the dining room were made by the workmen at the Norfolk Navy-Yard, and the exact cost is not known.

6. The chairs are the standard chairs used in all ocean-going steamers, and cost $20, instead of $15. In this connection it would be advisable to call attention to the fact that all ships carrying passengers are fitted up with mahogany, simply because it stands the sea air better than any other woods; and while the original outlay is a little greater, it is the cheapest in the end, as it takes a great deal less labor to keep it polished and lasts much longer than other woods.

7. There are three mirrors in the sideboard, the total cost of the three being $12.50, instead of $1,500. The large mirror at the head of the stairway cost $35.

8. There is no silverware on board the ship. It is simply plated ware, and the total silver plate on board the ship costs $1,298.99, instead of $8,000, as stated for the silverware on the sideboard alone.

9. The carpets are ordinary body Brussels carpets, and cost $1.10 per yard. The rugs are the ordinary Smyrna rugs, and average $10 each.

10. The entire plumbing aboard the ship, including everything, bathrooms, bath tubs, shower baths, washstands, all piping, and all fixtures for officers, soldiers, and crew, cost but $12,983.81. The average cost per bathroom (as given in the inclosed slip) is $354.90. Shower baths cost $5 each. The washstands in the corner of the staterooms cost $18. Nickel-plated brass is found to be the cheapest thing to use in this work, as it wears much better and costs less in labor to keep it in proper condition. The bath tubs cost, approximately, $125 each, instead of $200.

11. The automatic egg boiler cost $60, and with the large amount of cooking which is necessary to be done for the different messes is an essential and is not an absolutely or relatively costly article.

12. The flooring of all bathrooms, shower baths, butcher shops, kitchens, and other places which are continually covered with water are of tile or a composition of cement, and cost 60 cents per square foot. You can readily see that this is the only kind of material that should be used in such places, as wood would rot and iron would rust.

13. Bunks are substituted instead of hammocks as used in the Navy, as they permit of carrying more men, and they take up less space and are more comfortable. These bunks cost $6.50 per bed; the cost of the Navy hammock, with pads and one-half standee, which would be necessary, averages $8.63 per man.

The following is a list of the articles installed in bathroom No. 1 on the Army transport Sumner, at a cost of $354.96, which was the most costly of any of the bathrooms on the ship, viz:

"Imperial porcelain roll rim 'Granada' bath, 4 feet 6 inches, Class A, finished outside white, with 3 gold lines, plate 13–Y; N. P. Unique waste; N. P. high bell supply, clamps as 14–Y; H. P. Security heater; Imperial porcelain lavatory, Class A, 20 inches by 20 inches, plate 306–Y; H. P. brass leg; N. P. soap cup, plug, coupling, stopper, and chain; N. P. trap to deck, plate 386–Y, fitted with single N. P. Mott's patent self-closing basin faucet, plate 373–Y; 1 N. P. shower, with white-duck curtains, chain, and cock; N. P. connections from heater to shower and bath; beveled plate-glass mirror with N. P. frame, 20 inches by 24 inches; N. P. brass comb and brush holder, plate 229–Y; N. P. brass combination towel shelf and rack, 20 inches long, 6 inches wide, plate 212–Y; N. P. brass sponge holder, plate 216–Y; vitro-adamant soap dish, with N. P. brass holder, plate 223–Y; 2 brass hand rails, lengths 1 foot 10 inches, diameter 1 inch, as per plate 225–Y; N. P. paper holder for roll paper, plate 209–Y; 1 Oregon water-closet, same as previously described."

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DRIGGS rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I ask that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey may be extended in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I will ask the gentleman if he will answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS] has the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Will you answer a question? I will ask you if you are ready to join us in the movement to build the ships in the navy-yards, as you say it is a saving?

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I did not have the felicity of listening to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey at the outset, but in the very melodious tones of his voice I heard a number of statements resounding over this side of the House. I understood in the commencement of his remarks he accused me of having made a misstatement.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Oh, no, sir; if I made any statement that seemed like that I shall take it back. The gentleman simply asked a question, but a rather long one.

Mr. DRIGGS. All right, then; we will consider that a "closed incident." I noticed among the various items that he read, which I understand have been sent him this morning from the Quartermaster's Department, one little item of $12,000—a mere bagatelle, of course—for plumbing of that ship.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. You desire me to answer. I went this morning to the Quartermaster-General's Office and he was not there. They had not heard of what was said here yesterday, and before leaving the Department I asked Major Bellinger, assistant quartermaster-general, who had charge of the transport service, to find out the facts and investigate the items in that matter. The expenses were incurred, as the gentleman will notice and will know, in New York, as to matters in these items that were not done in the navy-yard. All that could be done was to telephone to New York to ascertain the accuracy or inaccuracy of the figures given and specific charges made in that newspaper article. The gentleman could have found out as to their accuracy, or, rather, as to their want of accuracy, if the gentleman had taken the pains to talk with the Secretary of War or the Quartermaster-General and to make the same inquiry he could have found out.

Mr. DRIGGS. I decline to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, in my introductory remarks yesterday I said that this is a matter of so great importance that we should know something about it, and this morning I have introduced a resolution authorizing the Speaker of the House of Representatives to appoint a committee of nine members of this House to investigate the entire transport service of the United States. It has been a well-known fact to every citizen of the city of New York, where many of these transports have come from time to time, and where many of them from time to time have been visited by our people, that there was something wrong in the transport service of the United States; and when this article appeared in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle I realized that where there is some smoke there must be some fire.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman repeat that? Does he mean to say now that there is some fire in this matter?

Mr. DRIGGS. I say there is fire until I am convinced that there was something wrong in that article.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman said that he made no statement yesterday, but merely read an article.

Mr. DRIGGS. Oh, no; I said yesterday, in answer to the gentleman from Indiana, that I proposed to stand by every statement made in that newspaper article until it was proved to my satisfaction and the satisfaction of my constituents that those statements were false, and I do not think that the article you have brought in here from the Quartermaster-General's Office absolutely refutes the statement made here. You may say that some of these glasses have not cost so much, or some of this other cut glass may not have cost so much. But here is a specific charge of these people that the mirror cost $1,500. I do not care about little ground-glass windows in front of the door. Where is your answer to that?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will tell you where the answer is. The mirrors on the sideboard cost $12.50, and the biggest mirror on board, at the head of the stairs, $35. How can you answer that? If the Department is to spend its time giving responses to articles such as that, they will never get through.

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to be fair, and I think the gentleman is trying to be fair, and these charges are very serious.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I understood you to say you did not make a charge yesterday, and here you say you stand by the charge.

Mr. DRIGGS. I did, through the newspaper article, make the charges yesterday, and I stand by them despite all that the gentleman from New Jersey may say, and, whatever the article he has brought in here this morning, I will stand by the article that I introduced until it is absolutely proved to be untrue; but I desire to state to this House that there is altogether too much truckling to the idea of a Department saying what members of this House should do. We should go on and demand an investigation, and obtain the absolute facts as they really are; not that I am saying that the statements of the gentleman from New Jersey are false, or the reports that have come from the Quartermaster's Department this morning are false. The taxpayers are paying the freight, and should have the benefit of a thorough investigation.

But I do contend that in that item of $12,000 for plumbing there is plenty of room for $200 bath tubs and all such appurtenances as that.

Mr. Chairman, if we have not the right to investigate into a system and service which is notoriously bad, I would like to know where under the sun we can make an investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon this amendment.

Mr. HULL. There is another amendment before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment before the House is to strike out the words "or purchase."

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas may have five minutes in which to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arkansas may have five minutes to discuss the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, all of this debate about the Sumner shows the necessity of the Government making its own ammunition and building its own ships, as far as possible. You will find abuses running all through the Departments under all Administrations. I have no special charge to make against any one about purchasing ammunition at this time. They are likely to exist in any Administration if you give them the power sought to be given now. Pressure will be so strong that ordinary men can not resist it. Every transport, every vessel that could be sold at all, was bought by the Government in 1898, whether it could be used to advantage or not.

In the hurrah and excitement of war men who had something to sell came, one after another, and made the life of those who controlled the Executive Departments a burden until they sold. If you give them the power to purchase ammunition for small arms, as is authorized by this bill, I predict that it will not be three months before the Government shops will be running on short time and the men standing idle, and all the refuse ammunition of this country will be dumped on the Government, kept a few years, and then condemned as worthless. Every man who has investigated this question knows that you can not keep powder within a short distance of salt water without its deteriorating in strength.

I remember that just before the Spanish war certain civilians, and even some in high military authority, insisted that we should have on hand as much as 200 rounds of ammunition. The gentleman then in charge of the Ordnance Department, one of the most conscientious and capable officers that ever served the Government, General Flagler, said, with a cool, soldier-like courage, that it was unnecessary; that we could not keep such a quantity without its deteriorating; that there was no necessity for it anyway. He explained that with our superior guns, accurate marksmanship, and strong powder we did not need 200 rounds. He said that no enemy and no ship of any enemy on the face of the earth could venture within range of our guns and stand against them for even ten shots. The engagements both upon land and sea proved the truth of every word he uttered.

Under the judgment of that gentleman that war was prosecuted successfully. He furnished plenty of good ammunition, the most of it made by the Government. Why do we need authority to purchase now when we are practically at peace? When we only have a little insurrection in the Philippine Islands there is no necessity for going beyond the capacity of our own factories, where we can get the best ammunition in the world for less money than we can purchase it. Believing this as I do, I hope that the committee will vote out these two words, "or purchase," so that the Government can go on manufacturing its own ammunition, at least until some necessity arises for more than we can manufacture, and thus give employment to our own employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were 76 ayes and 65 noes.

Mr. HULL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] will take their places as tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported 73 ayes and 85 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, before that paragraph is passed I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, after the word "transportation," insert the following: "out of any appropriation for transportation now made."

Mr. STEELE. There is no objection to that on the part of the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and State Soldiers and Sailors' Homes, including material for cartridges, bags, and so forth, $25,000.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words "State Soldiers and Sailors' Homes," in the twentieth line. It seems to me that these State institutions ought to be kept separate from and not to be mixed up with like homes owned and supported by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter all volunteer officers and soldiers who served in the United States Army, Regular or Volunteer, during the late war with Spain, and all who served, or shall serve, in the Philippine Islands, shall be admitted to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers on the same terms and conditions as officers and soldiers who served in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion from 1861 to 1865: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall apply for the payment of volunteers as fully as though they formed part of the Regular Army.

Mr. HULL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out lines 7 to 14, inclusive, and inserting before the word "Provided," in line 15, the following:

Hereafter the following persons only shall be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the order of three of the Board of Managers, namely: All honorably discharged officers, soldiers, and sailors who served in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States, who are disabled by disease, wounds, or otherwise, and who have no adequate means of support, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living; and such of these as have neither wife, child, nor parent depending on them, on becoming members of this Home or receiving relief therefrom shall assign thereto their pensions, when required by the Board of Managers, during the time they shall remain therein.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. HULL. The only change which my amendment próposes in the existing law is to strike out of the law the words "war of 1812, the Mexican war, and the civil war" and to insert "all wars." The rest of the amendment is now existing law. Under this amendment men who served in the Mexican war can be admitted to the Home even if they served in the Confederate army. The amendment removes that restriction. It puts the whole question of admission into the hands of the Board of Managers.

It strikes out that part of the present law which gives the President the right on his own motion to admit without any regard to the Board of Managers. It covers all wars in which the Government of the United States has been engaged. The original proposition submitted by the committee was limited to those who served in the Spanish war and in the Philippines. This broadens the provision so that the Board of Managers shall have complete jurisdiction of this matter of admission.

Mr. TONGUE. Does this include soldiers who served in the Indian wars?

Mr. HULL. I should say that it included all persons who actually served in such wars.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have the provision confined to those who have served in the Regular or Volunteer Army of the United States.

Mr. HULL. That is the provision of the amendment already.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think so. It uses, I believe, the words "all wars."

Mr. HULL. The language is, "who served in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States, who are disabled," etc.

Mr. STEELE. Then I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Indiana does not press the point of order.

Mr. STEELE. No; I withdraw it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. What I am about to say I have deferred until the bill is practically completed, because I did not wish to delay its passage. I desire, however, to call the attention of the House to the inadequate and unfair provision now existing in the matter of chaplaincies in the Army. As is well known, a large number, if not a majority, of the soldiers in the Army at the present time who belong to any church are members of the Catholic Church, and yet of 34 chaplains who hold commissions at the present time only 4 are members of that faith. This matter was emphasized anew yesterday when I read an article which appeared in one of the New York dailies stating—and I presume the story is true—that a priest who was sent for by a sick soldier was denied admission to one of the forts at Bay Ridge, Long Island.

While an amendment such as I should like to offer is not in order at this time, I think it proper to call attention to this condition of affairs, so that the Committee on Military Affairs may see the necessity of presenting to the House some legislation which will remedy the evil in this case. It seems to me that when so large a proportion of the soldiers of the Army belong to a particular religious faith that this church ought to be recognized more in the matter of appointments of chaplains. It is a well-established truth that in case of serious sickness the members of the Catholic Church desire the attendance of a clergyman.

How impossible it is to bring this condition of affairs about in the Army is easily seen when the proportions quoted above are realized. I realize how impossible it is to appoint chaplains in the Army so that all religious beliefs can be recognized. I do think, however, where there is and will continue to be such a large representation of members of the Catholic Church in the service of the United States, and where the teachings of that church require the presence of a clergyman in cases of dangerous illness, that a larger proportion of Catholic clergy should receive commissions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after line 17, on page 30, the following:
"Provided, That the provisions for extra pay embraced in the act entitled 'An act granting extra pay to officers and enlisted men of the United States Volunteers (Public, No. 114) be extended to officers and enlisted men with creditable record who resigned or were honorably discharged prior to the formal muster out of the commands to which they were attached, and whose length of service was not less than six months.'"

Mr. HULL. I raise the point of order to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HEDGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, before line 15, on page 30, the following:
"That all honorably discharged officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army of the United States who served in the recent Spanish-American war and who received no furlough prior to being mustered out, or at the time of mustering out no extra pay in lieu of such furlough, and who have been paid no extra pay under the provisions of the acts of January 12 and of March 3, 1899, be now paid one month's extra pay if they served within the limits of the United States, and two months' extra pay if they served beyond the limits of the United States."

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve the point of order until I find out what this is. It may be very proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered to fill an omission in two statutes passed about a year ago, referred to in my amendment, January 12, 1899, and March 3, 1899, which provided that soldiers who were honorably serving should have either a furlough or one month's pay. This furlough or one month's pay was given to all the soldiers of the Spanish war who were subsequently mustered out.

I have been informed by the gentleman from Illinois, who offered that statute of January 12, that it was supposed at that time that that covered all cases, but as a matter of fact two regiments from the State of New York, as will appear from a statement by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLAYTON], and two batteries from Iowa, were not included, although all the other conditions were just the same and the intention was to cover all such soldiers. I do not think there are any other soldiers who are excluded from the benefits of the law of January 12 and March 3 except the two Iowa batteries and the New York regiments that I have referred to. I think that with a full knowledge of the facts there will be no objection to this amendment, because it puts these soldiers on an equal footing with other honorably discharged soldiers who served in the Spanish war.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, this amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE] is practically the same as a bill that I introduced some time ago to put the discharged officers and men of the Twenty-second Regiment of New York and the First Volunteer Cavalry, known as the Rough Riders, on the same footing with reference to this extra pay as were the other volunteers during the Spanish war. At first it was decided, and I believe according to law, that when these troops returned to the United States they should have this furlough previous to being mustered out, but it afterwards became the custom to muster them out immediately.

Now, Congress passed the law of January 12, 1899, giving those who were mustered out immediately a month's pay in lieu of that furlough; but before this act was passed two regiments, one or two batteries, and a few staff officers had been mustered out of the service, so that they did not come under the provisions of that act. This amendment simply extends to those who were mustered out before the passage of the act the same privileges that were granted to those who were mustered out after the passage of the act. And, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE], it only includes two regiments, a few staff officers, and two other separate organizations—batteries, I believe—small organizations. I think the amendment ought to pass as a matter of justice, to put them all on the same plane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Illinois was called out of the Hall, but he requested me to withdraw the point of order for him.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE].

Mr. MAHON. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania renews the point of order. Will the gentleman from Iowa inform the Chair if there is any question that this is a new provision?

Mr. HULL. It is a new provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, on yesterday we passed over certain provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. We first passed over the provisions on page 6, to which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] raised a point of order against the first three sections, covering lines 3 to 8, inclusive.

Mr. MCRAE. The Chair does not quite state the full scope of my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Arkansas to make a full statement.

Mr. MCRAE. The point of order was to each paragraph, beginning with line 3, down to and including line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman contemplated covering that entire section by his point of order?

Mr. MCRAE. Not by one point of order, but by a point of order against each paragraph. That was the understanding when that was passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. When the matter was passed over temporarily yesterday the Chair had sent for the volume of Opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States, in order to look at an opinion that was given by the Attorney-General some years since in reference to what was covered by the expression "Executive Departments." The Chair is informed that this opinion was not presented to the gentleman from Illinois last year when he made the ruling to which reference was made by the gentleman from Iowa and by the Chair yesterday. That opinion, in part, reads as follows:

The several Executive Departments are by law established at the seat of government; they have no existence elsewhere. Only those bureaus and offices can be deemed bureaus or offices in any of these Departments which are constituted such by the law of its organization. The Department, with its bureaus or offices, is in contemplation of the law an establishment distinct from the branches of the public service and the offices thereof which are under its supervision. Thus, the office of postmaster or of collector of internal revenue or of pension agents or of consuls is not properly a departmental office—not an office in the Department having supervision over the branch of the public service to which it belongs. True, an official relation exists here between the office and the Department, one, moreover, of subordination of the former to the latter; but this does not make the office a part of the Department.

In view of that opinion of the Attorney-General, which, as the Chair before stated, he understands was not called to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois when he made the ruling last year, it seems perfectly clear to the Chair that this provision, so far as it changes last year's appropriation bill, is susceptible to the point of order, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL. I understand, then, from the decision of the Chair, that all that part of the bill, commencing with line 3 and ending with line 18, is out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; all that is out of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Then I offer the following amendment, which is an exact copy of the law of last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lieu of lines 3 to 18, inclusive, on page 6, the following:
"Thirty clerks, at $1,400 each per annum, $42,000.
"Sixty clerks, at $1,200 each per annum, $72,000.
"One hundred clerks, at $1,000 each per annum, $100,000.
"Sixty-eight messengers, at $720 each per annum, $48,960.
"In all, $302,960."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 12, in regard to mileage of officers—that was passed over also on the point of order reserved by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have examined with great care the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to the paragraph under consideration. I have examined it in connection with some officials from the Pay Department. There are two changes of law in it, one, I think, clearly in the interest of orderly administration and not against the interests of the Treasury, and the other in the interest of orderly administration and of economy. For that reason I withdraw the point of order which I made, and shall offer an amendment to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, to which, I believe, he will have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. MCRAE. I do not want to consider it as lost until the gentleman from Iowa accepts the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Oh, I have already done that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 of the amendment as printed in the RECORD on page 3866, after the word "war," insert the following: "which computed distance shall in no instance exceed the distance over the shortest usually traveled route between given points."

Mr. HULL. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Now, going back to the original law and finding the exact language of the last bill, I move to strike out, in the first line, the word "traveling," and out of the second line the words "on duty under orders without troops" and to insert the words "authorized by law."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That makes it the same as the last year's law.

Mr. HULL. So that it will read:

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons, when authorized by law, $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, lines 13, 14, and 15, strike out the words "when traveling on duty under orders without troops" and insert in lieu thereof "when authorized by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. The amendment as amended is now before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman another amendment?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; it is the substitute.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The amendment I offered is an amendment to the substitute, and that substitute has not been submitted to the committee.

Mr. HULL. The original substitute has not been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, then, upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa on yesterday.

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report that amendment, having now been amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 12, 13, and 14, strike out all after the word "Provided," in line 15, on page 12, down to and including the word "road," in line 4, page 14, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That officers so traveling shall be paid 7 cents per mile and no more; distances to be computed and mileage to be paid over the shortest usually traveled routes, with deduction as hereinafter provided for such portion of any route as may be over a subsidized railroad; and payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers shall be made according to distances computed over routes established and by mileage tables prepared by the Paymaster-General of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War, which computed distance shall in no instance exceed the distance over the shortest usually traveled route between given points, and all payments made by paymasters on account of mileage previous to the passage of this act shall be settled in accordance with distance tables officially promulgated and in use at date of payment: Provided further, That officers who so desire may, upon application to the Quartermaster's Department, be furnished with transportation requests for the entire journey under their orders; and the cost of the through ticket between the points traveled shall be a charge against the officer's mileage account, to be deducted by the paymaster paying the same and turned over to an authorized officer of the Quartermaster's Department: And provided further, That when the established route of travel shall, in whole or in part, be over the line of any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, or over any of the bond-aided Pacific railroads, or over the railroad of any railroad company which by law is entitled to receive only 50 per cent of the compensation earned by such company for transportation services rendered the United States, officers traveling as herein provided for shall, for the travel over such roads, be furnished with transportation requests by the Quartermaster's Department, and the cost of the transportation so furnished shall be a charge against the officers' mileage accounts for such travel, to be deducted by the paymaster who pays the accounts, at through rates as paid by the general public for such travel as a part of the through journey under their orders: And provided further, That actual expenses only shall be paid to officers for sea travel when traveling, as herein provided for, to, from, or between our island possessions."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the amendment offered by me a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to the amendment offered by him a few moments ago. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEDGE. I offer that amendment, and I understand that there is no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa again offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all honorably discharged officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army of the United States who served in the recent Spanish-American war and who received no furlough prior to being mustered out, or at the time of mustering out no extra pay in lieu of such furlough, and who have been paid no extra pay under the provisions of the acts of January 12, and of March 3, 1899, be now paid one month's extra pay if they served within the limits of the United States, and two months' extra pay if they served beyond the limits of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I will not raise the point of order against that amendment now, and the reason I did so before was that the bill was sent to the Committee on War Claims, where it properly belongs. We had a hearing on it of the gentleman who introduced it, and spent two or three hours' labor on it in making a favorable report; and when I put it in the basket, to my surprise I was informed that by unanimous consent, asked for by the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill had been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. This bill, I could point out to the gentlemen of that committee, contained many items that under the rules of this House did not belong to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In other words, every claim growing out of any war that had no existing law at the time goes to that committee. But I did not object. I want to serve notice now that if any bill goes to that committee and that committee takes action on it—because I, as chairman of that committee, have been informed that no unanimous consent would be given to the War Claims Committee or the Claims Committee to pass any bill through this session, and I am making no objection to it. But I propose, as chairman of that committee, to state that no other bill over which that committee has got jurisdiction shall hereafter be slipped through this House on any appropriation bill, especially when that bill is here and the chairman of another committee knows the committee have possession of it. I expect that courtesy shall be given to me before a change of reference is asked. I do not raise any objection in this case.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken as to his committee having any right to this bill. It is not a claim. The law passed by Congress gives certain parties a certain amount of money. Now, if it had given them that and the law had expired, they could have gone to the Committee on Claims and filed a claim; but there never was a law upon the statute books to give these men any compensation whatever. And unless we pass a law there is absolutely no claim that could be made against the Government. They might say that in equity they ought to have it.

The Committee on Military Affairs had the original claim. We gave the two months' extra pay. That committee passed a bill to give the two months' extra pay, and I want to say to gentlemen on the Committee on War Claims that we are not hunting legislation that does not belong to us; but we do believe that in every case where a law must first be passed before a claim can be made the jurisdiction, under the rules of the House, is in the Committee on Military Affairs and not in the Committee on War Claims.

I want to say further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, as chairman of the committee, I called the attention of the Speaker to the wrong reference of that bill. It was not a claim; it was asking the enactment of a law to give parties, not named, but parties occupying certain positions before the country, compensation for services that would equalize their pay with the pay of others that had already been provided for by the Committee on Military Affairs. It could not belong to the Committee on War Claims, because there was nothing in it that would make a claim. If a man in the Rough Riders had filed a claim against the Government, it would have gone to the Committee on Claims; but neither the colonel nor the privates did it; but they did send in a bill here asking that they should be put on a level with the other troops. I submitted the request to the committee, and the Speaker of the House submitted the request for unanimous consent, which was given, for the change of reference.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, that committee has charge of every claim growing out of the war. That is the rule of this House now. These men were mustered out before that law was passed. They made a demand for this extra pay, and that was referred properly, and the Speaker referred it to the House for unanimous consent. That committee is loaded with bills to pay expenses for the burial of soldiers after they are taken home. I will not discuss this any further, but I shall insist upon the rules of this House being enforced in reference to the War Claims Committee. If I find a claim of this kind trying to be passed through the House on an appropriation bill I will make a point of order against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the second line of the proposed amendment, after the words "Volunteer Army of the United States," insert the words "or members of the Regular Army."

Mr. HULL. I object to that, Mr. Chairman. We have already provided for that.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The law already provides for volunteers, but this is to appropriate for the men mustered out of the Regular Army before the law went into effect.

Mr. HULL. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts provided for soldiers of the Regular Army mustered out either before or after the passage of the law who enlisted for a war with Spain only.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I believe the law applied to those men mustered out of service after the enactment of the law. This amendment will not only apply to the men mustered out after but before the enactment of the law.

Mr. HULL. I think that is covered now. It provides for those that enlisted for the war only, and that is all that ought to be covered by it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I appreciate that, but the gentleman will admit that the men mustered out of service before the enactment of the law are just as much entitled to it as those mustered out afterwards.

Mr. HULL. It is covered already.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I do not understand that it is.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will again be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "within the limit of the United States" and insert in place thereof "in the State;" also strike out the words "beyond the limits of the United States" and insert in place thereof "in Puerto Rico, Cuba, or the Philippine Islands."

Mr. McRAE. I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, so that there can be no question as to whom the pay is granted, and I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. HEDGE. I can not accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. McRAE was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEELE. One moment, Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put. As I understand it, the amendment with reference to admissions to the Soldiers' Home was only intended to broaden or extend the authority now vested in the Board of Managers under existing laws with reference to admissions, and it is not intended to change the law with respect to the pensions of members. If it is found that it has done so, in the haste and confusion under which we have been proceeding, I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will see that it is corrected before the bill becomes a law, the prime object of the amendment being to extend the law so that soldiers serving in the Spanish and Philippine wars may be placed on the same footing with those of the war of the rebellion when the Home was established.

Mr. HULL. That is true.

The motion of Mr. HULL was then agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 8582, making appropriation for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and had directed him to report it back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration House bill 8582, and has directed him to report it back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the question will be on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NAVIGATION ON SIMMONS REEF AND LANSING SHOAL.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 168.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Light-House Board be authorized and directed to remove the light-ship, No. 55, now on Simmons Reef, in Lake Michigan, near the Straits of Mackinac, to Lansing Shoal. And further, that the gas buoy on Lansing Shoal be removed, so as to take the place of said light-ship to be removed from Simmons Reef.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to ask whether this matter can not wait until the regular river and harbor bill is reported? Is there necessity for immediate action?

Mr. BURTON. This provision does not belong to the river and harbor bill. The joint resolution is reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thought it came from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BURTON. It pertains to navigation in the northerly part of Lake Michigan. The shipping interests have petitioned for this change and also the different associations made up of the masters of boats which ply this lake.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. BURTON. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Allow me to ask whether it is customary for the River and Harbor Committee to have charge of this sort of thing?

Mr. BURTON. The question of light-houses, light-ships, gas buoys, etc., does not come within the jurisdiction of that committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, let me ask, how is the River and Harbor Committee coming on with the river and harbor bill? I am somewhat interested in that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. The shipmasters of the lakes and the Lake Carriers' Association, representing the owners of vessels there, desired me to take charge of this matter, I presume, because they thought me somewhat familiar with these questions of navigation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman has not answered my question. I asked him how the River and Harbor Committee were getting on with the river and harbor bill, and when it would probably be reported.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, we are getting on with it very nicely, I think. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WHITE VS. BOREING.

Mr. OLMSTED. On behalf of the Elections Committee No. 2 I present a privileged report—the report of that committee on the contested-election case of John D. White vs. Vincent Boreing, from the Eleventh Congressional district of Kentucky. The report is unanimous, and I think there will be no controversy upon its adoption. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. This being a privileged matter, it does not require unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] calls up a privileged report on an election case. The Clerk will read the resolutions appended to the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John D. White was not elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Kentucky, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Vincent Boreing was elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress from the Eleventh Congressional district of Kentucky, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Elections Committee No. 2 preserves its usual good record; it has united unanimously on this report.

Mr. STEELE. Under this report who goes out? It must be a Democrat that goes out if the report is unanimous. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, it is not. These parties both belong to the Republicans. They have been fighting among themselves. [Laughter.]

The question being taken, the resolutions were adopted.

On motion of Mr. OLMSTED, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and House bill (with Senate amendments) of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2154. An act granting an increase of pension to William A. Owens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1918. An act granting an increase of pension to John E. Higgins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2651. An act granting a pension to Henry Hill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3078. An act granting a pension to Charles Weittle—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3289. An act granting a pension to Isabella Underwood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3662. An act granting an increase of pension to Louise D. Smith—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3418. An act granting an increase of pension to Eliza Adelaide Ball—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1578. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Campbell, alias George W. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. R. 86. Joint resolution for the printing of English interpretation of foreign terms as to weights, measures, and so forth, occurring in Government publications—to the Committee on Printing.

S. R. 103. Joint resolution providing for the introduction of testimony in behalf of the defendant in all preliminary hearings of a criminal nature—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Senate concurrent resolution 39:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That upon receipt of information by them that any officer, soldier, marine, or seaman in the Army or Navy of the United States has been wounded, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, shall, from time to time, at the expense of the United States, keep the family of such officer, soldier, marine, or seaman seasonably advised of his condition—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 4001. An act authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on the Navajo Indian Reservation, Territory of Arizona (with Senate amendments)—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6627. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9279. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 5067. An act concerning the boarding of vessels.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Charles Hansure, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REPRINT OF BILL AND REPORT.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, it was ordered that House bill No. 3363 and the report thereon, No. 606, be reprinted, to correct errors in the bill and report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CONNELL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for six days, on account of important business.

And then, on motion of Mr. HULL (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relating to the examination of the claims of certain Nez Perces Indians—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a copy of a dispatch from the United States minister at Bangkok, Siam, relating to an allowance for repairing the legation premises—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. NEEDHAM, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2916) to grant right of way over Government lands for a pipe line for the conveyance of water to Flagstaff, Ariz., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 859); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10152) to provide for the sale of isolated and disconnected tracts or parcels of the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas, reported the same in lieu of H. R. 5758, accompanied by a report (No. 860); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7667) to prevent a false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 872); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DALZELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred House bill 5017, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 10211) fixing the compensation of customs inspectors for night services in the examination of baggage, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 873); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4616) repealing the provisions of the desert-land act requiring cash payment for desert lands, and providing for the payment in desert-land entries of the same fees now required in the case of homestead entries, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 875); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MINOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9457) granting an increase of pension to Roger Fenton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 834); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4658) to pension Anna Hering, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 835); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3778) granting an increase of pension to Elisey A. Sloane, late private Company D, One hundred and second Ohio Volunteer Infantry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 836); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2409) granting an increase of pension to Frank C. Stevens, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 837); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1007) granting a pension to Mary E. Fenn, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 838); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2863) restoring to the pension roll the name of Francis H. Staples, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 839); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5655) granting a pension to Lurinda Laughlin, of Aurora, Ind., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 840); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9749) granting a pension to Melissa A. Trulock, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 841); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3490) granting a pension to Freeman H. Farr, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 842); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9044) granting an increase of pension to Albert Rudiger, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 843); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GASTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4440) to grant a pension to Harriet L. Hughes, widow of the late Maj. Chester K. Hughes, Company I, One hundred and forty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, of Berwick, Pa., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 844); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8926) granting a pension to Chill W. Hazzard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 845); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DRIGGS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7614) granting an increase of pension to David P. Stewart, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 846); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3481) granting a pension to Josephine A. Haley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 847); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2125) for the relief of Thomas Robert Harris, of Marion County, Tenn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 848); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9714) granting an increase of pension to Alexander N. Shipley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 849); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8592) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Fields, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 850); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4760) granting a pension to Samuel G. Trine, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 851); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8389) granting an increase of pension to Martin D. Miller, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 852); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HEDGE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1202) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Stubbs, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 853); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 820) granting an increase of pension to Anna M. Deitzler, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 854); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2382) granting an increase of pension to Margaret H. Kent, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 855); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1751) for the relief of Cordelia Sessions, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 856); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5718) granting a pension to Joseph Whitmore, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 857); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6285) granting an increase of pension to James R. Green, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 858); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1242) granting an increase of pension to Adele W. Elmer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 861); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 207) granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Van Horn, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 862); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1137) granting an increase of pension to Hannah G. Strong, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 863); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1296) granting a pension to Mary R. Bacon, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 864); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2497) granting an increase of pension to Sarah W. Rowell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 865); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1489) granting an increase of pension to Robert C. Rogers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 866); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 474) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Patterson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 867); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 995) granting an increase of pension to Nelly Young Egbert, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 868); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 517) granting a pension to Nancy E. Neely, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 869); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1804) granting an increase of pension to Rida B. Haskell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 870); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2505) granting an increase of pension to James C. Carlton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 871); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NEEDHAM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1759) for the relief of William A. Richards, late surveyor-general of Wyoming, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 874); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10138) to remove the charge of desertion against George C. Armstrong; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on the Public Lands: A bill (H. R. 10152) to provide for the sale of isolated and disconnected tracts or parcels of the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas—to the Union Calendar.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 10153) appropriating $1,500 to investigate the fishery interest of the Pacific coast—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 10154) to amend section 4488, Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 10155) for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ADAMS: A bill (H. R. 10156) to incorporate the National Association of Manufacturers—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 10157) regulating the acceptance of proof in certain pension claims—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 10211) fixing the compensation of customs inspectors for night services in the examination of baggage, and for other purposes—to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. ROBERTS: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 219) for the renovation of statues and busts in and about the United States Capitol building—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 220) authorizing the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Lynn, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SNODGRASS: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 221) for the further improvement of the Cumberland River, in the State of Tennessee—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. DRIGGS: A resolution (H. Res. 202) providing for the appointment of a select committee of nine members to investigate matters relating to the transport Sumner and other transports—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOREING: A bill (H. R. 10158) to pension William R. Coyle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKETT: A bill (H. R. 10159) granting a pension to Arthur V. Walsh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10160) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Gardner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10161) granting a pension to J. E. Latta—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROSIUS: A bill (H. R. 10162) to advance Maj. Gen. Galusha Pennypacker, United States Army, from the rank of colonel on the retired list to the rank of major-general on the retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10163) granting a pension to J. Lavenia Childs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARMACK: A bill (H. R. 10164) for the relief of the estate of Dr. Jesse Brown, deceased, late of Fayette County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10165) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Williams, deceased, late of Shelby County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10166) for the relief of Edwin T. Yancey, of Fayette County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COUSINS: A bill (H. R. 10167) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Winans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 10168) for the relief of E. A. Seeley—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DENNY: A bill (H. R. 10169) for the relief of Betsey Jones, widow of Joseph Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: A bill (H. R. 10170) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Noah Cox—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10171) granting a pension to Elizabeth Morrison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 10172) for the relief of the estate of George W. and Richard B. Cooper, late of Knox County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10173) for the relief of William E. Scott, Blount County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10174) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Hull, deceased, late of Jefferson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10175) for the relief of William Line, of Jefferson County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 10176) granting an increase of pension to Franklin W. Wright—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM (by request): A bill (H. R. 10177) granting a pension to Mary Taffe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON: A bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Cleveland, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10179) for the relief of R. B. Warren, of Pelham, Grundy County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OTEY (by request): A bill (H. R. 10180) for the relief of the heirs of Mary N. Cox, deceased, late of Lunenburg County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 10181) granting a pension to C. A. Craig—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 10182) granting a pension to Elizabeth Bachman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10183) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Reid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 10184) granting an increase of pension to Archa P. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10185) for the relief of the legal representative of John H. North, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CROWLEY: A bill (H. R. 10186) to correct the record of Allen Byers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DE GRAFFENREID: A bill (H. R. 10187) for the relief of Sophronia Atwood Paige—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DALY of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 10188) for the relief of George W. Spencer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ADAMS: A bill (H. R. 10189) granting an increase of pension to Anna B. McCurley—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FITZPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 10190) for the relief of Samuel May, sr., of Prestonsburg, Floyd County, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10191) placing on the muster rolls of the United States Army the First Regiment Kentucky Capital State Guards, Big Sandy Volunteer Battalion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10192) for the relief of the Sixty-fifth Enrolled Militia, of Johnson County, Ky.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 10193) granting a pension to John Douglas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10194) granting a pension to Jerome W. Turner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10195) for the relief of Kenzie H. Grandy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10196) for the relief of Robert B. Tubbs—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10197) for the relief of Samuel Whitehorse—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10198) for the relief of John A. Bishop—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10199) granting an increase of pension to Henry Daley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10200) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Wright—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10201) granting an increase of pension to John G. McMillan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10202) granting an increase of pension to Helen Mervine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GASTON: A bill (H. R. 10203) granting a pension to Rachel Wooding—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10204) granting a pension to Angie T. Myer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 10205) for the relief of Commander A. G. Kellogg, United States Navy, retired—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MEYER of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 10206) to authorize the legal representatives of the estate of George E. Payne, deceased, to prosecute his claim before the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 10207) granting a pension to Thomas Allen—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10208) for the relief of the Baptist Church at Williamsburg, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG: A bill (H. R. 10209) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John W. White, late private, Company E, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAFF: A bill (H. R. 10210) granting a pension to Ellen Miles Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCULLOCH: A bill (H. R. 10212) for the relief of J. M. Thomas—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10213) for the relief of the estate of August Heberlein—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10214) for the relief of M. B. Woodyard, Mrs. Alice N. Rush, Mrs. Sue T. Smox, and Joseph N. Woodyard, heirs of Col. Humphrey M. Woodyard—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10215) for relief of Mary F. Pollan, administratrix of William H. Pollan, deceased, late of Crittenden County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10216) for the relief of the estate of A. C. Kerr, deceased, late of Jackson County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10217) for the relief of the estate of Richard Higgins, late of Phillips County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10218) for the relief of the estate of John Caruth, deceased, late of Marshall County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10219) for the relief of Martha A. Lanford—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10220) for the relief of Theophilus M. Hamilton, of Cross County, Ark.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 10221) for the relief of P. F. Eagan—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Communication from Col. Clifford D. Ham, of the Herald Printing Company, Dubuque, Iowa, transmitting resolutions of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, asking for an inquiry into the price of printing paper as affected by the trusts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BABCOCK: Petition of citizens of Montfort, Wis., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of Will Hickok Post, No. 134, of Bloomington, Wis., Grand Army of the Republic, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine: Petition of citizens of Sherman and Dexter, Me., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of the Baptist Church of Oxford, Pa., urging the enactment of a clause in the Hawaiian constitution forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and a prohibition of gambling and the opium trade—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. CARMACK: Papers to accompany House bill relating to the claim of the estate of Jesse Brown—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CROWLEY: Papers to accompany House bill to correct the record of Allen Byers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Post No. 639, of Jewett, Ill., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAHLE of Wisconsin: Petition of citizens of Lake Mills and Waterloo, Wis., against the passage of House bill No. 5791, providing for the collection of judgments against municipal corporations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions of William Payne Post, No. 186, of Pardeeville, Wis., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of P. H. Sheridan Post, No. 15, of Fernandina, Fla., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DE GRAFFENREID: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Sophronia A. Paige—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DOLLIVER: Petition of D. L. Hoefle, druggist, at Beaver, Iowa, relating to the stamp tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: Papers to accompany House bill to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Noah Cox, of Grant City, Mo.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Elizabeth Morrison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of retail druggists of La Crosse, Wis., for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Congregational Church of Sparta, Wis., urging the passage of House bill No. 5457, abolishing the Army canteen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Papers to accompany bill for the relief of Commander Augustus G. Kellogg, United States Navy, retired—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GROUT: Petitions of A. B. Breman and 40 citizens of Fairfax, and resolutions of the Lima County Farmers' Institute, at Springville, Iowa, favoring the passage of House bill No. 3717, amending the oleomargarine law—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: Petition of citizens of Newburg and Boonville, Ind., to amend the present law in relation to the sale of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HITT: Memorial of J. M. Smith Post, No. 720, and David Hill Post, No. 532, Grand Army of the Republic, of Elizabeth, Ill., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7094—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Savanna Republican Club, of Savanna, Ill., protesting against the imposition of a tariff on commerce between the United States and Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of C. W. Singlehurst and others, of Lupton and Caledonia, Ill., to amend the present law in relation to the sale of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOFFECKER: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wilmington, Del., for a new code of laws for Hawaii, forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and a prohibition of gambling and the opium trade—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. HOWELL: Petition of James H. Dandy Post, No. 43, of Perth Amboy, N. J., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of Virginia: Petitions of the Concord, Bowling Green, and Wrights Chapel Woman's Christian Temperance unions, of Caroline County, Va., favoring a new code of laws for Hawaii, against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and prohibiting the importation and sale of opium, etc.—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. LACEY: Resolution of J. M. Tuttle Post, No. 497, of South Uttumwa, Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the location of a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Chicago Federation of Labor, against sundry bills taxing oleomargarine and butterine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MANN: Petition of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Chicago, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post, exchange, canteen, transport, or premises used for military purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany House bill No. 9756, for the relief of Maria McMurdie—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 5184, for the relief of E. C. Sturges—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MOON: Papers and photograph to accompany House bill for the relief of R. B. Warren, late wagon master, First United States Cavalry—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany House bills for the relief of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Cleveland, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NEVILLE: Papers to accompany House bill No. 9427, for the correction of the military record of Robert Ellison, deceased—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Paper to accompany House bill No. 10130, granting a pension to James Moss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OTJEN: Petition of R. M. Dadd and others, of Milwaukee, Wis., for the repeal of the tax on medicines, perfumery, and cosmetics—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: Petition of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Indiana, relative to House bill No. 7097, providing for a reorganization of the consular service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. POWERS: Resolutions of J. M. Warner Post, of Morrisville, Vt., Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of House bill No. 7094, for the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home at or near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, favoring free trade with Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Chippenhook and Clarendon Springs, Vt., in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana: Resolution of S. C. Aldrich Post, No. 138, of Hudson, Ind., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of various congregations of the Disciples of Christ in Northern Indiana, for the passage of the Bowersock anti-canteen bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Harvy K. Turner, of Fort Wayne, and citizens of Sheldon and Chamberlain, Ind., urging the passage of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SHOWALTER: Resolutions of Post No. 530, of Bruin, and Post No. 251, of New Lebanon, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WILSON of Idaho: Petition of citizens of Idaho, for free homesteads—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WISE: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of the Williamsburg Baptist Church—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 30, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. CLAY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of A. A. Pardee and 66 other citizens of Madison, Wis., praying for the repeal of the stamp tax upon proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and cosmetics; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Alexander Nelson and 92 other citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the imposition of a tariff or special internal-revenue duty upon tobacco imported into the United States from Cuba or Puerto Rico; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the La Crosse Branch of the Humane Society of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating the transportation of live stock from one State to another; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of Robert C. Spencer and 3 other citizens of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. QUARLES presented a memorial of the Society of Christian Endeavor of Racine, Wis., remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions of the legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Pleasant Bay, on the eastern shore of Cape Cod. I ask that the resolutions be read and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In the year one thousand nine hundred.

Resolutions in favor of the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Pleasant Bay, on the eastern shore of Cape Cod.

Whereas the preservation of life and property requires the establishment of a harbor of refuge upon the eastern shore of Cape Cod, which now contains no safe harbor for a distance of more than 50 miles; and

Whereas by cutting an opening through Nauset Beach, such a harbor might easily be constructed at Pleasant Bay, lying between Chatham, Orleans, and Harwich, which is entirely landlocked, and which has an average depth of more than 25 feet: Therefore,

Resolved, That the general court of Massachusetts earnestly requests the Congress of the United States to provide that surveys be ordered, and that an appropriation be made for the construction of the said harbor of refuge; and

Resolved, That properly attested copies of these resolutions be transmitted to the United States Senate and to the House of Representatives, and also to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this Commonwealth.

SENATE, March 13, 1900.

Adopted: Sent down for concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 15, 1900.

Adopted in concurrence.

JAMES W. KIMBALL, Clerk.

A true copy.
Attest:
HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER presented a memorial of the congregation of the Christian Church of Norwood, Ohio, and a memorial of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Deersville, Ohio, remonstrating against the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of the Niagara Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors and opium in Hawaii; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Friends' Church of Clintondale, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress gambling, including bookmaking on races in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and interstate gambling by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, praying for the appointment of a national health commission; which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Saratoga Springs, Ballston, and Sandy Hill, all in the State of New York, praying for the establishment of an Army veterinary corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the American Bar Association, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the war-revenue law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the drug-trade section of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the use of alcohol in the arts; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Friends' Church of Clintondale, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Soldiers' Homes, hospitals, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Niagara Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Buffalo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Quincy, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, praying for the establishment of a pneumatic-tube system in Chicago; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Julia Holmes Smith, president; Elizabeth H. Bull and Martha Spencer Dietz, vice-presidents, and Elizabeth M. Fifield, secretary, on behalf of the Political Equality League, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the disfranchisement of United States citizens on account of sex; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented a petition of Plow Fitters' Union No. 7044, American Federation of Labor, of Moline, Ill., praying that all the remaining public lands be held for the benefit of the whole people, and that the grants of title to the same be given to none but actual settlers and home builders thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented memorials of the Evangelisten, of Chicago; the Journal, of Tallula; the Vienna Democrat; the Herald, of Arcola; the Democratic Herald, of Lawrenceville; the Commercial, of Mattoon; the Ottawa Daily and Weekly Free Trader, of Ottawa; the Sunday Optic, of Quincy; the Index, of Wenona, and the Sidney By-Way, of Sidney, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8395) granting an increase of pension to Henry Johns;

A bill (H. R. 2203) granting an increase of pension to John M. Garrett;

A bill (H. R. 7445) granting a pension to Emma B. Reed; and

A bill (H. R. 5169) granting an increase of pension to Charles Weed.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6240) for the preparation of plans or designs for a memorial or statue of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant on ground belonging to the United States Government in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2924) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Colorado Springs, in the State of Colorado, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3616) to authorize the payment of traveling allowances to enlisted men of the regular and volunteer forces when discharged by order of the Secretary of War, and stated by him as entitled to travel pay, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 3913) for the relief of the heirs of James W. Bellah, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 3914) granting an increase of pension to Elisha B. Seaman;

A bill (S. 3915) granting an increase of pension to John H. Grove (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3916) granting an increase of pension to Charles De Graw (with accompanying papers).

Mr. SULLIVAN introduced a bill (S. 3917) providing for the improvement of the navy-yard bridge, Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3918) providing for the erection of engine house and the purchase of a chemical engine at Congress Heights, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3919) to extend and enlarge the provisions of chapter 914, Statutes at Large, first session Fiftieth Congress, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3920) for the relief of the estate of Asa Johnston, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3921) for the relief of Nancy J. Watkins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3922) granting an increase of pension to Mary Corinne Blandin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3923) for the relief of James M. Alden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SULLIVAN introduced a bill (S. 3924) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, Miss.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $125,000 to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to acquire by purchase Analostan Island, in the Potomac River, near the city of Washington, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CODE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 extra copies of the bill (S. 3812) to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia be printed for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

READJUSTED SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN DELAWARE.

Mr. KENNEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of Delaware between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled John W. Bateman and others vs. The United States, No. 18192, each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884, and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers and in circular form No. 1223, the text of each of which, under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others vs. The United States, No. 16345.

FINDINGS OF COURT OF INQUIRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. JONES of Arkansas, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate a copy of the minutes, proceedings, and findings of the court of inquiry pursuant to the President's instructions of February 20, 1899, together with the final report of said court of inquiry and the action taken thereon.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest that, as the Senator who introduced that resolution is absent, it at least lie on the table until he comes into the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table—retaining its place?

Mr. SPOONER. Retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas subsequently said: I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution which was introduced by me yesterday and went over under objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Arkansas please inform the Senate what is the nature of that inquiry?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was an inquiry into the management of the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments, I think, in the conduct of the Spanish war in 1898.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have no objection to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I wish to submit some remarks to the Senate upon the Puerto Rican tariff bill on Monday next, after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

ESTATE OF LAWRENCE D. BAILEY.

Mr. ALLEN. If the routine morning business is at an end, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 72) for the relief of the heirs of Lawrence D. Bailey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and the Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to repay to the heirs of Lawrence D. Bailey the sum of $200 erroneously paid by them on timber-culture cash entry 16045 for the SE. ¼ sec. 24, T. 22 S., R. 34 W., Garden City, Kans., on the 11th day of March, 1893.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIVERSITY AT LANGSTON, OKLA.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8463) ratifying an appropriation by the legislature of Oklahoma, out of the Morrill fund, for the use of the university at Langston for colored students.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that, if to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate be not engaged in the consideration of the unfinished business, one hour be given to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock, if the Senate be not then engaged in the consideration of the unfinished business, one hour may be given for the consideration of unobjected pension cases. Is there objection?

Mr. PETTUS. There is, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

LAND AT ELRENO, OKLA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7649) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the city of Elreno, Okla., for cemetery purposes. It is a very short bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate briefly upon the Puerto Rican bill. I am unable to do so to-day, as I am suffering from a sore throat. I give notice that on Monday, after the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] shall have concluded their remarks, I will take the floor to submit some observations upon that bill, if it is then agreeable to the Senate.

WILLIAM H. WANAMAKER.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2946) for the relief of William H. Wanamaker.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. WARREN. I think the reading of the preamble may be omitted, as I propose to strike it out.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. WARREN. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "said," in line 7, page 4, after the word "for;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay unto William H. Wanamaker the sum of $20,000, as and for the reimbursement and return to him of the amount of money paid by him to the United States as surety and bail for Gideon W. Marsh, and that the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose, out of any moneys of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I wish to be informed if some committee has passed on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BATE. I think it is correct.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the preamble be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH JOHNS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 153) granting a pension to Elizabeth Johns.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth Johns, widow of Joseph Johns, late a member of the so-called Black Brigade, of Cincinnati, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN SANTA FE, N. MEX.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5049) to settle title to real estate in the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901;

A bill (H. R. 9876) granting the right of way to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company across the ceded portion of the Chippewa (Red Lake) Indian Reservation in Minnesota; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 168) for change in location of aids to navigation on Simmons Reef and Lansing Shoal, in Lake Michigan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 3207) approving a revision and adjustment of certain sales of Otoe and Missouria lands in the States of Nebraska and Kansas;

A bill (H. R. 470) granting a pension to Jane Dykes;

A bill (H. R. 1763) granting a pension to Ella F. Sydnor;

A bill (H. R. 2597) granting an increase of pension to Charles Kauffung;

A bill (H. R. 3012) granting a pension to Sarah Claggett;

A bill (H. R. 3538) granting an increase of pension to Charles Ross;

A bill (H. R. 5189) for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi and others;

A bill (H. R. 6700) granting an increase of pension to Maria Andrews; and

A bill (H. R. 6701) granting a pension to Serelda McGrew.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the unfinished business be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate, without objection, the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the outline of civil government for the island of Puerto Rico, contained in the bill reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], meets my entire approbation and witnesses the ability and care which was exercised in its preparation. But the committee has included in this bill a provision for a tariff between the United States and that island, on a basis of 15 per centum of the rates of duty prescribed in the Dingley Act of 1897.

I greatly regret that these two measures, naturally separate and distinct, should be thus combined, and still more regret that in declining to support the tariff provisions of the bill, this unwise union compels me to vote against the excellent governmental features which it contains. My remarks will be directed exclusively to the tariff portion of the bill.

Mr. President, let us briefly consider the history of this tariff proposition. The President in his annual message, a document always prepared with great care, after much thought and consultation with his advisers, says:

Our plain duty is to abolish the customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico, and give her products free access to our markets.

The people of the United States, Mr. President, know that sentence by heart.

The Secretary of War in his very able annual report had said:

The highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Puerto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States. We should treat the interests of this people as our own. I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Puerto Rico and the United States be removed.

Note the words of the President, "our plain duty," and of the Secretary, "justice and good faith demand."

Following these recommendations a bill was introduced in this body by the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the committee, giving Puerto Rico free trade. A like measure was introduced in another body; but, presto! with little notice or apparent reason a bill comes to us levying a tax upon Puerto Rican exports and imports.

Is it strange that some of us, in lack of an official statement or apparent reason for this sudden shift, should be slow to give up a line of action which we believe to be based on principle and justice, which we believe to be the only honest and consistent course? It is charged that this change was demanded and brought about by the sugar and tobacco interests, and also, it is stated, by organized labor.

I, however, have failed to see that the representatives of this latter interest appeared before the committee. It is practically admitted that free trade with Puerto Rico does not harm these interests materially, but Mr. Oxnard for the sugar interest and Mr. Myrick and Mr. Frye, president of the Tobacco Growers' Association, claimed before the committee that it creates a precedent that will harm them if adopted in reference to the Philippines and Cuba. It will be time to cross those rivers when we come to them, and, in my opinion, the crossing will not be difficult when the proper time comes for action.

There are fair differences of opinion about our constitutional right to impose a tariff tax upon Puerto Rico. I do not propose to discuss that question, but upon it and the general purpose of this bill will ask the Secretary to read a letter from one who held and filled an honored seat in this Chamber for a quarter of a century, Hon. George F. Edmunds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 21, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: I have yours of the 20th instant, and, both as an American citizen and an original and constant Republican, am very glad to learn that you are opposed to legislation having the effect of imposing on the people of Puerto Rico (whether we call them citizens or subjects of the United States) any kind of revenue burden or benefit that is not common to the whole people of the United States. Any such measure, if enacted, will, I believe, be unique in our whole history. It will imitate and parallel the acts of the British Parliament which forced our fathers to just resistance and revolution, and led them to establish a Constitution which in studied and explicit terms forbade any such discrimination.

I know there are many gentlemen engaged in public affairs whose intelligence and patriotism are above question who believe that our Constitution does not embrace the Territories, and that as to them the President and Congress possess the same omnipotent powers that the British Crown and Parliament have always possessed over their possessions. While I think that position is untenable as a matter of law, I believe the proposed action is still less defensible viewed in the light of those principles of liberty, justice, and equality of rights we all profess to believe in, and which, whether we believe in and practice or not, are still living and will live and bear fruits more and more among men, in spite of all the tyrants—well-meaning or otherwise—in the world.

I need not weary you by referring to the often stated arguments on the general subject, but I will mention one aspect of it which, so far as I have noticed, has not been particularly adverted to. Congress is the creature of the Constitution and not the reverse. A law passed by Congress is its creation, a mere expression of its will, which it may repeal or change at pleasure. If, therefore (assuming that the Constitution does not exist in Puerto Rico), Congress were to enact a statute declaring that the present Constitution shall be extended over and be in force in that island, the Constitution gets its only force there by the virtue of the statute. It is a statutory constitution and nothing else, and a repeal of the statute would extinguish it.

But the Constitution as such, I suppose all admit, is not subject to the control of Congress, either to enlarge or diminish, to expand or contract, or to be applied to or withdrawn from any people or place. It is not a movable thing, like the Ark of the Covenant of the Israelites, to be set up and moved here or there, as the tribes might wander. It is the actual event and condition and not the legislative or executive will that must in the nature of things determine the status of a man or a country under it.

The instances in which Congress has declared in statutes organizing Territories that the Constitution and laws should be in force there are no evidence that they were not already there, for Congress and all legislative bodies have often made enactments that in effect merely declared existing law. In such cases they declare a preexisting truth to ease the doubts of casuists. Puerto Rico and its people came under the sovereignty of the United States by force of the treaty with Spain, and I think all will agree that if any part of the people of the island levied war against the United States or adhered to our enemies, etc., they would be guilty of treason. But treason is an exclusively defined constitutional crime, and it can not exist on the island unless the Constitution that defines it is in force there.

Apart, however, from considerations of fundamental equal law for all who owe allegiance to our flag of liberty and justice, there are, it seems to me, other very weighty and commanding reasons why we should treat the people of Puerto Rico on the basis of absolute civil equality of right and circumstance with the citizens of our States and home Territories, and in doing so if, as is contended, the Constitution is not in force there, we make no precedent for the territories on the other side of the globe; for, like all measures within the discretion of Congress, each subject must, of course, be dealt with when it arises under its own peculiar circumstances and conditions. These people gladly yielded to our dominion on assurances, never disowned or withdrawn, of our commanders and other officers that they would become free and equal citizens of the Republic with all the rights implied by that term.

The geographical position of the island makes it, to my mind, especially important that its people should become and remain completely and earnestly loyal, and intimately acquainted and interested with the people here and bound to us by ties of business and friendship common to all. If we do not abandon or impair or imperil our supremely important and exclusive interests—common between our country and the Central American Republics and other American States—in relation to the Nicaragua Canal, Puerto Rico will in times of stress be the key of the situation. It was for this reason that, before peace with Spain was attained, I was earnestly in favor of holding the island, although I was opposed to taking dominion over the Philippines excepting Guam.

Pardon this too lengthy note, and believe me,

Faithfully, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PROCTOR. But, Mr. President, admitting for the sake of argument that Congress has plenary power under the Constitution, that right must be interpreted in the fair and generous sense which the American people give to that instrument, and not given the interpretation of absolutism. We may do many wrong and foolish things without violating the Constitution, but it does not follow that we must do them or ought to do them, and I claim, Mr. President, that the plain people, the sensible, honest American people, who look at this question from no standpoint of interest, who are not sugar men, nor tobacco men, nor men who have any commercial or class interests, which it is claimed must be placated by our action, are the best judges of what is fair and right and honest, and that their judgment in the end must and will prevail.

If we are not bound by the letter of the Constitution, we are bound by justice and humanity to deal with these questions in the spirit of American institutions and American civilization. Our mission must be to prepare these people, who have come by the fortunes of war under our control, for self-government according to American ideas, and during this process we must treat them with absolute justice and good faith. The fundamental principle of our Government is that it must be for the benefit of the governed.

The people, Mr. President, look upon this as a matter of principle, a question of good faith and common honesty; and their moral sense has been shocked and the national heart and conscience stirred by the fear that this measure of taxation will be adopted by Congress. Mr. President, let us thank Heaven that we have a people whose moral sense, whose love of justice and fair play, can not be trifled with with impunity.

Ex-President Harrison has publicly said, "I regard the House bill as a very grave departure from right principles." And it will be admitted, Mr. President, that Benjamin Harrison is a good judge of what are right principles.

The people believe, as the President did when he wrote in his annual message, in the formal and solemn method for communicating with Congress sanctioned by the Constitution and usage, that "our plain duty is to abolish the customs tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico."

The people know that sentence by heart, as I have said, Mr. President, and they will repeat it millions of times within the year from its deliverance unless we perform what the President says is "our plain duty." The people believe that this is a question, not of mere policy, but of principle, as the Secretary of War evidently did when he said in his annual report, "The highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Puerto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States."

Are "the highest considerations of justice and good faith" matters of principle, or simply of policy? The people will answer this question correctly, if we fail to do so. Have these our highest officials in charge of our administration of the affairs of this island changed their minds? Certainly not, by any information of which we can take cognizance.

The Constitution says that the President shall from time to time recommend to the consideration of Congress "such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." He has told us in this constitutional method what is "our plain duty," and, Mr. President, while that statement stands as his solemn judgment, officially made known to us, I propose to do my plain duty as he stated it and as I see it.

Upon the question of good faith, I ask the Secretary to read the proclamation of General Miles to the inhabitants of Puerto Rico when he landed on that island.

The Secretary read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Ponce, Puerto Rico, July 28, 1898.

To the Inhabitants of Puerto Rico:

In the prosecution of the war against the Kingdom of Spain by the people of the United States in the cause of liberty, justice, and humanity its military forces have come to occupy the island of Puerto Rico. They come bearing the banner of freedom inspired by a noble purpose to seek the enemies of our country and yours, and to destroy or capture all who are in armed resistance.

They bring you the fostering arm of a nation of free people, whose greatest power is in its justice and humanity to all those living within its fold. Hence, the first effect of this occupation will be the immediate release from your former political relations, and it is hoped a cheerful acceptance of the Government of the United States. The chief object of the American military forces will be to overthrow the armed authority of Spain and to give to the people of your beautiful island the largest measure of liberty consistent with this military occupation.

We have not come to make war upon the people of a country that for centuries has been oppressed, but, on the contrary, to bring you protection, not only to yourselves but to your property, to promote your prosperity, and bestow upon you the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government. It is not our purpose to interfere with any existing laws and customs that are wholesome and beneficial to your people so long as they conform to the rules of military administration of order and justice. This is not a war of devastation, but one to give to all within the control of its military and naval forces the advantages and blessings of enlightened civilization.

NELSON A. MILES,
Major-General, Commanding United States Army.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, when those people are taxed this 15 per cent on their trade with us will they not appreciate at its proper value our promise to bestow upon them the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government?

I also ask the Secretary to read the letter of President Schurman, who has had rare opportunity as president of the late Philippine Commission to judge of the effect of such legislation. The letter was one written to a personal friend.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEAR SIR: I agree with you that the United States is under obligation to extend its tariff laws to the island of Puerto Rico. But I can not accept your contention that this obligation is derived from the Constitution, which, in my judgment, does not of its own force apply to annexed territories. The obligation is moral, not constitutional. As the President said, with equal truth and felicity, it is "our plain duty."

We are bound to this course by solemn promises. The supreme and irresistible reason for removing all customs barriers between the United States and Puerto Rico is the promise made by General Miles, when first landing American forces on the island, that the Puerto Ricans should enjoy the same rights, privileges, and immunities as the people of the United States. On this understanding the Puerto Ricans accepted American sovereignty, not only without opposition, but with joyful trust and confidence.

The present issue is simply this: Shall we repudiate, or shall we fulfill, the national engagements? Shall this great Republic break faith with the little island of Puerto Rico? Having secured the fruits of General Miles's promise, shall we now renounce the promise?

The American people will not tolerate any faltering with solemn obligations. Recognizing the national good faith as the nation's chiefest good, they will condemn any violation of it as the blackest crime.

All over the country this Puerto Rican question has stirred to the deepest the national heart and conscience; legislation, inspired by a breach of good faith, will bring a terrible Nemesis. It is said that a tariff is needed between Puerto Rico and the United States to provide a case for the courts, to determine the extent of our jurisdiction over the new dependencies, especially the Philippines. I answer that no convenience, no expediency, no other obligation, ever justifies a breach of the national good faith.

Let me add, too, that this Puerto Rican legislation is testing us before the eyes of the Filipinos, who keep well informed of all our doings. They will judge by this legislation of the value of American promises. When the ablest and most statesmanlike of Aguinaldo's emissaries to the Philippine commission once expressed the fear that the American Government might not keep the promises it was making—"for Spain," said he, "made promises and broke them"—I silenced him with the reply: "Signor, the United States is not Spain."

Is he now to learn, are all the Filipinos now to learn, that in the first legislation for our new dependencies we prove faithless to our pledges and recreant to our obligations? Such an exhibition of ourselves will strengthen the hands of Aguinaldo and the insurgents, because unhappily it can be used to support their persistent statement that the Americans are no more trustworthy than the Spaniards.

At the very moment when we need to inspire confidence in the minds of the conquered Filipinos, shall we commit an act which will confirm their distrust of us, quicken their suspicions and breed new and, perhaps, ineradicable antipathies? God forbid!

Mr. PROCTOR. Senator Edmunds says that legislation imposing any kind of revenue burden or benefit on the people of Puerto Rico that is not common to the whole people of the United States—will imitate and parallel the acts of the British Parliament which forced our fathers to just resistance and revolution, and led them to establish a constitution, which in studied and explicit terms forbids any such discrimination.

In this connection I submit, in parallel columns, the statement of the purpose of the measure taxing the colonies and the disposition of the proceeds, and that of our bills in regard to Puerto Rico. The statement of the act of King George is an extract from Lord John Russell's Life of Fox:

The bill "imposing duties on certain kinds of merchandise, when imported into the colonies, required the payment of such duties to be made in gold and silver, and ordered them to be paid into the exchequer, where, with the produce of all former parliamentary duties, they were to be set apart as a separate fund, to be applied under the disposition of Parliament for defraying the future charges of protecting, defending, and securing the colonies."—Russell's Life of Fox, volume 1, page 45.

Under our measures Puerto Rico is to be taxed, and the island pays both ways on merchandise which they ship to or receive from this country, and we have provided that the amount heretofore or hereafter so received "shall be placed at the disposal of the President to be used for the government now existing or which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein," until otherwise provided by law.

Mark the resemblance in these two propositions, that the duties in each case, both past and future, are to be set aside for the benefit of the country taxed. One difference is that while our measure taxes merchandise both going to and coming from Puerto Rico, the British bill only taxed a limited number of articles coming to this country, but did not tax our exports, and this difference is in favor of King George.

But there is another vast difference in the two cases: King George and his ministry undertook to impose a tax upon English people—people of their own blood and race, who knew their rights and dared maintain them; who knew that the hearts of the English people were with them. We impose these taxes upon a people unused to assert their rights in the past and powerless to maintain them if they had; upon a people who welcomed our army when it landed on their island as their friends who had come to free them from the misrule of Spain, and who have conducted themselves in the most peaceable manner; upon a people to whom we had promised to bring "the immunities and blessings of the liberal institutions of our Government," and to whom we had said by the mouths of our highest officials that to establish free trade was "our plain duty," demanded by "the highest considerations of justice and good faith."

We levy this tribute upon a people who are in the direst poverty and distress, resulting in a large part from our very action in taking possession of their island and destroying the existing markets for their products and opening no other, and to this is added, by the hand of the Almighty, the terrible destruction of the tornado, so that they are now in the extreme of poverty and destitution, bordering on starvation. They can make no resistance if they would, and have no disposition to if they could, and must accept and submit to whatever we may do. Does this better our position compared with that of King George? Let us rewrite his biography, or see to it that we do not make ourselves fit subjects for a similar one. We claim that our mission in Puerto Rico was to deliver that people from the thraldom of Spain. Will not they in their hearts pray to be delivered from their deliverers?

But, let us consider this question a moment from the lower plane of mere policy. In the first place, honesty is the best policy, as we shall find if we try the other way.

Again, if this bill becomes a law, it will stand greatly in the way of the development of that little island. It leaves the future in uncertainty; for if we levy a tax of 15 per cent, the next Congress may levy a tax of 50 per cent. If we adopt free trade, it will be accepted by everybody as a definite policy toward Puerto Rico. Business interests will know what to depend upon, and capital and enterprise will go there and soon change the deplorable conditions now existing. Uncertainty always paralyzes industry.

I will ask the Secretary to read an extract from the report of General Davis, the present military governor of Puerto Rico, an officer of the very highest standing and ability, noted for his good sense, judgment, and discretion.

The Secretary read as follows:

American sovereignty for Puerto Rico has so far been disastrous to its commerce, for it has deprived the island of markets where were sold nearly one-half of its total output.

* * * * * * *

If the trade conditions between this island and the United States remain as at present, only industrial paralysis can be expected. But if, on the other hand, the productions of Puerto Rico can be admitted free into the Union, there will be brought about a condition justifying the prediction that the island can carry and finally discharge the entire burden of an exchange of the present currency for the American on the basis of the bullion value of the peso.

With trade conditions such as are suggested there will be a very great revival of business and an enormous increase in productions. After a few years for development on those lines it will not be at all difficult to increase internal taxation by three or four million dollars annually. In that case half a million a year could be applied to reimbursing the National Treasury for the benefit conferred on Puerto Rico in giving it a currency having parity everywhere with gold.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will also ask the Secretary to read a dispatch published in the New York Herald, March 23, 1900, from Mr. Charles M. Pepper, a very intelligent and reliable correspondent and author, well known in this city.

The Secretary read as follows:

PONCE, PUERTO RICO, Thursday.

The fact that the tariff imposition is to be only 15 per cent of the Dingley rates will not allay irritation in Puerto Rico. On the contrary, it promises to increase. The residents of the island had been expecting free trade, for all advices encouraged this belief. The disappointment in the business community is intense.

I visited several towns this week, and everywhere I found the merchants protesting, but conservative men were calming them by telling them of the prospects of free trade. Even the American officials held the opinion that free trade would be accorded.

MERCHANTS ARE GLOOMY.

The prospects for a business revival are not good now because of the tariff imposition, and the uncertainty as to what will happen is far from over. The commercial class and planters declare they will continue to send protests. Yesterday they were rejoicing in the hope of free trade. To-night they are gloomy.

The demonstration of Ponce merchants last night threatened disorder, and troops were held in readiness in the barracks. Free-trade hopes were freely presented, and the gathering dispersed in order.

THE FEELING IS INTENSE.

The authorities do not really fear disorder, but realize that the incident of last night clearly illustrates the intensity of feeling. It is certain that much impetus will be given the political agitation and that the anti-American issue will become a strong one.

Ponce is more temperate than many other towns, where the resentment is steadily increasing, owing to the deplorable condition of affairs and the uselessness of hoping for an early trade revival.

The $2,000,000 appropriation will not placate the Puerto Ricans if they are subjected to tariff discrimination.

CHARLES M. PEPPER.

Mr. PROCTOR. But, Mr. President, it is not the effect of this measure upon the people of Puerto Rico which constitutes the greatest objection to this bill. It is its effect upon ourselves. It is the injustice and unfairness of our treatment of this helpless, dependent people, for which retribution will surely come upon us in some form. Our action must be such as to appeal to the good sense, to the highest sentiment, and the honest judgment of the American people, rather than to respond to the demands of protected interests or special classes.

The Constitution may or may not follow the flag, but the good faith of the American people must stand unquestioned wherever the Stars and Stripes are seen.

These plain people, if I mistake not, while they may and will differ as to what measure of political rights and privileges we shall give to the people of Puerto Rico, will hold that they should have the same rights and opportunities and be subject to no other restrictions than we are—to raise and market their products; to buy the food they eat, which they must largely take from us; to buy the cotton for their clothing, and that of their wives and children, and the tools to cultivate their land, and to sell their crops in any market on the same terms that we do.

These are matters that affect every household. They are the simplest rights of the people. To deprive them of these is a degradation of their manhood. There is no way to successfully govern or deal with people who are in our power, or are inferior to us in advantages and opportunity, except to be strictly just and to keep perfect good faith with them. The stronger must be absolutely just to the weaker. Returning to them in the name of charity money we have taken and propose to take from them can not be called justice.

The plea of harmony in the party appeals to me strongly. But this is a question higher than party or policy; it is a question of principle, and it is better that even a small minority of the party should be right than that we should all be wrong. It is of vital consequence, Mr. President, that this, our first important step in legislation for our new possessions, should be such as to commend itself to the judgment and conscience of the American people.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, on this same subject I propose, if I can, to show where the majority of this Senate has quit the public road, has quit the road pointed out by the law of the land, and also to show what will be the result.

It is always good to get back to the foundation. The great error contained in this bill in reference to the subject which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has just so well pointed out, the violation of all our notions of justice and right and common sense, takes its departure by considering that this Government, the United States, is a sovereign in the sense of the word as used in Europe. This Government is not a sovereign in that sense, and never can be. Some of the supporters of this doctrine found it upon the law of nations. It is true that we are governed by the law of nations so far as that law is applicable to our Government and so far as our Government has the right to exercise the powers declared by the law of nations as pertaining to each separate sovereignty. Vattel draws the distinction as plain as daylight, and so does the Supreme Court of the United States. The idea is that when land is ceded, when a territory is ceded to a nation, that nation can not necessarily exercise all the powers of the former owner. That nation must exercise whatever powers it may have according to its own form of government, and not otherwise.

Take the Government of Spain, from which we derived these possessions. Spain had a right of absolute sovereignty over those islands, and when I say "absolute" I mean unrestricted by any of the constitutional limitations in Spain. But when we take those islands, we take them according to and subject to the powers which the Government of the United States has a right to exercise over Territories, and not in any other way. It is impossible to conceive an idea that the Government of the United States can exercise powers over acquired territory that the Constitution of the United States does not tolerate. This very idea quoted from Vattel—and I hope those Senators who rely on the law of nations as an authority for doing this thing, and doing what is being done now without any authorization from Congress, will listen to what the Supreme Court says on the identical question and in reference to a grant from Spain. We got the territory on the Gulf from Spain, and here is what the Supreme Court of the United States says on the identical question that I am now considering.

If it were true that the United States acquired the whole of Alabama from Spain, no such consequences would result as those contended for.

The contention was that the King of Spain could deed to anyone he chose the land on the banks and under the rivers, and, therefore, the United States could do the same thing; and it had attempted the same thing.

It can not be admitted that the King of Spain could, by treaty or otherwise, impart to the United States any of his royal prerogatives; and much less can it be admitted that they have capacity to receive or power to exercise them. Every nation acquiring territory, by treaty or otherwise, must hold it subject to the constitution and laws of its own government, and not according to those of the governments ceding it.

And Vattel is quoted; and he does strictly sustain that idea.

Mr. MONEY. From what case is the Senator from Alabama quoting?

Mr. PETTUS. I read from 3 Howard, page 225, in the case of Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan et al. It concerns a wharf in the city of Mobile.

Mr. President, there is the question: Can you, by receiving from Spain a title to the island of Puerto Rico, exercise the prerogatives of the King of Spain without any regard to your own form of government?

This Government is not a sovereign, Mr. President, in the sense that that term is used in Europe. The kingdoms of Europe in regard to this subject have no limitations on them, and they are never to be regarded as bound by any limitations such as we have; they never are, and therefore the doctrine that one sovereign ceding territory to another grants all the rights he has and all the powers he has over that territory when applied to the United States is a gross fallacy. Senators read from books and say that the United States has plenary powers over its colonies or over its Territories. So it has in the sense that it has all the power there is; it has plenary powers; no other power can exercise any authority in the way of legislation over the Territories unless the United States Congress chooses to delegate that power, as it frequently does. But the Congress of the United States has plenary powers over all commerce between the States and foreign nations and with the Indian tribes; it has plenary power; that is to say, no other power on earth can legislate on that subject.

But do not Senators know that that power is limited by the other provisions? Surely it is. It has plenary power to levy taxes; but do not Senators know that all taxes must be levied according to the Constitution of the United States? "Plenary power," when used in our decisions, means nothing more than that our Government has all the power that can be exercised on that subject. That is all it means. It does not mean without any possible limitation.

Mr. President, I was very much entertained by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] on yesterday, when he informed us that he was not a lawyer, and he proved it to us not only by asserting it, but by his argument. [Laughter.] Lawyers know that when you come to read a decision of a judge you must take all he says on the subject; that it will not do to merely take a sentence here, or a piece of a sentence here, and a piece of a sentence there. That will never do, but that is exactly what that distinguished Senator did. He read from the opinion of Justice Bradley, in the Mormon Church case, that Congress had plenary power to legislate over the Territories. That is true in the sense that I have spoken of; but if the Senator had turned over a single page he would also have read, "doubtless, Congress, in legislating for the Territories, would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments."

Really, Mr. President, the Senator reminded me of a thing that happened in the old times down in Alabama. They all accuse us of being a very unlearned set down there; and I expect in a large measure it is true. I remember on one occasion in the mountains, when I was a boy and was a solicitor for the State, I went to a preaching, and the minister—I will not state his denomination; I am too politic for that—but the minister was as learned in the Bible as my friend from New Hampshire is in the law. [Laughter.] He took his place in the pulpit, had a good congregation, and a very attentive one, for those people up there have a profound reverence for their Master, whatever may be their learning.

He said: "Brethren, my text this morning will be the following: 'Seven sons did Milcah bear unto Enon.' Now, I expect, brethren, if you would look at the commentaries, you might find various meanings to this text; but taking a common-sense view of it, I will say this: I expect that Enon was sick and the doctor told his seven sons, great strong fellows, that it was absolutely necessary that he should have milk for his nutriment; and thereupon the seven sons went out to look up the cows. The cows had not come up the night before, and so the sons could not find them; they could not find them anywhere in the whole neighborhood; but they came across a she bear, and they milked her and carried the milk to Enon; and so, brethren, it is writ, 'Seven sons did milk-a-bear unto Enon.'" [Laughter.]

That preacher had as accurate a conception of the Scriptures as some of our Senators have of the law of the land. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and I am sorry I have been betrayed off into a light vein.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator explain how the additional words that he has read from the opinion of Justice Bradley refute the general proposition as stated in the language that I quoted from that opinion? I did not say that Congress could do all sorts of unjust and unlawful and unconstitutional things.

Mr. PETTUS. No; but you did say the Constitution did not apply to the Territories. That is what you said; and this man says it does.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Justice Bradley does not say that, and I should like the Senator, furthermore, to take the opinion Mr. Justice Morrow gave, which I quoted yesterday, and refute that and various other opinions that can readily be cited.

Mr. PETTUS. I have tried my hand on them once before. So far as Justice Morrow is concerned, I suspect he is a lawyer; I hope so; I am absolutely certain myself that he is mistaken; I hope he is an upright and just judge; I do not know him; but I am not in the habit of quoting the opinions of district judges on great constitutional questions, and if the Senator from New Hampshire lived where I do he would not. [Laughter.] He never would do it.

Mr. President, we had a wonderful declamation yesterday from our great orator—wonderful. It was marvelous in all its parts. It was so marvelous that I dare say such a thing has never before been heard of in the Senate of the United States. When you get a genuine orator he is absolutely absolved from all rules of logic or common sense. [Laughter.] When it is necessary, in the fervor of oratorical flourishes, to prove any proposition, true or false, rules of common sense and the decent observance of what is due to others must not stand in the way of maintaining "my reputation as a great orator." It will not do. If it is necessary I must break down the ideas of an observance of what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] characterized as "the best policy." If it is necessary I must "draw on my imagination for my facts and on my memory for my flights of fancy," as Ovid Bolus did. When an orator speaks he has a right, in the fervor of his oratory, here in the United States Senate, in reference to the Republicans and Democrats and Populists and any other man who may choose to take a seat here, to speak of them as "enemies to the Government." He has a right to speak of them as "opponents of the Government." The Government, in his mind, is "me and my wife, my son John and his wife; us four, and no more." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I was amazed at that speech. I once before heard one that went off in that direction. Oh, I tell you the senior or junior Senator from Iowa—I do not know which—and the senior or junior Senator from Maine—I do not know which—will have to take some action in reference to that orator. There is no doubt about it in the world. [Laughter.] There will have to be some caucus on the matter. [Laughter.] I tell you, Mr. President, these four wise men from Maine and Iowa could not devote their time, if they want to serve their party well, better than to take some consideration of the orators in this Chamber. [Laughter.] Orators; yes.

Mr. President, the Master once had to select a man to lead the children of Israel out of Egypt and through the wilderness to Canaan. He did not select an orator. [Laughter.] No; he selected one of these men from Maine or Iowa, and his name was Moses. [Laughter.] And he was a stuttering man, too. [Laughter.] But Moses told his Master to his face that he could not do it, because he could not speak to the people. And what was the reply? "There is Aaron. He speaks well." And they took Aaron along, not in command, that was not allowed, but they took him along as a kind of a deputy; and when Moses on his Master's order went up into the mountain for the Tables, the orator left in charge had a golden calf framed. [Laughter.] And he put all the people down to worshiping the golden calf. [Laughter.] More people worship the golden calf now than did in those days. But while Aaron and his people were all down worshiping the golden calf, the man of God appeared, and he pulled out his sword and demanded to know "who was on the Lord's side," and the orator jumped up from his knees, drew his sword, got on Moses's side, and went to killing the Israelites along with Moses. All these orators will do the same thing [laughter]—the last one of them. We saw an instance of it yesterday afternoon.

Mr. President, I am sorry to have detained the Senate so long.

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be read, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont presents an amendment to the pending bill, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 19, strike out the remainder of the sentence after the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the following words:

Any duties be collected after the 30th day of June, 1900, the end of the present fiscal year.

So that the last clause of section 3 will read as follows:

And in no event shall any duties be collected after the 30th day of June, 1900, the end of the present fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask now that we may proceed with the consideration of the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which was under consideration at the time when the Senate adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, which will be stated.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is to an amendment offered by the committee, and it is to strike out the word "sixty," in line 20, on page 8, and insert "one hundred."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out, in line 20, page 8, the word "sixty" and inserting "one hundred;" so as to read:

The present established rate of 100 cents in the coins of the United States.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the amendment, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that yesterday a question was put as to whether 60 cents in our money would, in the domestic trade and business of Puerto Rico, buy as much of the articles used there and consumed in that island as the Puerto Rican dollar—the peso, as they call it—and I understood the Senator from Ohio to say, at least the RECORD shows that he stated, that 45 or 50 cents of American money would buy as much as a Puerto Rican peso would buy.

I call his attention and the attention of the Senate to what appears in the report of Mr. Robert Porter on the currency question of Puerto Rico, made to the Secretary of the Treasury in January, 1899. Mr. Porter calls attention to two letters—I will be very brief on this point—which he commends to the attention of the Secretary, and his language as to the first letter is as follows:

In this connection your attention is directed to the following extract from a comprehensive statement prepared especially for your commissioner by Mr. H. C. Fritze, of Fritze, Lundt & Co., of Puerto Rico. Mr. Fritze is engaged in banking, importing, and exporting at Ponce and Mayaguez, and his firm is the largest and strongest house in the whole island. Here is what he says:

I read only a portion of it. He says, quoting from Mr. Fritze's letter:

The sales are chiefly made in Puerto Rico on from six months to twelve months' time, but the payment is frequently extended to a much longer time and postponed from one year to the other, and all these pending debts are contracted in Puerto Rican currency, too. So it results that if the real currency volume amounts to about $5,500,000, the rate to be fixed for the conversion has to be applied to about ten times that amount in debts pending payment—

He has already shown what the indebtedness of the island amounts to.

And if a fair and just rate should not be agreed upon the economical position of the island may suffer to an enormous extent.

He says:

The rate of 100 per cent—that is, $1 of United States currency for $2 of Puerto Rican currency—

Which would be the same thing as 50 cents of United States currency for $1 of Puerto Rican currency—has been talked of and has been really adopted by the actual military authorities in Puerto Rico for official payments. Such a rate is simply ruinous and can not possibly be thought of as fair and just.

Now, then, Mr. Porter says:

Another phase of the question is that affecting salaries and wages, and on this point attention is respectfully called to a thoughtful article dated Ponce, October 19, 1898, which appeared in the London Times and which was evidently written by one who has fully mastered the situation.

Now I quote from the letter as given by Mr. Porter:

There are, however, other points to be considered. Wages, salaries, contracts, and, indeed, all the business of Puerto Rico is done on Puerto Rican coin. The laborer will not understand that 50 cents in United States money is equivalent to the $1 he has been accustomed to receive. The clerk will find that living on $50 gold monthly is much more difficult than living on $100 silver. The employer of labor will not be able to reduce wages in proportion to the difference in the value of the gold and silver currency, and a heavy balance will ensue against him. The profits of growers of coffee, sugar, and all agricultural products exported and sold for gold will of necessity be largely reduced. In fact, a sudden and arbitrary change from the existing silver basis to the currency of the United States will restrict production in every branch of industry in this island, and for this reason any such change should be most carefully considered in Washington and not decided in the offhand manner at present proposed.

Both of these gentlemen and this report of Mr. Porter are speaking of an exchange on the basis of $1 of American currency for $2 of Puerto Rican currency—that is, 50 cents of American currency for $1 of Puerto Rican currency. Certainly it seems strange that 50 cents of our money should have as much purchasing power in that island as the dollar they already have.

It will be noticed further in the letter from Mr. Fritze, which is quoted by Mr. Porter, that he shows that the Puerto Rican dollar has a much larger value than its bullion value. He says:

The fact that, notwithstanding the low bullion value, a pound sterling was purchasable in Puerto Rico for $7.40 of the new Puerto Rico currency shows that the dollar had a face value and a large amount of fiat in it and was independent altogether of the bullion or intrinsic value of the coin, the same as the American silver dollar in the United States. And this face value was guaranteed by the commercial balance of the island.

It shows that this Spanish currency has an additional value beyond its mere bullion value. I quote the citation from Mr. Porter's report to show that in the opinion of this gentleman the 60 cents which we propose to give will not purchase so much in that island as the dollar which the people already have. Certainly if it will purchase as much it must be on the theory that the prices of all articles in that island, as soon as this exchange is made, will fall, because under this system of exchange, if it is carried out, we will put in the place of 5,500,000 of Puerto Rican dollars, which circulate in that island, 3,300,000 American dollars, and if the number of units of the currency in the island is decreased and they buy as much, then it must be on the theory that all prices in the island will fall.

I call attention to another matter in connection with this question, and then I will leave the subject. A day or two ago we passed a bill to return to the government of Puerto Rico and the people of Puerto Rico $2,095,000, I believe, which we had collected under the present tariff on goods imported from that country to this. The gentlemen on the other side all maintained the doctrine that that tax was legally and properly and constitutionally collected, and therefore that the money derived from it in the United States Treasury belonged rightfully to the Government of the United States. And they took great credit for the fact that we had, in our generosity, donated to this island and its government $2,095,000.

What do we do by this transaction? We take three million three hundred thousand American dollars and carry them to Puerto Rico—I am treating it as if the transaction were all made at once, because when finally consummated it is the same thing—and we get $5,500,000 of theirs and bring them to the United States. They are about the same value as the American dollar, containing about the same amount of silver. We bring them to the United States and run them through our mints, and then we have $5,500,000, a clear profit of $2,200,000, which we have made out of this transaction, a sum much larger than the amount we propose to donate to those people. While one day we say we are donating $2,095,000, in two or three days we turn around and propose a measure by which we will take from them and add to our money and to our currency about $2,200,000.

Mr. FORAKER obtained the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Ohio indulge me a moment, that I may correct the amendment I offered? In the amendment I offered I estimated the Spanish peso at 100 cents, or $1. Looking at the authorities on the subject, I find that it is stated in this communication of General Davis, the governor of Puerto Rico, that the Spanish peso is rated by the Secretary of the Treasury at 93.5 cents to the dollar. So, instead of striking out the word "sixty" and inserting "one hundred," my motion will be to strike out "sixty" and insert "ninety-three cents and five mills."

Mr. SPOONER. What effect will that have on the discharge of mortgage indebtedness?

Mr. MORGAN. I never said it would have any effect.

Mr. SPOONER. I am asking the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the rate fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, answering first the Senator from Tennessee, the remark made by me yesterday and reported in the RECORD, to which he has called attention, had reference to the relative commercial values of the peso and the American dollar. I read in that connection from the report made by General Davis, wherein he says that according to the market price for silver bullion at the time when he wrote, September 30, 1899, our dollar, so far as the bullion in it was concerned, was worth, I think he said, 43 cents, and the Spanish dollar, or the peso, so far as the bullion in it was concerned, was worth only 40 cents.

I remarked in the same connection that I had recently seen it stated elsewhere that the bullion in the peso was worth perhaps 45 to 48 cents. There seems to be some difference of opinion as to just how much bullion there is in it. There is no difference of opinion as to how much there ought to be, but there has been a claim made that the silver pesos have more alloy in them than they should have. In other words, the silver has been debased. The bullion value has been stated to be somewhere from 45 to 48 cents. I have never seen it stated by anybody any higher than that. That is what I was talking about in the colloquy to which the Senator has called attention when he quoted from the RECORD.

I said later on in the remarks made yesterday upon this question that when it came to the matter of paying debts the Spanish peso has 60 per cent of the value of an American dollar; that the exchange value that has been fixed by Executive order is as 60 to 100, 60 cents of our money the equal of 1 peso; and that if you undertake to pay debts in Puerto Rico with our money, it takes only 60 per cent as much of our money as you would have to employ if you used Puerto Rican pesos.

Now, having corrected that matter, let me call the attention of the Senate, in answer to what the Senator from Tennessee says, to what General Davis says in his report as to the purchasing power of the peso in relation to the exchange value that has been fixed by Executive order. At page 31 he calls attention to what I had not observed until after this debate came up. I had not observed it prior to the discussion we had yesterday. He calls attention to the fluctuation in the purchasing value of the peso. He says:

> The local exchange value of the peso has always been greater than its bullion value—

As the Senator from Tennessee has pointed out in reading from Mr. Porter's report—> and this fact was evidently recognized when an arbitrary value of 60 was given it by Executive order. The fluctuations in exchange have been very great in the past, the peso at times approaching a value of 70 and at others falling below 60, as referred to gold.

Then, in further discussing the matter, he says in substance—I will not stop to read it in detail—that as the result of it all the exchange value is a little above what its purchasing value is. So 60 cents is a fair rate to be fixed for exchange and is so regarded in Puerto Rico now, and certainly, if that be true, it is a fair rate for us to fix in providing for an exchange of Puerto Rican coin in the way pointed out in this measure.

One word further, Mr. President. It is not the purpose of the United States to make any money out of this transaction, and certainly it is not the purpose of the United States to make any money at the expense of the Puerto Ricans. The Puerto Ricans have this coinage. We are not responsible for it. It was their coin, in circulation among them, when the occupation commenced. We entered upon the situation as they made it to exist. It has no legal-tender quality in the payment of debts since the sovereignty of Spain has ceased. It has no value, therefore, except its intrinsic value, and that, as General Davis points out, is in bullion worth something less than 50 cents on the dollar.

It is impossible for them to successfully conduct their business transactions with two coins, and they have had all the difficulties to contend with that attend the presence in circulation among a people of two coins, necessitating an exchange of money in connection with every kind of business transaction. The money changer is the man who profits by it. The Puerto Rican wants to have but one coin, and he wants our coin, and it seems to be the universal sentiment that our coin should be substituted for the Puerto Rican coin. The only question is, How can that transaction be consummated? The method provided by the bill is the only way that anybody has pointed out. Our endeavor was, after that was settled, to find a rate of exchange that would be fair to the people of Puerto Rico; and inasmuch as the President had fixed 60 per cent as the rate of exchange while the two coins were in circulation there, we adopted that rate for this measure.

Now, it is true, as was said here yesterday, that if we take up the Puerto Rican coins in exchange at that rate and coin them into our money, that bullion, when it becomes our money, will have a greater purchasing power. It will be worth 100 cents on the dollar; but it will be worth 100 cents on the dollar not because of anything we have taken away from the Puerto Ricans, for we will not have taken anything away from them; it will have this increased value simply because it has become money of the United States and as such has all the credit and wealth and power of the United States behind it. It is what we add to that which we buy from them in making this exchange—it is because of that it will have this increased value. I point that out simply to show that we are taking nothing from them.

It is said on the other side that we can afford, if we are to have this increased value, to give it to the Puerto Ricans, and the talk here yesterday was as though all this Puerto Rican money, all these pesos, amounting to something like six or seven million dollars, were to be found in the pockets of the poor people of Puerto Rico. That is not true. General Davis, in this report, gives us some information as to where this money is located. On page 30 of his report he points it out as follows:

> On August 10 there was stored in three local banks the sum of 2,691,500 pesos in silver.

And so on. In other words, Mr. President, about half of all the Puerto Rican coin in Puerto Rico that would be redeemed or exchanged under the provisions of this law was in August last in the vaults of the banks. Perhaps more of it is there by this time; and who can doubt, if the bill becomes a law, that it will all be exchanged through the medium of the banks? That will be the natural course for it to take.

So if we were to give the Puerto Ricans, for what is worth nothing to us except as bullion, this full value of 100 cents on the dollar, this increased value of 40 per cent, to use the language employed yesterday, we would be giving it not to the people of Puerto Rico, in whose pockets Senators assume this money will be found, but we would be giving it to those banks; and the profit to them would amount, on the $3,000,000 they now hold, to more than a million dollars.

That result should not be allowed. But, Mr. President, it should be remembered that we do not want to buy this bullion; we do not want to enter into the business of buying their silver; we are doing it only for their accommodation. There is no reason, therefore, why we should provide so that the increment of value which we give to the bullion by making it into our money will go to a few people who, having half the money already, would without doubt acquire practically the whole of it. Certainly it would at least come through that channel, and they would get the whole benefit of the transaction. The 40 per cent increase in value should belong to the United States, whose credit creates it, and not be given to a few bankers in Puerto Rico who surrender nothing for it.

Therefore, Mr. President, I insist that the provision found in the bill, that the rate of exchange should be at 60 per cent, is the nearest approximation to what is fair and just that it is possible for us to make. That is the rate fixed by the President; that is the rate the people are already familiar with; that is the rate that has proven satisfactory to everybody in Puerto Rico; that is the rate that is satisfactory to everybody now in Puerto Rico. I see no reason to depart from it, especially no reason when, according to that rate, we are giving them more than the real value of that which we get and sharing to that extent the value that we add to the bullion by putting our credit behind it.

So I think, Mr. President, the rate named in the bill ought to be maintained and the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the amendment should be voted down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out "sixty," in line 20, page 8, and insert "ninety-three and one-half."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. FORAKER). Do you object to that change?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object to the change. I object to the amendment; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. What is that? We do not understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BACON. I understand that; but I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to ask the Senator from Ohio something in reference to some change, and we do not know to what he refers.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Wisconsin asked me, as I understood him, whether I object to the Senator from Alabama changing his amendment from "one hundred" to "ninety-three and five-tenths" as the rate of exchange, and I say I do not. The question would be whether "sixty" shall be stricken out and "ninety-three and five-tenths" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the Secretary read the amendment to the amendment as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 20, section 10, after the word "of," strike out "sixty" and insert "ninety-three and one-half."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That, I understand, is the actual exchange value of these coins at this time.

Mr. FORAKER. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. It is the par value.

Mr. FORAKER. The real value, the bullion value, in the peso and the American dollar has the relation of 93.5 to 100.

Mr. ALLEN. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] has been transferred to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. SIMON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on this question.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota to transfer his pair to my colleague [Mr. BARD].

Mr. NELSON. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WETMORE. My colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is unavoidably absent, and a pair on this question has been arranged between him and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. BERRY. I desire to state that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] is paired on all these questions with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Texas were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLEN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] is paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that we transfer our pairs and vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. I will let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY. I wish to state that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], and that if the junior Senator from South Carolina were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] that we make the same arrangement we made yesterday, so that he and I may vote.

Mr. KENNEY. Very well.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENNEY. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is unavoidably absent. I desire to announce his pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. The pair stands on all these amendments to the Puerto Rican bill.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Under the arrangement proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (after having voted in the negative). I should like to ask if the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the junior Senator from Florida has not voted.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida.

Mr. HANNA. I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], which I transfer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Allen,	Berry,	Harris,	Morgan,
Bacon,	Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,
Bate,	Culberson,	Kenney,	Turley.

NAYS—33.

Baker,	Foster,	Kyle,	Ross,
Carter,	Frye,	Lindsay,	Sewell,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Clark, Wyo.	Gear,	McBride,	Spooner,
Davis,	Hale,	McComas,	Wellington,
Deboe,	Hanna,	McCumber,	Wetmore.
Depew,	Hansbrough,	McMillan,
Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Perkins,
Foraker,	Kean,	Quarles,

NOT VOTING—42.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Nelson,	Sullivan,
Allison,	Elkins,	Penrose,	Taliaferro,
Bard,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Teller,
Beveridge,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.	Thurston,
Burrows,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.	Tillman,
Butler,	McEnery,	Pritchard,	Turner,
Caffery,	McLaurin,	Proctor,	Vest,
Chilton,	Mallory,	Rawlins,	Warren,
Clark, Mont.	Martin,	Scott,	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	Mason,	Simon,
Cullom.	Money,	Stewart,

So Mr. MORGAN'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. That is section 10 as reported by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is section 10.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask that section 8, as it was originally presented, shall be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 15, strike out section 8 down to and including line 18, page 10.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the attention of the Senator from Ohio for a moment to a fact. In the section which he now proposes to strike out, and in the succeeding sections which he also proposes to strike out upon the ground that other matter has been substituted for that in these several sections, there is a good deal of the same character as the amendment which I have offered, and which I have asked shall be held back for the accommodation of certain Senators. I want it understood that the motion to strike out this section shall in no manner prejudice the right to offer that amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I ask that this may be stricken out because the amendments adopted yesterday make it unnecessary.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, and only make the suggestion.

Mr. FORAKER. We come now to sections 8, 9, and 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Ohio to move that sections 8, 9, and 10 be stricken out of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The next amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 11. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the government of Puerto Rico for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the island, not, however, including defenses, barracks, harbors, light-houses, buoys, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall be paid by the treasurer of Puerto Rico out of the revenues in his custody.

Mr. ALLEN. I could not hear back here what disposition was made of sections 9 and 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sections 8, 9, and 10, the Chair will state, have been stricken from the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. They have been stricken out? Where is the proposed amendment found?

Mr. CULLOM. The part stricken out is in brackets.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. ALLEN. I could not hear from my seat here what disposition was made of sections 8, 9, and 10 in brackets.

Mr. FORAKER. They were stricken out because yesterday the Senate adopted certain sections of the House bill with amendments which makes these sections unnecessary.

Mr. ALLEN. What sections were adopted yesterday?

Mr. FORAKER. All the sections that are printed in this reprint up to section 10, which we had under consideration when the Senate adjourned.

Mr. ALLEN. I wanted before that was passed to offer an amendment to it. I do not know whether I understand the Senator from Ohio that we have passed over these matters, supposing that they are completed as far as a vote is concerned, or not.

Mr. FORAKER. No; they are completed now so far as the committee amendments are concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it in order and agreeable to the Senator to offer an amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. Other Senators are holding back their amendments until the committee amendments are made, and then the amendments can be moved to the section as perfected by the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. That order was made when the bill was taken up?

Mr. FORAKER. That was done by consent.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well, then.

Mr. FORAKER. I will be through presently, and then any amendments can be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to section 11. Without objection, the amendment of the committee is agreed to. The Secretary will read the next amendment.

The Secretary read the committee amendment, as follows:

SEC. 12. That the statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, except as hereinbefore or hereinafter otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "States," section 12, page 12, line 17, insert:

Except the internal-revenue laws, which, in view of the provisions of section 3, shall not have such force and effect in Puerto Rico.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator that the word "such," in line 19, might, perhaps, with benefit be omitted; so as to read "shall not have force."

Mr. FORAKER. Well, let it read, "shall not have force." Strike out "such." I accept the suggestion. Let the amendment be so modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be modified by striking out the word "such," in line 19. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. What is that amendment?

The SECRETARY. Section 13——

Mr. FORAKER. Wait a moment. The Senator from Georgia desires to know what that amendment is. In section 12 we exempt from operation in Puerto Rico the internal-revenue laws in view of the provision made in section 3 of this act. It provides that internal-revenue duties shall be added to the 15 per cent on all articles imported into the United States from Puerto Rico, and I do not want them to pay the internal-revenue tax twice.

Mr. BACON. That necessarily, I think, will be a matter to be determined upon the general proposition embraced in the previous section, and I prefer that it should not be acted upon until the Senate has passed upon the proposition to strike out the previous section with reference to the tariff duties.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator from Georgia will agree with me that if his amendment should prevail, this will have to be recast in a number of particulars, in this as well as others. The amendment might stand; and if the Senator's amendment should not prevail, this would be all right. If it should prevail, I would have to change it, of course. Let it be acted upon with that understanding. If your amendment should prevail, of course this and other provisions in the bill that would be in conflict with your amendment would have to be changed.

Mr. BACON. I would not desire that the terms of that amendment should in any event be considered as agreed to by Senators who are not present.

Mr. FORAKER. Let it be agreed to only conditionally that the Senator reserves the right, as was agreed yesterday, whenever it suits his convenience to move to strike out sections 2 and 3. If section 3 should be stricken out, of course this section would have to go out of the bill, because it expressly states on its face that it is made in view of the provision of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia to ask that that amendment be passed over. The Chair announced that it was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator will have no objection, with the understanding that we have about it, because if his amendment should prevail, I myself would ask to have it taken out, of course.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What amendment is under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 12, page 12.

Mr. PETTUS. Is that matter under consideration?

Mr. FORAKER. It is the matter under consideration now.

Mr. PETTUS. I have a substitute to one of the amendments proposed in section 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment presented by the Senator from Alabama to section 12.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 12, on page 15, so that it shall read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Constitution of the United States and also the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in other Territories of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. This is not an amendment to an amendment, sir. It is an amendment to the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the section is a committee amendment.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to have the amendment read again?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 12 and insert:

SEC. 12. That the Constitution of the United States and also the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in other Territories of the United States.

[Mr. ALLEN addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for a vote on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of section 12 it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 12. That the Constitution of the United States and also the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in other Territories of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], which I transfer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I again announce the arrangement of pairs that I announced this morning, and will vote "nay." This arrangement permits the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] also to vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. HOAR's name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired, as I have already announced, with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] on all these Puerto Rican questions.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. BARD], and vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I may transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNEY (when Mr. TURNER's name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is away from the Senate on important business, and that he is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WETMORE. My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this question, under the general arrangement between him and the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] with that Senator. I am not advised, however, as to how, on these amendments, the senior Senator from Colorado would vote. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CARTER. I was requested to state that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired on this vote with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. The senior Senator from Iowa would, if present, vote "nay," and the senior Senator from Missouri would vote "yea."

Mr. QUARLES (after having voted in the negative). I took the liberty of transferring my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I now learn that he is paired with another Senator, and, therefore, in the absence of my regular pair, I feel in duty bound to withdraw my vote. [A pause.] It is suggested that it would be proper for me to transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If there is no objection, I shall be pleased to do that, and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] is not paired. If that is true, I will take the liberty of transferring my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HEITFELD. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Allen,	Clay,	Kenney,	Turley.
Bacon,	Harris,	Money,
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Pettus,

NAYS—33.

Baker,	Foster,	Kyle,	Quarles,
Carter,	Frye,	Lindsay,	Ross,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Sewell,
Cullom,	Gear,	McBride,	Shoup,
Davis,	Hale,	McComas,	Spooner,
Deboe,	Hanna,	McCumber,	Wetmore.
Depew,	Hansbrough,	McMillan,
Fairbanks,	Hawley,	Nelson,
Foraker,	Kean,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Culberson,	Pettigrew,	Teller,
Allison,	Daniel,	Platt, Conn.	Thurston,
Bard,	Elkins,	Platt, N. Y.	Tillman,
Beveridge,	Hoar,	Pritchard,	Turner,
Burrows,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,	Vest,
Butler,	McEnery,	Rawlins,	Warren,
Caffery,	McLaurin,	Scott,	Wellington,
Chilton,	Mallory,	Simon,	Wolcott.
Clark, Mont.	Martin,	Stewart,
Clark, Wyo.	Mason,	Sullivan,
Cockrell,	Penrose,	Taliaferro,

So Mr. PETTUS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment to section 12.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged question. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to the motion which I propose to make, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I hope that motion will not prevail. Several Senators desire to speak to-morrow to this bill. Two or three have asked me if there would be a session to-morrow, stating that they desire to attend and to speak to-morrow. There are so many Senators who are to speak on Monday that it will be necessary to have a session to-morrow in order to accommodate them.

Mr. HALE. That was my object in calling the attention of the Senator from Ohio to my motion. Several Senators desire that there shall be an adjournment until Monday, but under the conditions stated by the Senator from Ohio I do not press the motion, and withdraw it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment which I wish to have read and acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 12 the following:

Provided, however, That as to distilled spirits said internal-revenue laws are given force and effect in Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment presented by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FORAKER. I will call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that by the provisions of section 3, already adopted by the Senate, distilled spirits imported from Puerto Rico into the United States will have to pay $1.10 a gallon in addition to the 15 per cent; and if the amendment should prevail which is now offered to section 12, there should be a change made in section 3, excepting from the operations of that section the distilled spirits.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I had noted that in my copy of the bill and intended if this amendment prevailed to ask the Senate to permit me to go back and to make that amendment to section 3.

Mr. President, in connection with the amendment which I have submitted, I do not want to detain the Senate, but I will simply say that several very intelligent witnesses—Puerto Ricans—before our committee testified that they would be willing to pay the internal-revenue tax on rum and that it would not be a hardship to them. I turn to the statement of one of the witnesses, Mr. Tulio Larrinaga. He is a very intelligent Puerto Rican and a man who has lived in this country for four or five years.

Mr. PERKINS. What effect do you think the application of our internal-revenue laws to the island would have? We have a tax upon alcoholic spirts, and you make a great deal of rum, and there will probably be breweries established there, and there is a proprietary and stamp tax. Do you think the people would like that system?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Yes, sir; we would accept it. Our people are conscious of their duties as well as of their rights, and they would only think it fair.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you now impose any tax on distilleries?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Yes, sir; there is a tax levied.

Mr. PERKINS. Do you remember what it is?

Mr. LARRINAGA. I could not tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. Our tax is $1.10 per gallon. Your rum would be taxed at that rate if our internal-revenue system were applied as here. Could it stand that tax?

Mr. LARRINAGA. The feeling of the people, I believe, is that it would be right.

If I remember correctly, the British vice-consul, Mr. Finlay, who likewise testified before the committee, who, I think, manufactures a very large proportion of the rum on the island of Puerto Rico, admitted that it would not be considered a hardship if our internal-revenue laws were applied to that particular article.

But whether a hardship or not, Mr. President, I submit that this is one of the articles we ought to tax, whether it is in Puerto Rico or anywhere else under our jurisdiction. If it results in less consumption of the article than is now in vogue, it will not do the people of Puerto Rico any harm, and it will bring some revenue into the government to help build schoolhouses and roads and make other needed improvements in the island. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 12 add the following:

Provided, however, That as to distilled spirits said internal revenue laws are given force and effect in Puerto Rico.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I would be glad to have the Senator from Ohio explain the theory on which the proposed amendment to the amendment of the committee proceeds. The first part of section 12 provides—

That the statutory laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, except as hereinbefore or hereinafter otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in Puerto Rico as in the United States.

Then the amendment to the amendment follows:

Except the internal-revenue laws, which, in view of the provisions of section 3, shall not have such force and effect in Puerto Rico.

What is the provision of section 3?

Mr. FORAKER. The provisions of section 3, which were adopted yesterday, are that on all goods imported into this country from Puerto Rico there shall be paid, first, 15 per cent of the rates of duty provided by the Dingley Act, and then—in addition thereto upon articles of merchandise of Puerto Rican manufacture coming into the United States and withdrawn for consumption or sale upon payment of a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon the like articles of merchandise of domestic manufacture.

So the Senator will see that if distilled spirits manufactured in Puerto Rico should be sent into the United States under section 3, it would be necessary in securing their entry here to pay 15 per cent of the tariff rates provided for under the Dingley law and, in addition, $1.10 a gallon, the internal-revenue tax.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Which would necessarily prohibit the importation of any spirits from Puerto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. No; not that alone, because other countries shipping here in competition would have to pay the full Dingley rates, which would amount to more.

Now, the amendment proposed by the committee to section 12, reciting that it was in view of this provision of section 3, prevents the application of the internal-revenue laws to Puerto Rico. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes now a proviso, an amendment to the amendment, namely, that the internal-revenue laws shall apply as to distilled spirits. I call his attention to the fact that if that should prevail, then on distilled spirits there would have to be paid $1.10 in Puerto Rico and another $1.10, under section 3, when imported into the United States.

But he has stated to the Senate that if his amendment prevailed, he then proposed to make an amendment to section 3, excepting from the operation of that section distilled spirits, so that distilled spirits would pay an internal-revenue tax in Puerto Rico and nothing else unless brought into this country, and then only 15 per cent of the Dingley rate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The internal-revenue tax proposed to be raised by the Senator from New Hampshire would then be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. It would be paid into the Treasury of the United States just as the other tax collections are, temporarily, until the civil government is established which is provided for by this act; and as soon as that government is provided, it would then be paid into the insular treasury of Puerto Rico.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Now, this brings me down to the point I wanted to get. As we are providing a local government for Puerto Rico in this bill, as I understand it, the proposition of the committee is that there shall be no revenue from the distillation of spirits to support that government. In this country we will have a tax of that sort. It seems to me if we are going to provide a government down there it would be a legitimate object of taxation, and that whatever spirits may be produced in the island or anywhere else for their consumption should pay the same rate of taxation that would be paid in the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is in error in the statement he makes as to the theory of the committee. The theory of the committee is that the laws now in force in Puerto Rico under which rum and tobacco are taxed, an excise tax being provided by those laws, shall continue in force for local purposes, just as they are now in force for local purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. While I fully believe in this amendment, and that it should be incorporated in the bill, at the request of certain Senators around me I will now withdraw it and give notice that unless my mind is changed, which I do not anticipate, I will offer it when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Ohio state the rate of tax on distilled spirits in Puerto Rico?

Mr. FORAKER. It is 3 cents a liter in their law, which, I understand, is the equivalent of about 11 cents per gallon. They have no distilled spirits there except only rum, and that is a very cheap commodity; it costs only 20 or 30 cents a gallon to manufacture and produce it. It is in universal use among the people, not as a beverage so much as for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We make whisky in this country at a less cost than that, and tax it a good deal more.

Mr. FORAKER. So we do, and in the bill that the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman reported to the Senate we provided that the internal-revenue laws of the United States should be extended to and apply in Puerto Rico, but in the House they did not do that. They provided in lieu of that that an internal-revenue duty should be paid only on such commodities as they brought into this country which would be subject to the internal-revenue tax in Puerto Rico if the laws had been extended there.

The reason for that was, as given by a number of witnesses before the committee, notwithstanding the testimony that has been cited here to the contrary, that to impose these laws would work very great hardship, especially to impose it at this particular time. General Davis's testimony was very explicit upon that point, and my understanding was that the provision was incorporated in the House bill which has now been adopted by the Senate upon his statements as to the results of applying our internal-revenue laws, and upon his recommendation. I can turn to his testimony on that point.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire has been withdrawn, the Chair understands.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment is withdrawn and I wanted simply to add a word to the observation I made, that I have withdrawn it for the reason that Senators have said to me that they desire a little time to examine the amendment and consider its force.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought there was a committee amendment pending to that section.

Mr. FORAKER. That has been adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That has been adopted?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I think I will suggest to the Senator that after the bill is passed he ought to change the title of the bill to make it read, amongst the other things that it is intended to do, "to encourage the production of rum in the island of Puerto Rico."

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; the Senator can make that motion if he likes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the next amendment, which is section 13.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the legislative authority hereinafter provided shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law or ordinance, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act, as it may from time to time see fit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 14. That all judicial process shall run in the name of "United States of America, as: the President of the United States," and all criminal or penal prosecutions in the local courts shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of "The people of Puerto Rico;" and all officials authorized by this act shall before entering upon the duties of their respective offices take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Puerto Rico.

Mr. TURLEY. I should like to ask a question of the Senator. I ask why these officials are to be required to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, if the Constitution is not in force in Puerto Rico and has no application thereto?

Mr. FORAKER. That does not make it unnecessary to take such an oath. In every Territory the United States has legislated for since the beginning of the Government, whether the Constitution was extended over it or not, it has been provided that the officials appointed to administer the laws that might be enacted by Congress there and all the officials appointed by the President shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States; and this provides that the officials in Puerto Rico shall qualify by taking an oath of office to support the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was, to insert as a new section the following:

THE GOVERNOR.

SEC. 15. That the official title of the chief executive officer shall be "The Governor of Puerto Rico." He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; he shall hold his office for a term of four years and until his successor is chosen and qualified unless sooner removed by the President; he shall reside in Puerto Rico during his official incumbency, and shall maintain his office at the seat of goverment; he may grant pardons and reprieves, and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of Puerto Rico, and respites for offenses against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be ascertained; he shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint, and shall participate in and may veto any legislation enacted, as hereinafter provided; he shall be the commander in chief of the militia, and shall at all times faithfully execute the laws, and he shall in that behalf have all the powers of governors of the Territories of the United States that are not locally inapplicable; and he shall annually, and at such other times as he may be required, make official report of the transactions of the government in Puerto Rico, through the Secretary of State, to the President of the United States: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, delegate and assign to him such executive duties and functions as may in pursuance with law be so delegated and assigned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like the Senator from Ohio to explain what the word "participate," in line 22, means where it says, speaking of the governor, that he "shall participate in and may veto any legislation enacted, as hereinafter provided." Does that mean that he shall have a vote in the legislative assembly?

Mr. FORAKER. It means that he shall be a member ex officio of the executive council, as provided in the next section.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And he is to have a vote?

Mr. FORAKER. He is to have a vote in the executive council.

Mr. LINDSAY. And he is to have the power of the veto in addition?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; he is to have the power of the veto in addition. It was thought the governor could not be too close to the assembly in all its legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee, inserting section 15, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was, to insert as a new section the following:

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

SEC. 16. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the period of four years, unless sooner removed by the President, a secretary, an attorney-general, a treasurer, an auditor, a commissioner of the interior, and a commissioner of education, each of whom shall reside in Puerto Rico during his official incumbency and have the powers and duties hereinafter provided for them, respectively, and who, together with the governor and five other persons of good repute, to be also appointed by the President for a like term of four years, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall constitute an executive council, at least five of whom shall be native inhabitants of Puerto Rico, and, in addition to the legislative duties hereinafter imposed upon them as a body, shall exercise such powers and perform such duties as are hereinafter provided for them, respectively, and who shall have power to employ all necessary deputies and assistants for the proper discharge of their duties as such officials and as such executive council.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This seems to me a most extraordinary proceeding, of having a number of executive officers also members of the legislative council. I should like to have the Senator give some reason why there should be this radical departure from anything that has ever obtained in this country in either the Federal or State governments.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have several times made explanation of this provision to the Senate, but I presume the Senator did not happen to be in the Chamber at any one of those times.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No; I have not heard it.

Mr. FORAKER. The legislation is unlike other legislation for the Territories that the United States has been called upon to legislate for, but chiefly because the conditions are radically different. It is necessary to organize a new government for Puerto Rico, for they never have had anything in the matter of government that would be acceptable to us, and it was thought that these bureau officers, if I may call them by that name, should be appointed by the President, that they should be selected by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in order that there might be every precaution taken that only capable men would be chosen to perform the very responsible and very arduous duties that will devolve upon them—the duty of practically organizing and setting in operation the machinery of that government.

It was thought by the committee that the men who were engaged in organizing those bureaus, and thus starting this government, would be more capable, because they would have a more familiar knowledge than anybody else, to legislate for Puerto Rico. So we conceived the idea of making them a part of the upper house of the legislative assembly, all the members of which are to be appointed by the President.

We are not acting in that particular without precedent, for the Senator will recall that in many instances it has been provided, in establishing a Territorial government, that the legislative body entire should be appointed by the President. That was the case in Louisiana, and it has been the case in other instances. The only departure that it can be said there is here is in making the bureau officers themselves a part of the legislative body, the reason for which is what I have just given.

The number of bureau officers is six. With them will be appointed five of the citizens of Puerto Rico, natives of the island—at least that many—or the President may appoint more natives if he wants to. He may appoint all the executive council from Puerto Ricans if he so desires; but it is not expected that he will.

We have made the governor a part of the legislative council for the same reason. There is no departure from precedent in that respect either. The governor was a part of the legislative body in nearly all the early Territorial governments that were framed by Congress, and I would say to the Senator that the committee gave to this a great deal of consideration, and agreed to put it in this form after they had discussed it at very great length. I need not, I trust, go further into detail than I have.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator—he has given great attention to this subject—whether it is not true that in the history of every primitive government the distinction that we draw between the different departments of government and keeping them strictly separate is not observed? I do not suppose, from my reading, that there has ever been a new colonial government formed, a government of a dependency, where it has not been found advisable in the legislative branch or in the council to utilize the experience and judgment of executive officers. The line is now drawn jealously in all of the States; but provisions prohibiting an executive officer in any way sharing in legislative powers were never observed in the early days of the United States.

Some States do not even to-day observe them, though generally they are guarded, as I have said, with great jealousy; but in primitive conditions, when in organizing government there is needed the benefit of experience, of knowledge, more than anything else, officers who do share in the executive branches of the government, in the responsibility of those branches, are also utilized in the legislative branch; and was not that, I ask the Senator from Ohio, borne in mind in this provision?

A hundred years from now, two hundred years from now, perhaps less, when Puerto Rico has emerged into the condition of Ohio, or Massachusetts, or Maine, or Arkansas, the line will be drawn with great accuracy; but at present has not the Senator in charge of the bill found that it was necessary in organizing these proposed legislative departments to take advantage of the experience of the men in the executive branch?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Maine has expressed better than I could have expressed it exactly what was in the mind of the committee; and I might say further in the State of the Senator from Arkansas, when the first Territorial government was established, the legislative authority was conferred upon the governor and the judges; they were made the legislature; and so in a number of other Territories. Similar provisions were made in the Northwest Territory when that was organized before the adoption of the Constitution. The legislative power, until the Territory could be organized, was vested in the governor and judges of the courts.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. One word more, if the Senator will wait for just a moment.

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. This bill provides for this government only temporarily. One of the last provisions in the bill is for a commission to be appointed to revise, examine, and codify the laws, to report within the year to Congress what ought to be adopted as the permanent form of government there. We thought during this temporary stage, while this government was in operation, it would be better—and the committee were unanimous upon that point—to make these officials a part of the legislative body, so that in legislation there would be that familiar knowledge at command that they alone could have with respect to matters of a legislative character.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, conceding the propriety—and I do not dispute it—of permitting these executive officers to compose any part of the legislative department of the government, I ask the Senator whether or not in the past we have ever created a legislature in which the governor was to sit as a member, and then to have the power, if he was outvoted in the legislature, to veto the legislation?

Mr. FORAKER. There have been a number of instances, I think, where there has been that provision. I think that was the case as to Louisiana, and I think it was the case as to——

Mr. LINDSAY. My recollection is not distinct; but it seems to me that such ought not to be the case; that the governor ought not to participate in the legislation, and then exercise the power of disapproving it after he has not been able to control the legislature. Therefore I move to strike out so much of the amendment as provides that the governor shall participate in the legislation.

Mr. FORAKER. I can only say to the Senator that we considered that as well as the other provisions of the section, and we were of the opinion that the governor, being the one great, strong, responsible man in the whole government, ought to be closely identified with all the legislation and everything that affects the island, especially during the temporary stage, while the government is being established and set into operation. I do not see that the amendment will do any harm. Ordinarily I would agree with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], but under the circumstances I feel that the provision ought to stand as we have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kentucky to move an amendment?

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me that this proposition makes the governor practically an autocrat, for we let him take part in the legislative deliberations with the knowledge of everybody that he can veto whatever legislation does not suit him. We practically put the legislative council under his control. If there were but eleven men in Puerto Rico who were sufficiently intelligent to hold seats in that body, there might be some reason why this mixing of legislative and executive functions should take place.

In the early settlement of this country, of course, government was an experiment; a good many crude things were tried and abandoned, but I do not think there can be any recent instance found of legislative and executive functions being mixed in this way. If there could be enough men found in Puerto Rico to make a legislative council of eleven, independent of the executive branch, and let the executive branch make recommendation of such legislation as was needed, and then let the function of lawmaking be exercised independently, it would be much better and much more in accordance with modern opinion in the United States.

Mr. LINDSAY. And more in harmony with our institutions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky has offered an amendment.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; my motion is, in line 22, on page 13, section 15, after the word "appoint," to strike out "and shall participate in;" so as to read:

He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint, and may veto any legislation enacted, as hereinafter provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. HALE. I desire the attention of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I am listening to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Ohio think that this plan of his—in which I agree—to utilize the executive department, requiring that the governor shall participate in the proceedings of the legislative body, is essential? It seems to me on the first reading, the first suggestion, that it is not at all necessary to the force of the Senator's plan. The governor is distinctively executive. Should he participate in the proceedings of a body that he may be called upon to exercise negative force upon?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. In the line of the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if the governor is permitted to be a part of the legislature and to be permitted to vote upon bills, it will lead to a very anomalous situation. The bill provides for a veto by the governor of a measure which has passed both houses, and for its return to the houses, and the power to pass it over the veto. Would the governor have the power to sit and vote on his own veto?

Mr. HALE. That is the very question I wished to suggest.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to say to the Senator from Maine that this is a provision that I have no especial desire to see kept in the bill; and I am perfectly willing, in view of what has been said, to have it go out.

Mr. HALE. I think that will be very much better.

Mr. FORAKER. Therefore, I accept the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], if I may be allowed to do so, and suggest that he incorporate also in his amendment the following language in section 16, where it now reads "and that together with the governor and," to strike out the words "and that together with the governor and;" so that the amendment will read:

After the word "appoint," in line 22, section 15, on page 13, strike out "and shall participate in;" so as to read:

"He shall commission all officers that he may be authorized to appoint and may veto any legislation enacted."

Then——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be agreed to in the absence of objection. The Senator has indicated another amendment in section 16, which he will be kind enough to state.

Mr. FORAKER. In section 16, on page 14, line 18, after the word "respectively," I move to strike out the words "and who together with the governor and."

Mr. GALLINGER. Not the word "together."

Mr. FORAKER. No.

Mr. LODGE. Strike out "with the governor and."

Mr. FORAKER. Strike out the words "the governor and."

Mr. GALLINGER. Making the number five, instead of six.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in section 16, page 14, line 18, to strike out "the governor and;" so as to read:

And who, together with five other persons of good repute, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was, to insert as section 17 the following:

SEC. 17. That the secretary shall record and preserve minutes of the proceedings of the executive council and the laws enacted by the legislative assembly and all acts and proceedings of the governor, and shall promulgate all proclamations and orders of the governor and all laws enacted by the legislative assembly. He shall, within sixty days after the end of each session of the legislative assembly, transmit to the President, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of State of the United States one copy each of the laws and journals of such session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 18. That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or disability of the governor, or his temporary absence from Puerto Rico, the secretary shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the governor during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 19. That the attorney-general shall have all the powers and discharge all the duties provided by law for an attorney-general of a Territory of the United States in so far as the same are not locally inapplicable, and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports, through the governor, to the Attorney-General of the United States as he may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 20. That the treasurer shall give bond, approved as to form by the attorney-general of Puerto Rico, in such sum as the executive council may require, not less, however, than the sum of $100,000, with surety approved by the governor, and he shall collect and be the custodian of the public funds, and shall disburse the same as required by law on warrants signed by the auditor and countersigned by the governor, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make, through the governor, such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as he may require.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that this fund ought not to be disbursed without an appropriation. The law requires the legislative department of this Government to make appropriations, and provides that the money shall be disbursed in accordance with law from such appropriations.

Mr. FORAKER. The money in the hands of this official will be subject to the legislation enacted by the legislative assembly provided by this act for Puerto Rico. The Congress will have no control over the money that is in the hands of this official for purely insular purposes. He will hold it as a custodian of the public funds and disburse it as that legislature may provide by law.

Mr. ALLEN. Is there a provision that the legislature shall make appropriations?

Mr. FORAKER. I think that would be a proper interpretation of that provision. He "shall disburse the same as required by law." Would the Senator from Nebraska suggest some other form of expression? This may not be the best that can be adopted.

Mr. ALLEN. In section 20, on page 16, line 9, after the word "law," I suggest that there should be inserted the words "only after an appropriation."

It seems to me in legislation of this kind and in the absence of a constitution or a statute requiring that disbursements shall not be made without an appropriation, there ought to be every reasonable safeguard and check placed in the bill. Possibly the money may come into the hands of the treasurer, and it ought not to be paid out on warrant or otherwise unless specifically appropriated by the legislative department of the government. The Treasurer of the United States can not pay out any money unless it is appropriated by Congress; and we ought to have every proper check applied to people who are now for the first time entering upon a career of government. I suggest an amendment to that effect.

Mr. FORAKER. How would it do to insert the word "appropriated" in lieu of the word "required;" so as to read, "shall disburse the same as appropriated by law?" Would that meet the Senator's idea?

Mr. ALLEN. "As appropriated by law." All I care about is that the idea shall be clearly inserted in the bill that the money can be drawn out only on an appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would it not be better to say "when appropriated?"

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that it read, "and shall disburse the same as appropriated by law."

Mr. ALLEN. "When appropriated by law."

Mr. FORAKER. Very well, then; let it read, "and shall disburse the same when appropriated by law." I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 9, section 20, after the word "same," it is proposed to strike out "as required" and insert "when appropriated;" so as to read:

And shall disburse the same when appropriated by law.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee, inserting section 20 as a new section as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico was, after line 13, on page 16, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 21. That the auditor shall keep full and accurate accounts, showing all receipts and disbursements, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make, through the governor, such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as he may require.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if this report is to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury and if it will come from him to the President or to Congress?

Mr. FORAKER. I suppose it would be made directly to the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know how that provision will be construed, but I presume that official will report directly to the Secretary of the Treasury. The reports of the governor are made directly to the President; and it might be that the practice would be that this official would make his report through the governor.

Mr. ALLEN. The reports of the financial affairs of the nation come from the Secretary of the Treasury through the President to Congress. Does not the Senator think it would be wise that the report of the treasurer of Puerto Rico should not only be made to the Secretary of the Treasury, but should be embraced by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report to the President, which would be transmitted annually to Congress?

Mr. FORAKER. No doubt it would be done, I should think, without any special provision. The Secretary of the Treasury is required to make a report of all transactions in his Department.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest, to put it beyond any doubt, the insertion of words to that effect as an amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I will trust to the Senator's judgment as to what language shall be incorporated.

Mr. FORAKER. "Who shall report the same to the President."

Mr. ALLEN. How would it answer to insert, "shall report the same to the President, and it shall thereupon be transmitted to Congress?"

Mr. FORAKER. Let me suggest to the Senator that we did not think that was necessary. I do not remember that anything particular was said about it, but my own impression about it was that if these officials, the treasurer of the island and the auditor of the island, made their reports to the Secretary of the Treasury, those reports would be a part of the business of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the law requires him to make full reports to the President and also to Congress, and in that way everything would come to Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury should take the other view of it, and say there is nothing in the law requiring it.

Mr. FORAKER. It seems to me the law is so explicit on that point that he could not take the other view and successfully maintain it. I will ask the Senator if he would have any objection to letting that go over until I can look at the general provisions of the law that would be applicable to it?

Mr. ALLEN. Let me have this amendment pending.

Mr. FORAKER. I would rather dispose of it now if it is offered.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest "such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as he may require, which shall annually be transmitted to Congress."

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to those words going in.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I move to insert, after the word "require," in line 13, page 16, section 20, "which shall annually be transmitted to Congress."

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that those words come in at the end of section 21, and also at the end of section 20.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; wherever the reports are required to be made.

Mr. FORAKER. "Which he shall annually transmit to Congress." Is that the language?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Which shall annually be transmitted to Congress."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to; and section 20 as amended is agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to get the exact language. Is it "which he shall annually transmit?"

Mr. ALLEN. "Which shall annually be transmitted to Congress."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks have it "which shall annually be transmitted to Congress."

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. FORAKER. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 21. That the auditor shall keep——

Mr. FORAKER. That was agreed to, and the same amendment should be made there.

Mr. ALLEN. The same amendment should be made to this section and also to section 22.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the word "require," in line 18, section 21, page 16, the words "which shall annually be transmitted to Congress" will be inserted. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 22. That the commissioner of the interior shall superintend all works of a public nature, and shall have charge of all public buildings, grounds, and lands, except those belonging to the United States, and shall execute such requirements as may be imposed by law with respect thereto, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports through the governor to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States as he may require.

Mr. ALLEN. The same amendment should be made there.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest that, for the sake of uniformity, these words should also be inserted at the end of section 19, where there is a similar provision as to the Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the words will be inserted at the end of section 19, and at the end of section 22 the words "which shall annually be transmitted to Congress" will be inserted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 23. That the commissioner of education shall superintend public instruction throughout Puerto Rico, and all disbursements on account thereof must be approved by him; and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports through the governor as may be required by the Commissioner of Education of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest the same amendment there.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States" it is proposed to insert:

Which shall annually be transmitted to Congress.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 24. That the other five members of the executive council, to be appointed as hereinbefore provided, shall attend all meetings of the executive council and participate in all business of every character that may be transacted by it; and they shall receive as compensation for their services such annual salaries as may be provided by the legislative assembly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

SEC. 25. That all local legislative powers hereby granted shall be vested in a legislative assembly which shall consist of two houses; one the executive council, as hereinbefore constituted, and the other a house of delegates, to consist of 35 members elected biennially by the qualified voters as hereinafter provided; and the two houses thus constituted shall be designated "The legislative assembly of Puerto Rico."

Mr. ALLEN. Before the words "Puerto Rico," in line 24, I move to insert the words "the Territory of;" so that it will read "the legislative assembly of the Territory of Puerto Rico."

Mr. FORAKER. I do not accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "of," at the end of line 23, page 17, section 25, it is proposed to insert "the Territory of;" so as to read "the legislative assembly of the Territory of Puerto Rico."

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to know, if the Senator sees fit to afford the information, what objection there is to the insertion of these words?

Mr. FORAKER. The objection is simply that I do not propose by anything in this bill, and those who are in harmony with me as to what shall be done do not propose, to erect a Territorial government in the sense in which that word is understood, but simply to give to the people of Puerto Rico a civil government such as the bill provides for.

Mr. ALLEN. Of course I would understand that from the reading of the bill; but why refuse or decline to give those people the ordinary Territorial government?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know of any reason why they should have the ordinary Territorial government in preference to another kind of government which Congress may see fit to prescribe. The whole matter is with Congress. We can make it a Territorial or a district or any other kind of political subdivision. For reasons which have been stated here a number of times, we have not seen fit to make Puerto Rico a Territory of the United States and to extend to that Territory the Constitution of the United States.

The Senator gave us a very able speech this afternoon in which he advocated the doctrine that the Constitution extended proprio vigore to Puerto Rico upon the acquisition of that territory. We do not believe it. We do not believe that Puerto Rico stands in the same relation to the United States that other Territories that have been acquired have stood. I do not believe that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States. There is where the roads part about this whole matter. Puerto Rico is, I think, simply a possession of the United States. There is nothing in the treaty as there was in the treaties by which California and other Territories were ceded to the United States, providing that the territory or the inhabitants of the territory should be incorporated into the Union and be made citizens of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Is that necessary?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; and it is upon that provision in those treaties that the Supreme Court has held, as respects that territory, that the territory and the people became a part of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Did the Supreme Court so indicate in the California case?

Mr. FORAKER. They did, and in the very language read by the Senator this afternoon. They said the territory became a part of the United States immediately upon the ratification of the treaty, referring to the part of the treaty in that connection which contained that provision.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; but the Supreme Court——

Mr. FORAKER. It has been so held with respect to the treaty under which we acquired Louisiana. In this treaty, however, no such language occurs. On the other hand, it is almost expressly provided to the contrary. Certainly as to citizens it is, whatever you may say as to the land upon which the citizens live, for in this treaty—let me call the Senator's attention to it now, as I did not wish to interrupt him while he was making his argument——

Mr. ALLEN. It is no interruption at all. I am trying to get at the reason of the matter. I do not care anything about the policy of it. I want to know the reason why it should not be erected into a Territory.

Mr. FORAKER. The reason is that it is not a part of the United States, as a Territory is a part of the United States, where we have given Territorial government.

Mr. ALLEN. Why should it not be a part of the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. Perhaps there is no reason why it should not be. We could make it a part of the United States, but we have not yet made it a part of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I know, but it is exceptional. This is an anomaly.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the Senator's opinion, and he is entitled to have it and to express it and to advocate it and to contend for it, but I am of a different opinion.

Mr. ALLEN. Where in the history of this Government is there a precedent for this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. We never acquired any territory by treaty as we acquired this. What I desire to call the Senator's attention to is the language of the treaty between Spain and the United States under the provisions of which this territory and the Philippines were ceded to us. Speaking of the inhabitants, the treaty, in article 9—and this has a direct bearing upon the question of their civil and political status, which is expressly provided for later—says:

> In case they remain—
>
> The Spanish inhabitants—
>
> in the territory they may preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain by making, before a court of record, within a year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty, a declaration of their decision to preserve such allegiance—
>
> Those are citizens of Puerto Rico who were born in the peninsula—
>
> in default of which declaration they shall be held to have renounced it and to have adopted the nationality of the territory in which they may reside.
>
> The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

Now, in no treaty that has ever been made under which we have taken territory has there been any equivalent provision, but in every one except as to Alaska there has been a stipulation that the inhabitants should be incorporated into the United States and made citizens of the United States. Here is a provision that is not only different, but the meaning of it is manifest on its face. Our commissioners who represented us in the framing of this treaty had in mind when this treaty was drawn that we were not only acquiring Puerto Rico with Puerto Ricans, the inhabitants of that country, but also the Philippines, with eight or ten million people, about whom we did not know very much; we did not know whether or not they would make good citizens of the United States, and did not know whether it would be wise to incorporate that territory, when so acquired, into the Union as a part of the territory of the United States, even as a Territory, much less as a State. Therefore they made that provision.

Congress is fully empowered, having acquired territory in the way in which it was acquired under this treaty, by the terms of the treaty itself so to legislate for these people as it may see fit; and in our opinion it is not wise, especially at this time, to create there a Territorial government and extend to that island the Constitution and proceed in legislating with respect to those people in that island as though they were the same as the people of Arizona or some other Territory here on the continent.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish that it were possible for me to agree with the Senator from Ohio. It would be very agreeable to me personally to be able to agree with him, but the Senator does not offer a solitary reason why the same rule should not be applied to these people that was applied to the people of Florida and Louisiana and the other territories that we have acquired from time to time during our history. The same provision, in substance, respecting the right of the people to choose their allegiance within a given time was in the treaty of peace between the American colonies and Great Britain at the time we rescued our independence from that country. So it is not a novel feature at all. It is one of the first things that happened in our own history as a nation.

I can not remember the language, but the Senator will recall the fact that certain classes of people were permitted to expatriate themselves within a certain length of time after the treaty of peace between Great Britain and the colonies and to remain subjects of Great Britain, while certain other classes, if they remained in the United States beyond that period, ipso facto became citizens of the United States. That is in substance the same provision that is contained in the treaty of Paris. But because there is a little peculiarity in the language, that these people are to be dealt with as Congress may see fit, the Senator concludes that that is a sufficient reason for declining to give these people the ordinary Territorial government which it has been the practice of this Government from its organization to this time to establish. I submit that is no reason. It may be held to be an authority for declining to do so, but between authority and reason there is a very broad distinction.

The Senator does not point out one thing in those people or in their history or in their education or in their civilization that would make it advisable to pursue the course pursued in this bill. We took the people of Florida when they were no better than the Puerto Ricans. The original inhabitants were of the same class of people. Many of the original inhabitants of Louisiana were of the same race. In the course of a very short time we made them citizens of the United States and took those Territories into the Union as States.

The people of Puerto Rico are substantially the same people who dwell in South America. There is much of the Mexican in their nature; much of the blood of all the people who dwell in Central and South America, in Venezuela, for instance—Latin-American. The pure bloods and the others are mixed with the Indian and the negro. Every one of these South American countries has a republic. They are instituting from time to time independent civil governments, republican in form. They have got along passably well. They have a revolution every once in a while, it is true, but that is akin to their nature, a thing which they can solve for themselves, and which time and experience will solve for them.

No one asks that the Puerto Ricans be brought into the Union as a State; but there is not one reason offered by the Senator from Ohio, or by any other Senator that I have heard speak upon the subject, why these people should not be treated in their relation to the Union as citizens of an ordinary Territory, with the right of local self-government, subject to national supervision. If there is any hidden or occult reason why that should be so, I should like to know it.

Mr. FORAKER. There is no reason I know of except the reason I have stated; we did not want to do it.

Mr. ALLEN. That is no reason at all.

Mr. FORAKER. Is not that reason enough?

Mr. ALLEN. Not the slightest reason in the world.

Mr. FORAKER. The Territorial form of government that is in operation in the Territories is not suited to the people of Puerto Rico. We have had to make special provisions there. We could not extend to Puerto Rico the laws applicable to the Territories. We had to legislate with respect to that people according to their conditions, and their conditions are wholly different from the conditions obtaining in the Territories of the United States; and the committee, after giving very careful consideration to the whole subject, came to the conclusion that the ordinary Territorial form of government, which we have in force in the various Territories, was not adapted to that people, and that we would have to give them a special form of government, making special provisions for different officials, and providing that the upper house of the assembly, for the reasons I have already given, should be appointed, and that they should have bureau officers, a thing unknown to any Territory, and have a different judicial system from that in force in the Territory; that they should have, in addition to the ordinary Territorial courts, a United States district court, such as the Senator knows there is provision for in the bill.

Those were the reasons which operated upon our minds to not make Puerto Rico a Territory in the sense of giving it a Territorial form of government. It had no right to any other form of government than that we saw fit to give, for the reasons I have undertaken to state to the Senator and to the Senate. I have undertaken to show that we were invested with full power by the treaty itself, as well as under the Constitution, to legislate as in our judgment might be deemed advisable, and in our judgment it is advisable to provide for Puerto Rico at this time the kind of government this bill establishes. We do not say, I do not say, but that a year from now, or five years from now, we may make them a Territory and incorporate them into the Union. We are not very well acquainted with them yet. You can go faster when you come to know more about it, but if you go too fast you might have trouble later.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to file a motion for a bill of particulars against the Senator from Ohio, or a motion for a more specific statement, if that is better legal language. The Senator says "we" did not see fit to give those people a Territorial form of government. In the first place, I should like to know who "we" are who did not see fit to do that.

Mr. FORAKER. I was referring to the committee, the Senators who framed this bill and brought it before the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. And their judgment, of course, is conclusive.

Mr. FORAKER. We were appointed by the Senate to frame a bill, and we brought it here, and our judgment is not binding on anybody. I have said to the Senator, in answer to his inquiry, that he is entitled to his opinion; he is entitled to present it to the Senate and let the Senate judge between us. I have undertaken to give him full information about the matter.

Mr. ALLEN. I knew I had the right to present my opinion.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator has talked at times as though he did not think he had.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes; I knew that.

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted to acquaint him with the fact——

Mr. ALLEN. The rules have not been changed.

Mr. FORAKER. So that he would be sure to do it, being a little bit backward.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I will do it. I think I am just about as backward as the Senator from Ohio. I do not think I am much in advance of him in that respect. I think he has occupied about 90 per cent of the time of the Senate in the discussion of this bill, and the remainder of the Senate have occupied the other 10 per cent. Perhaps I have occupied a good portion of the 10 per cent.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not occupied any time except only as Senators wanted information, as the Senator from Nebraska wanted it. The trouble with the Senator is that when I give information to him in the politest way I can he complains I have not given him enough. He wants to file a bill of particulars. If he will file it and put it in the RECORD, I will endeavor to answer it more fully to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator says, "We did not see fit to do this." There are a great many things a man does not see fit to do that there is no reason for not doing. Men are actuated ordinarily by reason. The first law of evidence, we learn by an examination of Starkie, who has written the only legal classic upon the subject of evidence ever written, is that every sane man acts upon some motive, and therefore he is presumed to have intended the ordinary consequences of his act.

The Senator from Ohio is eminently sane, as are his associates, and they have formulated a bill here that is anomalous. It has not got its equal in the political history of this country. It is a legislative maverick, if I may be permitted to use that expression; and when I call upon the Senator, in the best of good faith, to know what reasons actuated him and his associates in declining to give these people an ordinary Territorial form of government, he says, "We talked it over together, and we thought it was not proper to do so." But why was it not proper to do so?

Mr. FORAKER. Did I not state to the Senator, when I was last on the floor, and in detail, the reasons that operated upon our minds about that?

Mr. ALLEN. No.

Mr. FORAKER. I can not do any more than to state them over again.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator did not do that.

Mr. FORAKER. Well, I will ask the Senator to look at the RECORD in the morning and see if I did not do it.

Mr. ALLEN. Are they unfit for self-government?

Mr. FORAKER. There is a difference of opinion about that. I think many of them are.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator think they are not proper subjects for the ordinary Territorial government; and if so, why?

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will read the RECORD, he will get all the reasons I can give him, and I will have to refer him to that.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the Senator is like John Falstaff in this respect: If reasons were as numerous as blackberries, he would not give a reason under compulsion. The Senator does not see fit to give a reason, and I do not expect to get one from him. I say this in all deference and in all kindliness. There is a hidden purpose evidently beneath this bill which the Senator from Ohio will not disclose.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I resent the charge made by the Senator and deny there is any such thing, and say to the Senator that when he says that, he speaks without any warrant whatever. There is no purpose about it except only that which we have expressed and expressed over and over again, and always with pleasure, when the Senator has seen fit to make inquiry or anybody else has seen fit to make inquiry. Now, why the Senator should see fit to persist and persist, after I have, as every Senator here knows, answered his questions as fully and as completely and as much in detail as it is possible for me to do, in saying I have not answered him or that there is some occult or some hidden or some improper purpose in the bill, I do not know. I can not imagine what the Senator has in his mind, or why he should use language which he ought to know is offensive and I fear intended to be.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; I would not offend the Senator from Ohio for anything.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator would not. I have had very agreeable and pleasant relations with him; but why does the Senator persist in saying he asked me for a reason and I will not give it, and he knows I have not and would not give it, because there is a hidden purpose about it. I do not do anything with a hidden purpose——

Mr. ALLEN. I did not say the Senator would not give a reason. I said he had not given a reason.

Mr. FORAKER. And the Senator said he did not expect me to give a reason, and the reason was that the purpose was a hidden one.

Mr. ALLEN. No.

Mr. FORAKER. The RECORD will disclose the fact.

Mr. ALLEN. I said I did not expect the Senator to give a reason, and I do not. That, I hope, is not offensive to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. What I said to the Senator is that I had given a reason. I refer him to the RECORD. It is pretty late and is getting near adjournment time.

Mr. ALLEN. It is late; but we have lots of time.

Mr. FORAKER. I know we have.

Mr. ALLEN. Congress can be here all summer if necessary.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to move an executive session whenever the Senator will yield.

Mr. ALLEN. I will be glad to yield in a moment. I do not want to have the Senator two or three laps ahead of me, and put me in an awkward position.

Mr. CHANDLER. I could not see which one was likely to end it.

Mr. ALLEN. I will end it as soon as I can, for the benefit of my friend the Senator from New Hampshire, who has important business to transact; but I want to be straight upon the record.

I said, and I repeat it, and I do not mean to be offensive to the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator, that the Senator from Ohio has not given one reason why these people should not have a Territorial form of government. I said I thought, and I repeat it, that there was a hidden reason; and I did not say the Senator from Ohio participated in that reason at all. I believe the Senator from Ohio to be a good man, as I know him to be an intelligent, amiable, well-balanced, good-tempered gentleman.

There is a great deal of distinction between a mere assertion and a reason. A reason must be based upon a fact, and it is necessary to present the reason for a conclusion to determine whether or not the conclusion is warranted by the fact.

That the Senator has not done. He says they have not seen fit to give those people a Territorial form of government. They propose to give them this anomalous Congressional existence, but he does not say that those people are rebellious; that they are warlike; that they lack intelligence; that they lack a disposition for self-government; that they lack capacity for a Territorial government. He does not point out what I call any reason for declining the ordinary Territorial autonomy.

Now, Mr. President, I said I believed that there was a hidden reason. I do believe there is a hidden reason. I do not now, mark you, undertake to connect the Senator with anything that is questionable at all. He is simply the outward exponent of those who are behind the bill.

If Puerto Rico were erected into a Territorial government such as Louisiana and Florida were, the Constitution, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court, would extend to that Territory, and the taxation under the Constitution would have to be equal upon the people there as it is equal upon the people of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, does the Senator state that that is the hidden reason?

Mr. ALLEN. Now, let me get through.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to know. You say there is a hidden reason. I do not know of any.

Mr. ALLEN. I will reach the conclusion——

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted to know if you were stating the hidden reason.

Mr. ALLEN. I will reach my conclusion in a moment, when the Senator will see exactly what the reason is, in my judgment.

Therefore, Mr. President (and I am coming to the conclusion now), to avoid all consequences that would follow the construction of this island into an ordinary Territory, to avoid the legal and constitutional consequences, those who are behind this bill—and I exculpate the Senator from Ohio from anything that is culpable or anything of the kind—those who are behind this bill, to avoid that consequence, propose to put up this statutory anomaly in our history, that we may discriminate against those people in taxation.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, Mr. President, if that is the hidden purpose the Senator has been talking about, I can say to him it is not a hidden purpose but is one of the open purposes, openly avowed in the Senate in every speech that has been made in support of this bill, that we are trying so to legislate as not to extend the Constitution of the United States to Puerto Rico.

I am surprised to hear the Senator say that in our opinion it would be necessary to do what we are doing to save the Constitution from going there, because it has been the contention of the Senator, in season and out, that the Constitution extended to Puerto Rico ex proprio vigore the very moment that Puerto Rico was acquired.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. If so, why should there be any objection on the Senator's part to our not, by statute, extending the Constitution, because, according to his contention, it is there already? It is not necessary by statute to extend it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, because the Supreme Court have said in the Territorial cases that the Constitution does go to the inhabitant of the Territory to protect him, and because those behind this bill see an opportunity to give the Supreme Court a chance to distinguish between this legislative anomaly and the ordinary Territorial government.

Mr. FORAKER. When the Senator says that the Supreme Court has made that kind of a decision I am bound to believe that the Senator believes that the Supreme Court has made it.

Mr. ALLEN. I know they have.

Mr. FORAKER. But I will say to the Senator from Nebraska in my opinion they never have made any such decision. On the contrary, all the decisions that the Senator has in mind, I will undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, are decisions coming to the Supreme Court from territory to which by Congressional action the Constitution had been expressly extended. By statute the Constitution of the United States is extended to all the Territories of the United States. Not only a general statute has been enacted so extending the Constitution, but special acts of Congress have been passed to the same effect.

So here, Mr. President, as we have said from the beginning, and as I said in answering the Senator, our view with respect to Puerto Rico is that Puerto Rico is not a part of the United States in the sense that the Constitution extends there, and we have the power to legislate with respect to Puerto Rico without those restraints and limitations of the Constitution that would be imposed upon us if we were legislating about a Territory as to which by act of Congress we had made the Constitution a statute of that Territory and its organic law.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator's position is the old story that the decisions, if they stand in the road of what is sought to be accomplished, are obiter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 8876) granting the right of way to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company across the ceded portion of the Chippewa (Red Lake) Indian Reservation, in Minnesota, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 108) for change in location of aids to navigation on Simmons Reef and Lansing Shoal, in Lake Michigan, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I present an amendment to the pending bill, which I give notice I will propose at the proper time. It is in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and also be printed for the use of the Senate. I will not now ask that it be read, because the purpose can be accomplished in the same way by having it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD, and also be printed and lie on the table.

In the Senate of the United States. March 30, 1900.

Amendment proposed by Mr. BACON to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"GENERAL PROVISIONS.

"That the provisions hereof shall apply to and include not only the island of Puerto Rico, but also all the adjacent islands and the waters thereof east of the seventy-fourth meridian of longitude west of Greenwich that were ceded to the United States by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on the 11th day of April, 1899.

"SEC. 2. That the capital shall be at the city of San Juan and the seat of government for the island shall be maintained there.

"SEC. 3. That all inhabitants of the island continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in Puerto Rico, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain on or before the 11th day of April, 1900, in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on the 11th day of April, 1899; and they shall constitute a body politic with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred, and with power to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States in the name of the "Island of Puerto Rico" in all cases in which such courts have jurisdiction where one of the parties is a State or Territory of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That the laws and ordinances now in force in the island of Puerto Rico shall continue in full force and effect, except as altered, amended, or modified hereinafter, or by military orders and decrees now in force, and so far as the same are not inconsistent or in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States locally applicable, or the provisions hereof, until altered, amended, or repealed by the legislative authority hereinafter provided for the island or by act of Congress of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That the laws of the United States relating to commerce, navigation, and merchant seamen are hereby extended to and over the island of Puerto Rico and all said adjacent islands and waters, and the Commissioner of Navigation may make such regulations as he may deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants of the island on the 11th day of April, 1899, and which continued to be so owned up to the date of such nationalization, and the coasting trade between the island and any other portion of the United States shall be regulated in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to such trade between any two great coasting districts.

"SEC. 6. That on and after the date of the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported, except from the United States into the island of Puerto Rico, the rates of duty mentioned and prescribed in the schedules and paragraphs of the act 'To provide revenue for the Government, and to encourage industries of the United States,' approved July 24, 1897, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said schedules and paragraphs were expressly reenacted in this act, and all the other provisions and paragraphs of such act comprised in the sections thereof from 2 to 34, inclusive, not locally inapplicable shall be and remain in force in said island of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by Congress: Provided, however, That all collections made hereunder shall be paid into the treasury of the island, to be expended as required by law for the government and benefit of the island instead of being paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 7. That on and after the passage of this act there shall be collected within the island of Puerto Rico all the internal-revenue taxes imposed under the provisions of the Revised Statutes elsewhere in the United States in so far as the same are locally applicable, and all the provisions of the laws of the United States providing for internal-revenue taxation and the collection thereof not locally inapplicable shall be and remain in force within the island of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by Congress.

"SEC. 8. That on and after the passage of this act all merchandise coming into the United States from the island of Puerto Rico, and all merchandise going from the United States into the island of Puerto Rico, shall be admitted into the respective ports of entry free of all tariffs, customs, and duties, all laws and parts of laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

"SEC. 9. That all expenses that may be incurred on account of the government of Puerto Rico for salaries of officials and the conduct of their offices and departments, and all expenses and obligations contracted for the internal improvement or development of the island, not, however, including harbors, light-houses, buoys, and other works undertaken by the United States, shall be paid by the treasurer of the island out of the revenues in his hands, and not be a liability in any case of the United States.

"SEC. 10. That the Constitution and all the laws of the United States locally applicable, except as hereinbefore or hereinafter otherwise provided, shall have the same force and effect in the island of Puerto Rico as elsewhere in the United States.

"SEC. 11. That the legislative authority hereinafter provided shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal any law or ordinance, civil or criminal, continued in force by this act, as it may from time to time see fit.

"SEC. 12. That all vested property rights, and all obligations, contracts, rights of action, suits at law and in equity, prosecutions for crimes and misdemeanors, and all sentences and civil judgments and decrees now existing shall remain unaffected by this act and continue enforceable.

"SEC. 13. That all judicial and legal process shall run in the name of 'The United States of America, island of Puerto Rico,' and all criminal or penal prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of 'The United States of America, island of Puerto Rico.'

"THE GOVERNOR.

"SEC. 14. That the official title of the chief executive officer of the island shall be 'the governor of Puerto Rico.' He shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; he shall hold his office for a term of four years and until his successor is chosen and qualified, unless sooner removed by the President; he shall reside in the island during his official incumbency, and shall maintain his office at the seat of government; he may grant pardons and reprieves, and remit fines and forfeitures for offenses against the laws of the island, and respites for offenses against the laws of the United States, until the decision of the President can be ascertained; he shall commission all officers of the island that he may be authorized to appoint, and shall participate in and may veto any legislation enacted by the legislative authority of the island, as hereinafter provided; he shall be the commander in chief of the militia of the island, and shall at all times faithfully execute the laws of the island, and he shall in that behalf have all the powers of governors of the Territories of the United States that are locally applicable; and he shall annually, and at such other times as he may be required, make official report of the proceedings and condition of government of the island, through the Secretary of State, to the President of the United States.

"THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

"SEC. 15. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for the period of four years, unless sooner removed by the President, a secretary, an attorney-general, a treasurer, an auditor, a commissioner of the interior, and a commissioner of education, each of whom shall reside in the island during his official incumbency and have the powers and duties hereinafter provided for them, respectively, and who, together with the governor and five other persons of good repute, to be also appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the native inhabitants of the island, shall constitute an executive council, and, in addition to the legislative duties hereinafter imposed upon them as a body, exercise such powers and perform such duties as are hereinafter provided for them, respectively.

"SEC. 16. That the secretary shall record and preserve minutes of the proceedings of the executive council and the laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the island, and all acts and proceedings of the governor, and shall promulgate all proclamations and orders of the governor and all laws enacted by the legislative assembly. He shall, within sixty days after the end of each session of the legislative assembly, transmit to the President, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of State of the United States one copy each of the laws and journals of such session.

"SEC. 17. That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or disability of the governor, or his temporary absence from the island, the secretary shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of the governor during such vacancy, disability, or absence.

"SEC. 18. That the attorney-general shall have all the powers and discharge all the duties provided by law for an attorney-general of a Territory of the United States in so far as the same are locally applicable, and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make such reports, through the governor, to the Attorney-General of the United States as that officer may require.

"SEC. 19. That the treasurer shall collect and be the custodian of the public funds, and shall disburse the same as required by law, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make, through the governor, such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as that officer may require.

"SEC. 20. That the auditor shall keep full and accurate accounts, showing all receipts and disbursements, and perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law, and make, through the governor, such reports to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as that officer may require.

"SEC. 21. That the commissioner of the interior shall superintend all works of a public nature, and shall have charge of all public buildings, grounds, and lands, except those belonging to the United States, and shall execute such requirements as may be imposed by law with respect thereto, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law and make such reports through the governor to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States as that official may require.

"SEC. 22. That the commissioner of education shall superintend public instruction throughout the island, and all disbursements on account thereof must be approved by him; and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law and make such reports through the governor as may be required by the Commissioner of Education of the United States.

"SEC. 23. That the other five members of the executive council, to be appointed from natives of the island, as hereinbefore provided, shall attend all meetings of the executive council and participate in all business of every character that may be transacted by it; and they shall receive as compensation for their services such annual salaries as may be provided by the legislative assembly.

"HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

"SEC. 24. That the local legislative authority for the island shall consist of two houses; one the executive council, as hereinbefore constituted, and the other a house of delegates, to consist of 35 members elected biennially by the qualified voters of the island, as hereinafter provided; and the two houses thus constituted shall be designated 'the legislative assembly of the island of Puerto Rico, United States of America.'

"SEC. 25. That for the purposes of such elections, and for judicial and other governmental purposes, the island shall be divided by the executive council into five districts, composed of contiguous territory and as nearly equal as may be in population, and each district shall be entitled to seven members of the house of delegates.

"ELECTION OF DELEGATES.

"SEC. 26. That the first election for delegates shall be held on such date and under such regulations as to ballots and voting as the executive council may prescribe; and at such elections the voters of each legislative district shall choose seven delegates to represent them in the house of delegates from the date of their election and qualification until two years from and after the 1st day of January next ensuing; of all which thirty days' notice shall be given by publication in the Official Gazette, or by printed notices distributed and posted throughout the district, as the executive council may prescribe. At such elections all citizens of the island shall be allowed to vote who possess the qualifications of voters under the laws and military orders now in force in the island, subject to such regulations and restrictions as to registration and otherwise as may be now provided, or as may be prescribed by the executive council. The house of delegates so chosen shall convene at the capital and organize by the election of a speaker, a clerk, a sergeant-at-arms, and such other officers and assistants as it may require, at such time as may be designated by the executive council; but it shall not continue in session longer than sixty days in any one year, unless called by the governor to meet in extraordinary session. The enacting clause of the laws shall be, 'Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the island of Puerto Rico, United States of America;' and each member of the house of delegates shall be paid for his services at the rate of $5 per day for each day's attendance while the house is in session.

"All future elections of delegates shall be governed by the provisions hereof, so far as they are applicable, until the legislative assembly shall otherwise provide.

"SEC. 27. That the house of delegates shall be the sole judge of the qualifications of its members, and shall have and exercise all the powers with respect to the conduct of its proceedings that usually appertain to parliamentary legislative bodies. No person shall be eligible to membership in the house of delegates who is not 25 years of age and able to read and write either the Spanish or the English language, or who is not possessed in his own right of property, real or personal, situated in the island, of the value of at least $2,000.

"SEC. 28. That all laws enacted may originate in either body, but no bill shall become a law unless it be passed in each body by a majority vote of all the members belonging to such body and be approved by the governor within ten days thereafter. If, when a bill that has been passed is presented to the governor for signature, he approve the same, he shall sign it, or if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that house in which it originated, which house shall enter his objections at large on its journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be considered, and, if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal of each house, respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislative assembly by adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

"SEC. 29. That the legislative authority herein provided shall apply to all matters of a legislative character locally applicable to the island, including power to create, consolidate, and reorganize, as may be necessary, the municipalities of the island, and to provide and repeal laws and ordinances therefor; and also the power to alter, amend, modify, and repeal any and all laws and ordinances of every character now in force in the island, or any municipality or district thereof, subject in all cases to the requirement that no legislation shall be inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States: Provided, however, That all grants of franchises, rights, and privileges or concessions of a public or quasi-public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, and all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

"THE JUDICIARY.

"SEC. 30. That the judicial power shall be vested in the courts and tribunals of the island as already established and now in operation, including municipal courts, under and by virtue of General Orders, No. 118, as promulgated by Brigadier-General Davis, United States Volunteers, August 16, 1899, and the laws and ordinances of the island and the municipalities thereof in force, so far as the same are not in conflict herewith or with the Constitution of the United States, all which courts and tribunals are hereby continued. The jurisdiction of said courts and the form of procedure in them, and the various officials and attachés thereof, respectively, shall be the same as defined and prescribed in and by said laws and ordinances, and said General Orders, No. 118, until otherwise provided by law: Provided, however, That the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court and the marshal thereof shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the judges of the district courts shall be appointed by the governor of the island, and all other officials and attachés of all the other courts shall be chosen as may be directed by the legislative assembly of the island, which shall have authority to legislate from time to time as it may see fit with respect to said courts, and any others they may deem it advisable to establish, their organization, the number of judges and officials and attachés for each, their jurisdiction, their procedure, and all other matters affecting them.

"SEC. 31. That the island of Puerto Rico shall constitute a judicial district, to be called 'the district of Puerto Rico.' The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge, a district attorney, and a marshal for said district, each for a term of four years, unless sooner removed by the President. The district court for said district shall have, in addition to the ordinary jurisdiction of district courts of the United States, jurisdiction of all cases cognizant in the circuit courts of the United States, and shall proceed therein in the same manner as a circuit court. The laws of the United States relating to appeals, writs of error and certiorari, removal of causes, and other matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the several States shall govern in such matters and proceedings as between the courts of the United States and the courts of the island. Regular terms of said court shall be held at San Juan, commencing on the second Monday in April and October of each year, and also at Ponce on the second Monday in January of each year, and special terms may be held at mortgage at such other times and places in the district as said judge may deem expedient. All pleadings and proceedings in said court shall be conducted in the English language.

"The United States district court hereby established shall be the successor to the United States provisional court established by General Orders, No. 88, promulgated by Brigadier-General Davis, and shall take possession of all records of that court, and take jurisdiction of all cases and proceedings pending therein, and said United States provisional court is hereby discontinued.

"SEC. 32. That writs of error and appeals from the final decisions of the supreme court of the island shall be allowed and may be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner and under the same regulations and in the same cases as from the supreme courts of the Territories of the United States; and such writs of error and appeal shall be allowed in all cases where the Constitution of the United States, or a treaty thereof, or an act of Congress is brought in question and the right claimed thereunder is denied; and the supreme and district courts of the island and the respective judges thereof may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same are grantable by the judges of the United States in the District of Columbia. All proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States shall be conducted in the English language.

"SEC. 33. That the salaries of all officials of the island not appointed by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall be such, and be so paid out of the revenues of the island, as the executive council shall from time to time determine: Provided, however, That the salary of no officer shall be either increased or diminished during his term of office. The salaries of all officers and all expenses of the offices of the various officials for the island, appointed as herein provided by the President, including deputies, assistants, and other help, shall also be paid out of the revenues of the island on the warrant of the auditor, who shall pay all salaries, and also all items of official expense approved by the executive council, and duly audit the same.

"The annual salaries of the officials appointed by the President, and so to be paid, shall be as follows:

"The governor, $10,000.
"The secretary, $4,000.
"The attorney-general, $4,000.
"The auditor $4,000.
"The commissioner of the interior, $4,000.
"The commissioner of education, $4,000.
"The chief justice of the supreme court, $5,000.
"The associate justices of the supreme court (each), $4,500.
"The marshal of the supreme court, $3,000.
"The United States district judge, $5,000.
"The United States district attorney, $4,000.
"The United States district marshal, $3,500.

"SEC. 34. That the provisions of the foregoing section shall not apply to the municpal officials. Their salaries and the compensation of their deputies, assistants, and other help, as well as all other expenses incurred by the municipalities, shall be paid out of the municipal revenues in such manner as the legislative assembly shall provide.

"SEC. 35. That no export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from the island; but taxes and assessments on property, and license fees for franchises, privileges, and concessions may be imposed for the purposes of the insular and municipal governments, respectively, as may be provided and defined by act of the legislative assembly; and where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by the island or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law to provide for expenditures authorized by law, and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That no public indebtedness of the island or of any municipality thereof shall be authorized or allowed in excess of 10 per cent of the aggregate tax valuation of the property of the island or municipality, respectively.

"SEC. 36. That the qualified voters of the island shall, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1900, and every two years thereafter, choose one Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, who shall be entitled to a seat, but not to a vote, in that body, on the certificate of election of the governor of the island: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a bona fide inhabitant of the island, and who is not 30 years of age and possessed of property in his own right situated in the island of the value of at least $2,000.

"SEC. 37. That a commission, to consist of five members, at least two of whom shall be native citizens of the island, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to compile and revise the laws of the island; also the various codes of procedure and systems of municipal government now in force, and to frame and report such legislation as may be necessary to make a simple, harmonious, and economical government, establish justice and secure its prompt and efficient administration, inaugurate a general system of education and public instruction, provide buildings and funds therefor, equalize and simplify taxation and all the methods of raising revenue, and make all other provisions that may be necessary to secure and extend the benefits of a republican form of government to all the inhabitants of the island; and all the expenses of such commissioners, including all necessary clerks and other assistants that they may employ, and a salary to each member of the commission at the rate of $5,000 per annum, shall be allowed and paid out of the insular treasury as a part of the expenses of the government of the island. And said commission shall make full and final report of all its proceedings and recommendations to the Congress on or before one year after the passage of this act.

"SEC. 38. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of March, 1900."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I submit an amendment which I intend to propose as section 11 at the proper time. I ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 31, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 30, 1900.

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Charles S. Cotton, to be a rear-admiral in the Navy from the 27th day of March, 1900, vice Rear-Admiral Alexander H. McCormick, retired.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 30, 1900.

CONSUL.

John J. Girimondi, of California, to be consul of the United States at Santos, Brazil.

APPOINTMENT IN THE VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Thirty-seventh Infantry.

Maj. B. Frank Cheatham, Thirty-seventh Infantry, to be colonel, March 13, 1900.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

John D. Long, of Pennsylvania, to be an assistant surgeon in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

Allan J. McLaughlin, of New Jersey, to be an assistant surgeon in the Marine-Hospital Service of the United States.

POSTMASTERS.

Charles W. Russell, to be postmaster at New Brunswick, in the county of Middlesex and State of New Jersey.

Frederick H. Fowler, to be postmaster at Walpole, in the county of Norfolk and State of Massachusetts.

John Grierson, to be postmaster at Morrison, in the county of Whiteside and State of Illinois.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 30, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LYBRAND, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. KLEBERG, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. S. A. DAVENPORT, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BURTON, for five days, on account of important business.

ENTRY OF DUTIABLE MERCHANDISE, GREENBAY, WIS.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill (H. R. 963) to designate Greenbay, Wis., a subport of entry was read as amended by the Committee on Ways and Means, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and they are hereby, extended to the port of Greenbay, in the customs collection district of Milwaukee, Wis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the reading of the bill, and, subject to objection, I should like to hear a statement from the gentleman.

Mr. MINOR. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that this bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and the amendment just read by the Clerk was prepared at the Treasury Department. They approve the passage of the bill. It will not cost the Government a single dollar, but will afford an opportunity to the jobbers and wholesale dealers and paper manufacturers who receive their goods at that port to have them billed through from Europe without appraisement until they reach the point of destination.

Mr. TERRY. I understand this has been unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MINOR. It has been; yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will say to my friend from Arkansas that that is true, and that the bill is unobjectionable to members of the committee on this side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the title ought to be amended to correspond with the amendment adopted by the committee. The committee did not report any such amendment, but it ought to be amended. The title should read: "A bill to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to Greenbay, Wis."

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill is "A bill to designate Greenbay, Wis., a subport of entry."

Mr. PAYNE. That part of the bill has been stricken out and amended. Now I propose to amend the title so that it will read: "A bill to extend the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, to the subport of Green Bay, Wis."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as suggested.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. MINOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COURT, FRESNO AND LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9879) to detach certain counties from the United States judicial district of northern California and to annex such counties to the United States judicial district of southern California; to divide said southern district of California into two divisions, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at the city of Fresno and city of Los Angeles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for consideration at this time of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that portion of the State of California now comprised in the counties of Inyo, Mariposa, and Merced is hereby detached from the United States judicial district of northern California, known as the northern district of California, and annexed to and made a part of the United States judicial district of southern California, known as the southern district of California.

SEC. 2. That the United States judicial district of southern California, known as the southern district of California, as enlarged and constituted by this act, is hereby divided into two divisions, to be known as the northern and southern divisions, to wit, that all that portion of said judicial district of southern California, known as the southern district of California, comprised of the counties of Inyo, Mariposa, Tulare, Merced, Madera, Fresno, Kings, and Kern, shall constitute and be known as the northern division of the southern district of California, and that portion of said judicial district of southern California comprised of the counties of Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and Ventura, being all the residue of said district not included in the northern division, shall constitute and be known as the southern division of the southern district of California.

SEC. 3. That after the 30th day of June, 1900, terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the said southern district of California shall be held in each of said divisions, at the places in said divisions, and at the times, to wit, in and for the northern division, at the city of Fresno, twice in each year, namely, on the first Monday in May, to be known as the May terms of said courts, and on the second Monday in November, to be known as the November terms of said courts; in and for the southern division, at the city of Los Angeles, twice in each year, namely, on the second Monday in January, to be known as the January terms of said courts, and on the second Monday in July, to be known as the July terms of said courts.

SEC. 4. That all suits not of a local nature in said circuit and district courts against a single defendant, inhabitant of said State, must be brought in the division of the district where he resides: but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of the district, such suits may be brought in either division.

SEC. 5. That all civil process issued against persons resident in the northern division of said southern district of California, and cognizable before the United States courts, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Fresno; all prosecutions for offenses committed in said northern division shall be tried in the appropriate court of jurisdiction at said city of Fresno; that all civil process issued against persons resident in the southern division of the said southern district of California, and cognizable before the United States courts, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Los Angeles; and all prosecutions for offenses committed in said southern division shall be tried in the appropriate court of jurisdiction at said city of Los Angeles: Provided, That no process issued or prosecution commenced or suit instituted before the passage and approval of this act shall be in any way affected by the provision thereof: Provided further, That all offenses committed in that portion of the northern district of California hereby detached therefrom and prior to the passage of this act shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect to all intents and purposes as if this act had not been passed: Provided, however, That the judge of said circuit court and of such district court may, upon motion by either party to any suit now pending in said circuit or district court of the southern district of California, and commenced prior to the passage of this act, transfer any such cause for hearing to the northern division of said southern district of California, to be tried at said city of Fresno, as though originally commenced in said northern division of said district.

SEC. 6. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division. All mesne and final process subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions.

SEC. 7. That in all cases of removal of suits from the courts of the State of California to the courts of the United States in the southern district of California such removal shall be to the United States courts in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made, and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of the United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts held in said division of said judicial district.

SEC. 8. That each of said courts held at Fresno shall be held in a building to be provided for that purpose by the county or municipal authorities and without expense to the United States.

SEC. 9. That except when court is in session, and a judge present, the clerk's office of the said courts may be at Los Angeles, where all records for said courts may be kept, and all duties performed; but should, in the judgment of the district judge and the clerk, the business of said courts hereafter warrant the employment of a deputy clerk at Fresno, Cal., a deputy clerk may be appointed to reside and keep his office at Fresno.

SEC. 10. That this act shall be in force from and after the 30th day of June, A. D. 1900, and all acts and parts of acts so far as inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, we should like to have the gentleman give us some explanation of this bill. It is quite a long one, and it is almost impossible to get the tenor of a bill as long as this from the reading.

Mr. NEEDHAM. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and simply provides for detaching three counties from the northern district of California and attaching them to the southern district, and provides for the holding of terms of courts in the city of Fresno, which is situated 275 miles from the present place where court is held. It will save an immense amount of money in witness fees to the United States, and there can be no valid objection to the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me say to the gentleman that it does not create any new offices or add any expense to the Government. It is simply a saving, and is desired by the bar of that State. It has been referred to the Department of Justice, and meets with the approval of the Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to know if the minority members of the Judiciary Committee indorse the bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. It was unanimously reported.

Mr. LANHAM. We have heard no objection to the bill from California or elsewhere, and upon full investigation by the Judiciary Committee we came to the conclusion that it ought to pass. The additional judicial service is absolutely required. I think the bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NEEDHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BILLS OF EXCEPTIONS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8366) to amend section 953 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will now report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 953 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to read as follows:

"SEC. 953. That a bill of exceptions allowed in any cause shall be deemed sufficiently authenticated if signed by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof if more than one judge sat at the trial of the cause, without any seal of the court or judge annexed thereto. And in case the judge before whom the cause has heretofore been or may hereafter be tried is, by reason of death, sickness, or other disability, unable to hear and pass upon the motion for a new trial and allow and sign said bill of exceptions, then the judge who succeeds such trial judge, or any other judge of the court in which the cause was tried, holding such court thereafter, if the evidence in such cause has been or is taken in stenographic notes, or if the said judge is satisfied by any other means that he can pass upon such motion and allow a true bill of exceptions, shall pass upon said motion and allow and sign such bill of exceptions; and his ruling upon such motion and allowance and signing of such bill of exceptions shall be as valid as if such ruling and allowance and signing of such bill of exceptions had been made by the judge before whom such cause was tried."

SEC. 2. That this act shall apply to all causes now pending, and to all causes pending for hearing upon motion for new trials, and to all causes pending for the allowance of a bill of exceptions.

SEC. 3. That said original section 953 be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We should like to hear some explanation of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is simply to permit the sighing and sealing of bills of exceptions in cases where the judge who tried the cause dies before the settling of a bill of exceptions. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill which has been prepared by some gentlemen who have had some slight opposition to its passage. The bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object until the amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer is read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of section 1 the following:

"But in case said judge is satisfied that, owing to the fact that he did not preside at the trial or from any other cause, that he can not fairly pass upon said motion and allow and sign said bill of exceptions, then he shall grant a new trial as a matter of course to the party moving therefor."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, demanding the previous order, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will, for the information of the House, read the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on all Fridays for the remainder of this Congress, except the second and fourth of each month, it shall be the order, the House having proceeded to the consideration of private business according to the provisions of section 6 of Rule XXIV and section 1 of Rule XXVI, to take up, in the Committee of the Whole House, bills on the Private Calendar, under the following conditions: On the next Friday which the House may devote to private business, and on every alternate Friday thereafter which may be devoted to private business, bills reported from the Committee on Claims shall have priority over those reported from the Committee on War Claims; and on the remaining alternate Fridays devoted to private bills, those reported from the Committee on War Claims shall have priority over those from the Committee on Claims. (Order made March 14.)

EASTERN EXTENSION AUSTRALASIA AND CHINA TELEGRAPH COMPANY, LIMITED.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6909) authorizing the Secretary of State to pay the claim of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, for compensation on account of expenses incurred in repairing its Manila-Hongkong and Manila-Capiz cables, which were cut by United States forces during the war with Spain.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, there are several bills of a similar character coming up, and it is thought best to defer final action upon this bill until the House can know what they are doing in reference to that whole subject; and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. MAHON. This is a cable bill we had up here about a month ago, and it went over with the understanding that there should be no action until all these cable bills were before the House, and I ask unanimous consent that we pass it by for the present.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Why not recommit the bill?

Mr. MAHON. We have some other bills of a like character, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. Before that is done, I wish to have an understanding about it. I think that that bill should be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims. There are a great many claims of that character that have arisen out of the Spanish war, involving directly and indirectly millions of dollars, and this particular bill is very objectionable. I ask, therefore, that the gentleman consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, in order that they may take up that subject and report all those bills together in some way, so that this House may be fully informed as to the number of these claims, the character of them, and the amount involved.

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman's request an entirely proper one. We are now getting all the information we can from the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair understands the gentleman withdraws his request?

Mr. MAHON. I do.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the bill, the unfinished business before the Committee of the Whole, be reported back to the House with the recommendation that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MAHON. I will agree that when we get into the House it shall be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make a point of order. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that this motion is in order?

Mr. MAHON. I think it ought to be made in the House, and I will not resist it in the House. I think it ought to be done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is the gentleman willing for the motion to be submitted here?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. All right, then; I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the Committee of the Whole lay this bill aside with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims?

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

CONFERRING JURISDICTION ON THE COURT OF CLAIMS IN CERTAIN CASES.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 909) conferring on the Court of Claims jurisdiction with respect to certain claims.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have attention to this bill. I would like before the bill is read to ask the attention of the House to this bill. It is an important bill, and after it is read I want you to thoroughly understand it, so that we can pass upon it intelligently. It will save time if gentlemen will listen to the reading.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the jurisdiction which now is or may hereafter be conferred upon the Court of Claims said court shall have and possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into certain alleged claims for property of citizens of the United States alleged to have been taken or destroyed by the Confederate troops in their several invasions into the border counties of York, Adams, Cumberland, Franklin, Fulton, Bedford, Somerset, and Perry, in the State of Pennsylvania, during the civil war, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865; and also certain alleged claims of citizens of the United States for property alleged to have been taken or destroyed in said counties by Union troops during the civil war, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865: Provided, That suit is brought as herein provided within five years after the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That all questions of limitations as to time and manner of presenting claims are hereby waived, and no claim shall be excluded from the jurisdiction of the court because not heretofore presented to the Quartermaster-General or other officer or department of the Government.

SEC. 3. That all claims shall be presented to the court by petition, setting forth in ordinary and concise language, without unnecessary repetition, the facts upon which such claims are based, by whom the property was taken or destroyed, and the actual value thereof at the time same was taken or destroyed, and any other facts connected with the transactions and material to the proper adjudication of the case involved. The petition shall be verified by the affidavit of the claimant, his agent, administrator, or attorney, and shall be filed with the clerk of the court. It shall set forth the full name and residence of the claimant, the damages sought to be recovered, and an itemized schedule setting forth property taken or destroyed; and the value of each item of property taken or destroyed shall be attached to said petition and made a part of the same.

SEC. 4. That the service of the petition shall be made upon the Attorney-General of the United States in such manner as may be provided by the rules or orders of said court. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to appear and defend the interests of the Government in the suit, and within sixty days after the service of the petition upon him, unless the time shall be extended by order of the court made in the case, to file a plea, answer, or demurrer on the part of the Government, and to file a notice of any counterclaim, set-off, claim of damages, demand, or defense whatsoever of the Government: Provided, That should the Attorney-General neglect or refuse to file the plea, answer, demurrer, or defense as required the claimant may proceed with the case under such rules as the court may adopt in the premises.

SEC. 5. That in considering the merits of claims presented to the court under this act any testimony and papers on file in the State departments of the State of Pennsylvania, taken and received by the officers and commissioners appointed by the State to adjudicate said claims under the following acts passed by the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, to wit, act of 16th of April, 1862, act of 22d of April, 1863, act of 9th of April, 1868, and the act of 23d of May, 1871, shall be considered by the court as legal and competent evidence; but only such weight shall be given thereto as in the judgment of the court is right and proper.

SEC. 6. That the said court shall make rules and regulations for taking testimony in the causes herein provided for, by deposition or otherwise, and such testimony shall be taken in the county where the witness resides, when the same can be conveniently done; and no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in said suit, and any claimant or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government.

SEC. 7. That in case the court, upon hearing, shall find the claimant to have been a loyal citizen and his claim duly proven, and shall also find that the United States is liable for the payment thereof, in every such case, but in no other, judgment shall be entered for the claimant for the amount of his said claim so proven.

SEC. 8. That all judgments of said court shall be a final determination of the causes decided, and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said court, or the judgment reversed or modified upon appeal as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 9. That immediately after the beginning of each session of Congress the Attorney-General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress of the United States a list of all final judgments rendered in pursuance of this act in favor of claimants and against the United States and not paid.

SEC. 10. That all sales, transfers, or assignments of any such claims heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in the due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorney, are hereby declared void, and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of such judgments shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators, or transferee under administrative proceedings.

SEC. 11. That the claimant or the United States, or other party thereto interested in any proceeding brought under the provisions of this act, shall have the same rights of appeal or writ of error as are or may be reserved in the statutes of the United States in other cases, and upon the conditions and limitations therein contained. The mode of procedure in claiming and perfecting an appeal or writ of error shall conform in all respects, as near as may be, to the statutes and rules of court governing writs of error or appeals in other cases.

SEC. 12. That all papers, reports, affidavits, evidence, records, and proceedings relating to said claims now on file in the departments of the State of Pennsylvania shall be deposited and filed with the Quartermaster-General of the United States before the claim or claims are taken up by the court, and the same shall in every case be furnished to the court upon its order at the request of the claimant, or his or her attorney, or of the Attorney-General or the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission upon the part of the United States of the validity of the said alleged claims or of the liability of the United States for the payment thereof, it being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, if I can get his attention, two questions: First, does the proposed act in any way interfere with the law as it now exists in regard to the loyalty of the Southern claimants?

Mr. MAHON. I could not catch the question. There was so much noise I could not hear.

Mr. COX. My question is this: First, does this bill include anything except the claims from Pennsylvania and these Eastern States?

Mr. MAHON. The Bowman Act, the Tucker Act, and the abandoned-property act cover nearly all the claims except a few special claims that come from the South, arising under the war of the rebellion.

Mr. COX. I thought there was a section in that bill which covers claims against the United States where the property was taken by the Union forces.

Mr. MAHON. It is a different class of claims. It does not disturb the Bowman and Tucker acts whatever.

Mr. COX. One more question in regard to it. I see this suspends the statute of limitations. Now, then, as I understand you, this bill has no reference to claims where the property was taken by the Union soldiers?

Mr. MAHON. Both.

Mr. COX. Now, then, my question becomes pertinent. Does it disturb the jurisdictional question in the Court of Claims as to the loyalty of the claimant?

Mr. MAHON. They must prove it as well as your people.

Mr. COX. Now, in regard to the statute of limitations. Does not this bill suspend the statute of limitations in regard to those claims against the United States taken by Union troops regardless of whether it has been filed in any department or not?

Mr. MAHON. I will say to the gentleman I think every claim has been filed. There may probably be half a dozen that have not.

Mr. COX. Quite a number.

Mr. MAHON. Not under my bill. They have been in the Quartermaster's Department since the close of the war. I will make a statement concerning the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. Here is a bill that involves indirectly $6,000,000.

Mr. MAHON. No; about three millions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Directly three millions, but indirectly more than $20,000,000; and the discussion is being carried on by the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] over there on that side in a conversational tone which no one can hear 20 feet away.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the committee [Mr. MAHON], has yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the House is not in order. The Chair will ask the House to be in order.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is well known that many of these claims are scattered over the States of Maryland, Kentucky, Ohio, Virginia, and others, and I would like to know why they are not all embraced in a general bill, so that the House may have them all at one time and do justice to them—justice, if justice is to be done?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, in 1864, under peculiar circumstances, that apply to no other section of the country, the Pennsylvania legislature, upon a message from Governor Curtin, passed a law to adjudicate the claims of losses from 1862 to 1865, and substantive legislation was had, that all these claims be thoroughly adjudicated by a competent commission, in which the Government was represented by counsel. All the evidence was carefully taken, as it would be taken in court, and the claims were filed in the auditor-general's department of Pennsylvania, and a certificate was issued to each claimant, as follows:

This is to certify that —— —— has on file in the office of the auditor-general a duly approved and registered claim for the sum of —— dollars, as adjudicated under the act entitled "An act to authorize the liquidation of damages sustained by citizens of Pennsylvania during the late rebellion," and payable only when said claims shall be paid by the United States Government.

Now, this evidence and these claims, under the act of July, 1864, were filed in the Quartermaster-General's Department, and they have all been thoroughly adjudicated and are perfectly clean claims. No other State in the Union has put its claims in as good condition.

Mr. HEPBURN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the State of Missouri has done the same thing.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; except the State of Missouri. Pennsylvania claims have been filed in the Quartermaster-General's Department.

Mr. COX. Of the State?

Mr. MAHON. Of the State and Government. This bill provides for one thing. I do not care to make an argument as to whether these claims should be allowed or not. This bill provides that these claims shall go to the Court of Claims to ascertain all the facts in the presence of the Attorney-General, or his assistant, of the United States. As to the facts, there will be no question. The only trouble is and has been about the legal question. An appeal is to be had to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine whether the United States is legally liable for the payment of these claims. If the Supreme Court says no, that is the end of this case. If they say that the Government is liable under all the circumstances, then the State must come back to this Congress and go before your great Committee on Appropriations and ask for an appropriation to pay whatever judgments shall be found.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order that this Congress should not commit itself, having in view all the claims of the State of Pennsylvania and other States, although entirely on a different footing, in some respects similar and others dissimilar, this section was put in the bill after consultation with some of the best lawyers in the Fifty-fourth Congress on both sides of the House:

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission upon the part of the United States of the validity of the said alleged claims or of the liability of the United States for the payment thereof, it being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the gentleman object to an amendment that would allow similar cases from Missouri and Kansas?

Mr. MAHON. I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that this bill will only cover cases of this kind from Pennsylvania. The other cases from the other States are entirely different so far as the law is concerned. You can not amend this bill by putting in another State, for if you do it will disturb the whole bill. If I had the time, I could explain to the gentleman why we could not put in another State so that it would be germane. In the first place, this is a private bill, and under the rules of the House you can not amend a private bill by adding another private bill, and I want to keep strictly within the rules of the House. Now, the Supreme Court may decide against these claims, and it may decide in favor of the claimants. When I came to Congress, representing a part of these people, I found bills reported to the amount of $3,400,000, and I said that Congress had a right to know two things—first, they had the right to know all the facts surrounding these claims, to be ascertained by a court of claims; and second, this Congress had a right to know from the Supreme Court of the United States whether the Government was legally liable. I refused to ask for an appropriation, and I consented to that last section because it is perfectly fair that these claims should not be paid until we have a decision from the final court of last resort.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the gentleman tell us why his bill can not be amended so as to admit other claims of the same character?

Mr. MAHON. There is no other bill of this kind in our committee from the State of Missouri; none from the State of Maryland; none from any other State. If gentlemen representing these great States want their claims sent to the Court of Claims and adjudicated, let them present their bills through the proper channel.

Mr. RIDGELY. But if we present a general bill, covering all claims of this character from all the States, what will be its fate in the gentleman's committee?

Mr. MAHON. I do not know what the committee will do.

Mr. HOPKINS. Allow me one suggestion. The gentleman, as I understand, desires that this bill shall not commit Congress to the idea that there are in this case any legal rights——

Mr. MAHON. Wait till we get to the last paragraph of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the very point to which I wish to call attention. The last sentence of the last paragraph reads as follows:

It being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in court.

Now, we deny that these parties have any "legal rights" at all; but this bill assumes that they have.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why then do you say so?

Mr. MAHON. The bill simply gives the parties an opportunity to establish their legal rights, whatever they may be—whether they are entitled to this money or not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why not strike out that line?

Mr. MAHON. Would it suit the gentleman to insert the words "if any?"

Mr. HOPKINS. Why not strike out the line declaring it to be "the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in court?"

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is a good lawyer, and I ask him this question: When we say that we propose to allow these parties to have their legal rights determined, what does that mean? It means that the question is to be determined whether the Government owes them any money or not.

Mr. HOPKINS. You might make it read "alleged legal rights," or "legal rights, if any."

Mr. MAHON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOPKINS. But would it not be better to strike out that clause entirely?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does this last provision of the bill mean that if the Supreme Court should pass favorably upon the claims of these parties they will thereby obtain judgments in their favor, or will they have to come back to Congress for an appropriation?

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. So that those of us who believe that this whole principle of the Government paying for the ravages of war is wrong ought not to vote for this bill.

Mr. MAHON. Let me say to the gentleman that here is the great State of Pennsylvania, that put into the war 378,000 men. She paid her taxes; she complied in every other respect with her obligations to the Government, as the patriotic people of Massachusetts and other States did. A certain portion of our people residing in a part of the State that was exposed to the depredations of the enemy undertook to defend themselves. About 12,000 of the finest troops in the State, with three batteries, were put in the field. On three different occasions our people were subjected to raids or depredations, from which citizens of most of the other States were exempt.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me say to the gentleman that when the soil of Pennsylvania was invaded the people of Illinois and New York and other States sent their regiments over there to drive back the Confederate forces. Is not that enough to satisfy the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. MAHON. We did the same.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why is it necessary to give Pennsylvania a special bonus for what she did?

Mr. MAHON. There are buried in the soil of Pennsylvania ten Pennsylvanians, perhaps, to your one.

Mr. SNODGRASS. If this bill should pass, will its operations be confined to citizens of Pennsylvania?

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. This is a private bill for the benefit of the citizens of certain counties of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNODGRASS. It can not operate elsewhere?

Mr. MAHON. Let me say to the gentleman that this question has been before Congress ever since the war. Now, why should we not let the Supreme Court of the United States settle the principle on which this bill rests, which must be a settlement of the principle for all the States? It can not be otherwise.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is not the principle settled already?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think so.

Mr. MAHON. If I am expected to enter into a legal argument with the gentleman, I have one prepared; but I do not want to inflict it on this House, not deeming this the proper time or place. We merely ask that these parties be allowed to go to court, where this question will be presented fairly, pro and con.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman has a legal argument prepared, I for one would like to hear it. I say to him frankly that from my standpoint I do not think there is a vestige of legal right in any of these claims. I say that, after an investigation of this question in previous Congresses. If the gentleman has any new light to shed on this subject, I think it due to himself and the members of this House that he present it.

Mr. MAHON. The answer to the gentleman's suggestion is this: If these people have no legal claims whatever, then this bill is as harmless as a dove. We propose to go to the Supreme Court and have that court settle the question of law. If it be settled against us, we are content. But surely the gentleman from Illinois would not prevent the people of that great Commonwealth from at least ascertaining in the highest court of the land what rights they have. If they have no rights, they will be thrown out of court. If they have any legal rights, their claims will be sent back to Congress for such action as it may deem proper.

Mr. HOPKINS. One of the reasons why I have in previous Congresses opposed bills of this kind is that the passage of such a bill would establish a precedent which would enable the people in every county in every State of the Union to come here with a series of bills which would result in flooding the Supreme Court with this class of legislation to the exclusion of all others. If the people who are represented in this bill are entitled to consideration in the courts or anywhere else, there is no claim from anywhere south of Mason and Dixon's line that is not entitled to the same consideration.

Mr. MAHON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have great respect for his ability; but I know he has not investigated this case as carefully as persons who have been handling it for thirty years. We have not flooded this Congress or the courts with our claims. These 12,000 claimants have never introduced a private bill, individually. They never intended to do so. These people are represented here by the great State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the desire was to have the court pass upon some legal principle involved here.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman inform us briefly what that legal principle is which is involved?

Mr. MAHON. I will. The gentleman asks me, and I am bound to answer him in good faith.

Prior to the federation, at the time when this Government was cemented and put together, the States had absolute control over their own military power. They surrendered that power to the General Government, or, in other words, authorized the General Government, or the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, to denude every State at any time of its military power.

Now, what was given in return for that? The debate in the convention was a long and able one, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the fact that if he goes to the debates of that convention he will find that when the question was whether the States should surrender their right to control their own military that section was passed, if I am correct, by a majority of one, and then only on one express condition, which was the introduction into the constitution of section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States. The States said:

If you propose that we shall give you the power to denude us of our military power to protect ourselves, what does the General Government propose to give in return?

That was the issue in that convention, and when it came to a final conclusion, section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution was introduced and passed, and a solemn compact made between the General Government and the States on this question of military power.

Mr. MORRIS. What does that say?

Mr. MAHON. Now, what was that? I will interpolate into the article a few words to make it clearer.

We hereby, in return, promise and agree to protect the States against invasion, insurrection, and riot.

That was the compact. If this Government does not intend to keep it, far better that it had never been written. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that no court in this land has passed upon that section of the Constitution, excepting so far——

Mr. HOPKINS. Right there, as I understand it, the gentleman is not quoting the exact language of the Constitution.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I am not far from it.

Mr. HOPKINS. He is simply quoting the Constitution as he would like to have it.

Mr. MORRIS. Read the exact words.

Mr. MAHON. I am trying to give it from memory. I will give it to you straight now.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is better.

Mr. MAHON (reading)—

The United States shall guarantee—

And that is stronger than I put it. A guaranty is about as strong as a promise—

The United States shall guarantee every State in this Union a republican form of goverment—

That is one part of it—and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask now, assuming this to be a contract upon which you can sue, what is the breach of that contract that you allege?

Mr. MAHON. What does that section mean? The gentleman is a lawyer and can give us a legal definition of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is very easy.

Mr. MAHON. Give it to us.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It placed upon the Government the duty to do exactly what the Government did.

Mr. MAHON. But they did not do it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They did it. They went and drove out the invaders.

Mr. HOPKINS. They sent soldiers and drove the Confederate forces out of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And we established a republican form of government.

Mr. HOPKINS. We established a republican form of government.

Mr. MANN and Mr. RAY of New York rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and then I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. MANN. As I understand the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (and if I am not correct I should like to have him correct me), his desire is to obtain a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the relative duty of the National Government and the States as fixed by this section of the Constitution. Is that it?

Mr. MAHON. Yes, I want that decision.

Mr. MANN. And to have the Supreme Court determine——

Mr. MAHON. And settle all these questions finally.

Mr. MANN. Determine the duty of the National Government when a State is invaded.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; that is what I am after.

Mr. MANN. And in case of domestic violence.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the Supreme Court can determine that question as a law question?

Mr. MAHON. If it can not, there is no power that can.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a question of executive discretion?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a political question.

Mr. MAHON. No; and it is not a political question.

Mr. RAY of New York. As I understand the gentleman, he founds his claim wholly upon the provision of the Constitution which says:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion.

Now, that provision has always been construed by the courts and the writers on the Constitution to the effect that the word "invasion" applies simply to an invasion by a foreign foe and does not apply to an invasion of one State by an insurrectionary force from another, or by a mob or a crowd. If that provision is a guaranty on the part of the United States to protect every State against every possible invasion, within the ordinary meaning or common understanding of the word, then if a mob in one State should be organized and drift over into another State and commit damage, the United States would be responsible for it, and the result would be that we should have to keep a standing army all along the borders of every State to protect it against invasion, and you could not draw a distinction between a small insurrectionary force invading a State and a large one like the Confederate army. The civil war was all an internal affair, insurrectionary bodies from one or several States going into other States. I want to see what you say about that.

Mr. MAHON. I understand your question.

Mr. RAY of New York. If your position is correct, then the loyal citizen of every Southern State who suffered damage would have a legal claim against the Government of the United States, because they never consented to the formation of the Confederate government or the State governments under it. They were opposed to it, and the formation of those insurrectionary governments in the several Southern States was illegal and never recognized by the United States as representing the States. Those who were loyal under the Constitution were, you contend in effect, entitled to absolute protection against invasion of all kinds; and so in Virginia those people who were guaranteed this protection and who remained loyal when that State was invaded by a force from the other Southern States, and were damaged in their property, are, under your construction of the Constitution of the United States, entitled to compensation, for the Government was at fault because it did not protect them against invasion. It did not keep its contract of insurance, and therefore must pay all damage to person and property sustained by any person within a State invaded by any force, Union or Confederate.

Mr. MAHON. I understand you.

Mr. RAY of New York. This is to call your attention to the matter, and I want you to know just how far your contention will lead.

Mr. MAHON. I will give you an opportunity——

Mr. RAY of New York. I wanted to know the length that you would go. I may suggest that southern Ohio was raided by Confederate forces, and so was Kentucky raided from one end to the other, not only by Confederate forces but by the United States forces; and so I could call your attention to other States. I simply suggest this now, because if we are to go into a matter of this kind I would like to know what you have to say about it.

Mr. MAHON. It will be a little long answer; but I put it down when I was by myself, and I may state it clearer by reading it.

First. Prior to the adoption of the Constitution there existed thirteen independent sovereign States, of which Pennsylvania was one.

Now, this will apply to that:

Second. A Federal Government was created under the provisions of the Constitution, having jurisdiction over these States to the extent, and only to the extent, named in the Constitution; but the authority of the States remained; they continued to be independent of the Federal Government in all respects except as to the powers granted to the latter.

Third. One of the objects of the Constitution was to "insure domestic tranquillity;" and to secure, as you see, the safety of the people of the Commonwealth.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, will the gentleman allow me right there; right on the point that Pennsylvania was one of the thirteen States?

Mr. MAHON. Fourth. The ratification of the Constitution was required of each State before the State became a part of this Federal Government. This ratification was by the State as an independent government. (See authorities cited in Paschal's Anno. Const., note 243.)

Fifth. The right of a State to have a militia was recognized; but by Article II, section 8, clause 15, power was given to Congress to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions. And by section 2 of same article the President is made Commander in Chief of the militia of the several States when called into actual service; but the right is reserved to the States to appoint the officers of and to train the militia, according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

Sixth. In consideration of the grant by the States to the Federal Government of the powers enumerated in the Constitution, it was stipulated in section 4, Article IV, that "the United States shall protect each of them (the States) against invasion."

Seventh. The guaranty to protect each State against invasion was one of supreme importance to the States, and especially in view of the fact that the State had conceded to this new nation, into which it entered, the power to control its militia in all respects except the officering and training. And when the Federal Government fails to protect a State against invasion, and by reason thereof injuries have been sustained, a very different question is presented from such as we have above mentioned, to wit, in claims made by private citizens for injuries by the Federal forces in actual conflict, or injuries inflicted by the enemy on such individual citizens.

The present claim now under consideration is presented by the State of Pennsylvania, one of the States that entered into and became a part of this new nation and party to this covenant for protection against invasion upon the terms already mentioned. It is, therefore, a claim that does not, as we submit, fall within the rule so often quoted.

Now, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Pacific Railroad vs. The United States (120 U. S. Reports, page 227), decided that the going on the soil of those States of the Confederate troops was an invasion. So that that question has been decided by the Supreme Court that this was an invasion, and no sane man would deny that.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt you to refer to that case?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. You have read from 120 United States, case of the Pacific Railroad vs. The United States.

Mr. MAHON. That is where they held it was an invasion.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I read you from that case?

Mr. MAHON. I will give you a little time. I will yield to you after a while.

Mr. RAY of New York. The court decided there, and I will read it if you will permit me, that the United States in such cases as this are not responsible.

Mr. MAHON. Do you say it did not decide that it was an invasion?

Mr. RAY of New York. Do I understand you decline to yield to me to read this?

Mr. MAHON. If it is not too long. If you can read it in a minute or two. I have it here in my report.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. MAHON. I do.

Mr. RAY of New York. What I am undertaking to read is not in your report. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman against his will.

Mr. MAHON. My time is limited.

Mr. DALZELL. I will suggest to my colleague he will be given all the time he wants.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, I read from the headnote in that case:

United States are not responsible for injury or destruction of private property caused by military operations during the late civil war.

Now, that is what they decided expressly and emphatically in the case to which you have called attention. Now let me read a little further:

The war, whether considered with reference to the number of troops in the field, the extent of military operations, and the number and character of the engagements, attained proportions unequaled in the history of the present century. More than a million of men were in the armies on each side. The injury and destruction of private property caused by their operations and by measures necessary for their safety and efficiency were almost beyond calculation. For all injuries and destruction which followed necessarily from these causes no compensation could be claimed from the Government. By the well-settled doctrines of public law it was not responsible for them. The destruction or injury of private property in battle, or in the bombardment of cities and towns, and in many other ways in the war had to be borne by the sufferers alone as one of its consequences. Whatever would embarrass or impede the advance of the enemy, as the breaking up of roads, or in the burning of bridges, or would cripple and defeat him, as destroying his means of subsistence, were lawfully ordered by the commanding general. Indeed, it was his imperative duty to direct their destruction. The necessities of the war called for and justified this. The safety of the State in such cases overrides all considerations of private loss. Salus populi is, then, in truth, suprem alex.

They have decided this whole question.

Mr. MAHON. No; it has not. I simply quoted that authority to show that the coming on the soil of Pennsylvania by the Confederate forces was an invasion. Now I will read you what the court has said to show that that is true:

It has been held by this court in repeated instances that, though the late war was not between independent nations, yet as it was between the people of different sections of the country, and the insurgents were so thoroughly organized and formidable as to necessitate their recognition as belligerents, the usual incidents of a war between independent nations ensued. The rules of war as recognized by the public law of civilized nations became applicable to the contending forces. Their adoption was seen in the exchange of prisoners, the release of officers on parole, the recognition of flags of truce, and other arrangements designed to mitigate the rigors of warfare. The inhabitants of the Confederate States, on the one hand, and of the States which adhered to the Union on the other became enemies and subject to be treated as such, without regard to their individual opinions or dispositions, while during its continuance commercial intercourse between them was forbidden, contracts between them were suspended, and the courts of each were closed to the citizens of the other. (Brown vs. Hiatts, 15 Wall., 177, 184.)

Now, my contention was that there was an invasion on the soil of Pennsylvania, and the compact that the State entered into with the General Government was to protect the State against invasion, provided it was able to do so. Now, one moment on that. My State went beyond this. The General Government had denuded us of our military powers in so far as we had placed in the ranks of the Army over 378,000 men. The State of Pennsylvania and her citizens all paid their taxes for it in common with the other people of loyal States who were engaged in this war with the South. In everything we had complied with every demand of this Government.

Then, in addition to that, in 1862 the governor of the State of Pennsylvania, realizing the fact that this Government, perhaps, had as much as she could do to take care of herself, after he had invited the attention of President Lincoln to the provision of the Constitution, and the southern part of Pennsylvania was threatened by invasion—and he was joined in that by the governor of Maryland—the legislature not being in session and these two States were subject to invasion, asked protection under that clause of the Constitution. The President of the United States had failed, and the people of the State of Pennsylvania then raised 12 regiments of as fine men as ever left a State, and she equipped three batteries, not to defend herself against Lee's invasion or an army of invasion of 80,000 or 90,000 men, but against the Confederate raiders who from 1861 to 1865 were hanging along the southern bank of the Potomac.

We put these troops there, which were amply sufficient to protect that State and her people from any inroads or destruction at the hands of Confederate raiders. After the battle of Antietam, when Jeb Stuart swept around that great army of McClellan's, the Confederate raider was confined to the District of Columbia. The President of the United States, to save this Capitol and its archives, and this city, that belonged to the nation, arbitrarily called these troops to the capital to defend it. The result was that 2,000 men swept through the valley carrying fire and sword with them, and destroyed everything in their pathway. Again the Government called, under that section of the Constitution, and 22,000 militia were put in that gap. Again the President of the United States, arbitrarily and under that section, although we owed this Government not a man, ordered these men to the District of Columbia to protect this capital, and our troops never returned after they left the State. In 1864 we organized seven regiments of magnificent troops. We equipped them and put guns into their hands, and with them batteries, and stationed them on the southern border of my State.

Again this capital was threatened on the 28th of July, 1864, and by order of the President these troops were recalled to this capital to save it again. Two days afterwards, on the 30th of July, 2,400 raiders swept into my city at 6 o'clock in the morning, and at 8 o'clock had swept away nearly every vestige of it from the face of the earth.

You may talk about your troops from Illinois being at the battle of Gettysburg, but the troops of Pennsylvania stood on that fateful field, and the remains of their bodies can be found on the Gettysburg ground by the hundreds.

Now, every law writer—and I challenge every man in this House, for I know what I am talking about—from the days of Grotius and Vattel, three hundred and fifty years ago, to the present time, has held this principle, that where a people have contributed their share to the support and burden of the Government in time of war, when they were compelled to suffer extraordinary losses for the common good of the people—and we did suffer these losses for the common good of the State of Iowa, for the State of California, for the State of Illinois—no government would refuse to recompense them and make them whole, except when its treasury was bankrupt and it was unable to pay. All writers have held that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman speaks about the raid into this country and the destruction of property. Were not the people there standing on the same basis as the people in the Shenandoah Valley that was raided by Sheridan, by the Federal troops, and those raided by Sherman in his march to the sea?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman misapprehends my argument altogether. Here is this great Government that came out of the war of four years mightier, stronger, richer than when she entered into it, and from 1861 to 1900 has made majestic strides toward wealth. Does the gentleman withhold from the people, would he withhold from them, their right to go into the Supreme Court of the United States to ascertain what their rights are?

Mr. HOPKINS. From the gentleman's position now, it would take at least two thousand million dollars to recompense the people for the destruction of the property through the period of the war.

Mr. MAHON. Well, during the last Democratic Administration, which no Democrat has any admiration for now, two hundred and seventy millions were borrowed for some purpose, God only knows what——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why segregate property? Why put into this bill only damages for property? If the Government has violated its duty and is liable under its contract, it is liable for the lives lost by the wrongful act.

Mr. HOPKINS. And for the interruption of business of those fortunate enough not to get killed.

Mr. MAHON. You people on the plains gave your men, and you that remained at home grew rich and grew fat. You did not feel the horrors of war 700 miles from this city and know nothing about. But if you gentlemen had seen men in the prime of life, men who had accumulated forty or sixty thousand dollars, go to the poorhouse after the war ended, you would have some feeling—certainly enough feeling to allow them to go into the courts of the United States to adjudicate their claims. I have seen men come home who entered into the service with $30,000, and when they came out had nothing but the uniforms on their backs.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I know the gentleman is patriotic, and I know his great heart goes out in sympathy to all the people, but I am a little surprised, in view of what he has seen and experienced, that he should limit this bill to a few counties in the State of Pennsylvania. Why not extend it? Why not enlarge the scope of the bill so that all persons having similar claims may participate in its blessings?

Mr. MAHON. I have presented the bill on behalf of my State and its citizens because I am a representative of that great State. I do not represent any other State on this floor, although I support such measures as other Representatives may bring in, if they meet the approval of my judgment.

The gentleman talks about $20,000,000 that claims of this kind coming from the different States might amount to. That may be true; but, great heavens—are $20,000,000 to stand here in the way of doing right?

Mr. HOPKINS. I did not say $20,000,000. I said two thousand million dollars.

Mr. MAHON. I do not care. Make it two hundred million. The gentleman knows, as I do, that if the House would listen to us, we might easily save $200,000,000 every year by securing the defeat of legislation which is brought in here. We appropriate $76,000,000 in a river and harbor bill, and a large part of it is expended on rivers on which, for two-thirds of the year, a boat with a 6-foot bottom can not float.

Now, let me tell the gentleman something. After the Franco-Prussian war, when Germany had laid France at her feet and demanded an enormous indemnity, which France had to pay by borrowing the money, what did she do in regard to her own people down along the Rhine, who had suffered from the ravages of war? Did she do as this Government has done toward her citizens? That unfortunate Government, after having been crushed at the hands of Germany, in the midst of great financial distress, passed an act through her Parliament to send commissioners down into that country which had been devastated by war, not to ascertain what property had been taken by or given to the French troops, but to ascertain the damages sustained by certain citizens at the hands of the army of the enemy.

I have a copy of the report made in that case, showing losses to the extent of $120,000,000; and the French Government, recognizing her duty to her people, who had stood up patriotically and loyally during the war, appropriated $120,000,000 and paid those losses. The German Empire has pursued a similar course in respect to losses of her citizens by reason of the ravages. And after the war of the American Revolution England appropriated $22,000,000 to pay British subjects in this country who had been loyal to the Crown for losses suffered at the hands of the Continental Army. And I can show you by documentary evidence that after the close of the war of 1812, during which the British troops came up the Potomac toward this city and swept up toward Hagerstown, burning the court-house of that city and destroying property along the Potomac, the Congress of the United States in 300 cases which I could cite directly appropriated money to pay for losses which had been suffered by our citizens at the hands of the British troops.

Our Constitution differs widely from the constitutions of foreign governments. They have made theirs; we have made ours; and the section which has been referred to does not mean that the Government shall protect its citizens against foreign invasion. No law writer in this land, no writer on the laws of war, indeed, I may say no human being, has ever undertaken to maintain such a doctrine. If there is one law writer of standing who has ever taken such a position, I challenge gentlemen to produce the authority.

Mr. HOPKINS. Did not the gentleman from New York call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States directly in point, saying that this class of claims had no legal or equitable standing?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman ought to recognize the distinction. Those were private claims.

A MEMBER. So are these.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir. Here come States like the State of Maryland or my own State demanding of this Government that it shall secure to her citizens its rights.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understood the gentleman to say in his opening remarks that this was a private claim, and therefore could not be amended by putting on it a provision for other claimants.

Mr. MAHON. This is a State bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. But it is a private bill.

Mr. MAHON. The State of Pennsylvania is here demanding this matter of right in behalf of her citizens.

Mr. HOPKINS. But it is a private bill, is it not?

Mr. MAHON. Let me tell the gentleman what our State did. The gentleman talks about the million of men who were killed and the armless and legless survivors of the war. Sir, we are not claiming money for men who were killed in battle; we are not claiming money for men who were maimed in battle or who died of disease in camp. In common with the people of other States, we contributed liberally our citizens to the ranks of the Union Army. Those lives were sacrificed on the altar of the country as the free offering of a patriotic people.

No State has ever made such a claim, nor will any State; but I say that while you are bound under this Constitution to protect us, and you failed to do so, we undertook to do it ourselves; but by the intervention of the President, to save this capital, we were sacrificed and run over and became a prey to the enemy, or, in other words, we were made to suffer that loss to save this capital and this Government, and that no other State, excepting a few of the border States, suffered in a similar way.

Now, as to that opinion, I have only read it for one purpose—that is, to show that the going of Confederate troops into the State of Pennsylvania or into any State that was not out of the Union was an invasion.

They so held under that section. They never held that that was to be simply against the foreign invader, and if the gentlemen will read the debate when that section was passed, where you can get the true meaning, and which will be read in the courts, it was held that our people were to have that protection that would make them secure in their lives, liberty, and property. Now, pray, after you have failed to do your part, and after we undertook to do it, and you come in and interfered time after time and took away our troops, and submitted our people to these raids and invasions, I pray the gentleman from Illinois at least to give them one step in this direction. Allow them to go into the courts of the United States to settle this question that never has been settled. If it is settled against them, that will be the end of it. If it is settled for them, then they may come back to Congress.

And I say when this principle is once settled, either for or against these people, it will cover all States that have suffered likewise. You need not come with the beggarly argument that it is going to cost $200,000,000.

The statistics in the room of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman (the Committee on War Claims) show that, making the most liberal allowance for the claims involved, they will not amount to over $18,000,000. I am speaking of State claims.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. MAHON. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, there is no State in the Union that I love better than I do the State of Pennsylvania, excepting the State of New York, because the State of Pennsylvania is a neighbor of mine, and my home is very near her border; and there is no gentleman in the Pennsylvania delegation I would like to please more than the gentleman who has just addressed the House.

Of course if I thought there was any sort of justice, legality, or equity in this bill, I would not oppose it; but it seems to me it is too plain a proposition to admit of any serious contention that the measure is unwise and devoid of merit and that therefore it should be defeated out of hand, so to speak.

This is a most extraordinary bill in every aspect of it. It is special legislation of the worst kind, in the face of the statutes that the Congress of the United States has made.

I would call attention first to the statute of the United States which created the Court of Claims. In that statute it was provided that—

> All claims founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, and all claims which may be referred to it by either House of Congress—are placed within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims. That remained the law until 1863, when an act was passed known as the "captured and abandoned property act." In that act was placed this proviso:

> Provided also, That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or appropriation of or damage to property by the Army or Navy engaged in the suppression of the rebellion.

That was the policy of this Government in 1863. Now, later on in the history of our legislation, about two years later, that act was amended.

It granted all this jurisdiction that I have named as to all claims founded upon the Constitution of the United States or any law of Congress, except for pensions, or any regulation of an executive department, or upon any contract express or implied, or for damages liquidated or unliquidated in cases not sounding in tort, in respect of which claims the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law, equity, or admirality if the United States were sueable. Now, that was the jurisdiction conferred, but this proviso was added:

> Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to either of the courts herein mentioned—

The district and circuit courts were given concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Claims—> jurisdiction to hear and determine claims growing out of the late civil war, and commonly known as war claims, or to hear and determine other claims which have heretofore been rejected or reported on adversely by any court, department, or commission authorized to hear and determine the same.

Now you see, gentlemen, how careful the Congress of the United States has been in conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to exclude jurisdiction of these war claims.

Those parties having war claims have been relegated to Congress, and Congress is perfectly competent to deal with the question. The aid of the Court of Claims is not necessary. All States and localities having war claims are relegated to Congress. Shall Pennsylvania be granted special privileges?

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me finish. I desire to inquire right here why it is that Pennsylvania has greater equity than any other State or locality—any equity that should lead Congress to except her from the provisions of this act?

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. I want to state to the gentleman that Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, under a bill which you will find in 26 Statutes at Large, page 853, a bill of which the present one is almost an exact copy, were allowed to present their claims arising from Indian wars to the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States, and there was finally paid by this Congress, after the final decision of the Supreme Court, $1,499,220.27, under an act similar to this, for I have drawn this act almost verbatim from that.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, well, that is an entirely different matter. Those were claims for damages occasioned by outbreaks by Indians, Indian tribes over which we have sole and special control, and the cases mentioned are not at all in principle like claims growing out of the late civil war or because of that insurrection. They are based on an entirely different principle.

Mr. MAHON. I want to ask the gentleman another question: At the time of this war were not these Southern people under the control of the General Government?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will not stop to argue Indian depredation claims.

Mr. MAHON. The Government failed to repress these outbreaks. They went into a long war.

Mr. RAY of New York. Those Indian war and outbreak claims were not based upon the principle asserted here.

Mr. MAHON. They were bound to protect those people from Indians.

Mr. RAY of New York. Of course it is obligatory on the Government in equity, if not in law, to afford reasonable protection to our citizens against Indian depredations.

Mr. MAHON. I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that Congress had passed such legislation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, I am led to inquire, Why is there any superior equity in the claim of the State of Pennsylvania, that she should be excepted from the law as it is now written upon the statute books?

Mr. MAHON. I do not represent those other States; I merely represent the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RAY of New York. I say there is none. The equities of the State of Ohio are just as great as the equities of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. I do not deny that.

Mr. RAY of New York. The equity of the State of Missouri was far greater than the equities of Pennsylvania. The equity of the State of Kentucky was far greater.

Mr. MAHON. In what respect?

Mr. RAY of New York. And then look at Tennessee.

Mr. MAHON. In what respect are the equities greater?

Mr. RAY of New York. Look at Tennessee, nearly one-half of whose people remained loyal to the Government of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. I want to say that Tennessee has got $3,000,000 since the war.

Mr. RAY of New York. How much was paid to the State of Pennsylvania? How much did you get within the last two years?

Mr. MAHON. Not a dollar but $52,000, which went to Pittsburg.

Mr. RAY of New York. Is not Pittsburg in Pennsylvania? When did Pittsburg move out of Pennsylvania?

Mr. MAHON. Since the war ended all we have ever had was $123,000, and Tennessee has got over $3,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Those were private claims.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; private claims.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from New York allow me?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We do not want to confuse this matter. There has never been a dollar paid to any State in this character of claims. Those claims are based upon property taken by the Union soldiers and applied to the benefit of the Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON. For stores and supplies.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Munitions of war and supplies.

Mr. RAY of New York. I was about to call attention to that, and I will call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court, pointing out the difference between legal claims against the Government and equitable claims against the Government and those, like these embraced in this bill, where there is no law or equity to sustain them; and I am but repeating what the gentleman from Ohio has said, that no claim of this character has ever been paid to a State to reimburse it for money paid to its citizens on account of depredations committed—by the Indians, I think—certainly not to pay damages for depredations committed either by the Union Army or the Confederate army during the late civil war. The whole proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is based upon the claim that under the Constitution of the United States this Government has guaranteed to protect every State against invasion.

In other words, that we became an insurer, and that we are liable for all damage done to the citizens of a State or the property of the citizens of a State or to a State itself, if we fail to keep that contract. In other words, he says that under the Constitution we become insurers, and it makes no difference what efforts we make, how faithful we are, how large the armies, that if the armies are not at the proper point at the proper time when a hostile force, whether it be that of a foreign government or any sister State, comes within her borders, then the General Government must compensate that State for all damages sustained if an invasion actually occurs.

The gentleman says these are not private claims. What are these claims? Soon after the war closed the State of Pennsylvania, taking time by the forelock—with an eye to her own good, and I think she always has an eye to the main chance, and it is not anything against the State or her Representatives—but taking time by the forelock, she passed an act, at two or three different times, providing that those citizens who suffered damages by reason of the Confederate invasions might prove them up against the State in a certain way prescribed by the State of Pennsylvania. Then the State of Pennsylvania issued certificates of payment to these people. The State had an idea that at some time she would look to the United States Government to reimburse her. I find in the report and other statements that later on the State of Pennsylvania paid on these claims large sums of money; I think $600,000 or more, showing that the people damaged have been paid, and now she comes as a State——

Mr. MAHON. I do not want the gentleman to misrepresent the State.

Mr. RAY of New York. She comes as a State, and these claims are carried into one gross sum, amounting to over $3,000,000. I say that this claim is made up of an aggregation of private claims, and that is all there is of it. The State lost none of its property, and none of its property was damaged. Now the gentleman may interrupt.

Mr. MAHON. Now, if the gentleman's contention is right, that under the Constitution and laws these people have no right to payment of these claims, pray tell me why you are afraid to let them go to the court of last resort? It does not cost Congress anything to dispose of this matter.

Mr. RAY of New York. Why not?

Mr. MAHON. If that section of the Constitution on which we have relied does not amount to anything this bill does not amount to anything.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will answer the gentleman. I do not believe in special legislation. I believe that all States should have an equal chance. If we are going to do anything to wipe out this prohibition against sending claims to the Court of Claims in these cases to which I have called attention, then let every citizen of every State and every State with a real or an imaginary claim go to the Court of Claims and have it there adjudicated and decided. There are hundreds and thousands of them that have far more justice, far more equity, and far more claim for consideration by that court than has this one.

Mr. MAHON. Let me reply to that. I want to say that I know the gentleman is a good lawyer. He is chairman of the law committee of this House, and some of the great lawyers of Pennsylvania, and certainly the great Judge Black, who sat upon the Supreme Court, and other great lawyers have thought there were great doubts about this business, and that it ought to be settled once and forever.

Mr. RAY of New York. I know it ought to be settled, but settled in this way: the great State of Pennsylvania, rich and prosperous as she is, ought to withdraw this claim from the consideration of this House and of the American people, and never again present it.

Mr. MAHON. She never will do it until she gets justice in the courts.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me call the gentleman's attention and the attention of this House to what the United States court has decided. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that in this case they decided this was an invasion, within the meaning of the Constitution. The court decided no such thing, and anyone can satisfy himself by looking at the case. Judge Storey and others, in writing about that provision of the Constitution to which the gentleman has called attention, say that the invasion spoken of in the Constitution is an invasion by a foreign power; and it is necessarily so.

Do you think that our fathers, when they wrote the Constitution, had it in mind that there would be an insurrection within the border lines of the United States, and at some time or other an insurrectionary force, a mob organized in one State, would march into another, and that the United States Government was binding herself to protect the several States against such invasions as that? Clearly not. The proposition is clearly contrary to common sense. If such construction prevails, the United States Goverment will not only have to keep an armed establishment upon the coast line and along the borders between ourselves and Mexico and between ourselves and Canada, but armed posts all along the borders between the States to guard against little invasions by people of one State into the territory of another. This whole question has been settled, and now let me call your attention to it. I will call your attention to the settled doctrine of the courts.

I call attention also to a message of President Grant in which he vetoed a claim of this very kind.

This is the headnote in the case referred to, and this is the precise point decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in United States against Pacific Railroad and Pacific Railroad against the United States (120 U. S. Reports, page 227). The headnote is as follows:

> The United States are not responsible for the injury or destruction of private property caused by their military operations during the late civil war, nor are private parties chargeable for works constructed on their property by the United States to facilitate such operations.

That was a case where the Confederate forces burned two of the bridges owned by the railroad company. In two cases bridges were destroyed by the United States forces necessarily. Two were destroyed by the Confederate forces in their advance into Missouri and two by the United States forces in preventing such advance. I will not take the time to read, but I will call your attention and ask you to read the statement of facts in regard to when and where and why the destruction took place.

Now, what does the court say?

The war, whether considered with reference to the number of troops in the field, the extent of the military operations, and the number and character of the engagements, attained proportions unequaled in the history of the present century. More than a million of men were in the armies on each side. The injury and destruction of private property caused by their operations, and by measures necessary for their safety and efficiency, were almost beyond calculation. For all injuries and destruction which followed necessarily from these causes no compensation could be claimed from the Government. By the well-settled doctrines of public law, it was not responsible for them. The destruction or injury of private property in battle, or in the bombardment of cities and towns, and in many other ways in the war, had to be borne by the sufferers alone as one of its consequences. Whatever would embarrass or impede the advance of the enemy, as the breaking up of roads, or the burning of bridges, or would cripple and defeat him, as destroying his means of subsistence, were lawfully ordered by the commanding general. Indeed, it was his imperative duty to direct their destruction. The necessities of the war called for and justified this. The safety of the state in such cases overrides all considerations of private loss. Salus populi is then, in truth, suprema lex.

These remarks are sustained by the treatises of the text writers.

Now let me read what is said on this subject by Vattel on the Law of Nations and cited and approved by the Supreme Court in this case:

But there are other damages, caused by inevitable necessity, as, for instance, the destruction caused by the artillery in retaking a town from the enemy. These are merely accidents. They are misfortunes which chance deals out to the proprietors on whom they happen to fall. The sovereign, indeed, ought to show an equitable regard for the sufferers, if the situation of his affairs will admit of it; but no action lies against the State for misfortunes of this nature—for losses which she has occasioned, not willfully, but through necessity and by mere accident, in the exertion of her rights. The same may be said of damages caused by the enemy. All the subjects are exposed to such damages; and woe to him on whom they fall. The members of a society may well encounter such risk of property, since they encounter a similar risk of life itself. Were the State strictly to indemnify all those whose property is injured in this manner, the public finances would soon be exhausted, and every individual in the State would be obliged to contribute his share in due proportion, a thing utterly impracticable. (Book III, chapter 15, section 232.)

Again, let me call attention to cases which have been before Congress:

Three cases in Congress, one before the House of Representatives in 1797, and two before the Senate—one in 1822 and one in 1872—illustrate this doctrine. In the first of these, a Mr. Frothingham, of Massachusetts, presented a petition to the House of Representatives asking compensation for a dwelling house, the property of his mother, burned at Charlestown in March, 1776, by order of General Sullivan, then commanding the American troops at that place. The Committee on Claims, to whom it was referred, made a report that they found that the house for which compensation was sought was, with several other buildings in the vicinity, at that time in possession of the British troops, and that, for the purpose of dislodging them, the general sent a party of troops with orders to set fire to the buildings, which was done accordingly, and that they apprehended that the loss of houses and other sufferings by the general ravages of war had never been compensated by this or any other government; that in the history of our Revolution sundry decisions of Congress against claims of this nature might be found, and that the claim presented rested upon the same basis with all others where sufferings arose from the ravages of war. As the Government had not adopted a general rule to compensate individuals who had suffered in a similar manner, the committee were of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner could not be granted, and no further action was had upon the claim. (American State papers, Class XIV, Claims, page 199.)

In the second of the cases referred to a Mr. Villiers, of Louisiana, presented a petition to the House of Representatives, stating that during the invasion of the British in 1814-15, after the enemy had landed near the city of New Orleans, in order to prevent him from bringing up his cannon and other ordnance to the city, General Morgan, commanding the Louisiana militia, caused a levee to be cut through at or near the plantation of the petitioner, whereby the greater part of his plantation was inundated and remained so until after the departure of the invading army from the State; that in consequence the petitioner had suffered great losses in the destruction of his sugar cane, cane plants, and in the expenses of repairing the levee, appraised at $19,250, for which he prayed compensation. The Committee on Claims, to whom the petition was referred, recommended that its prayer should not be granted, on the ground that the losses were sustained in the necessary operations of war, for which the United States were not liable; and their recommendation was adopted. (American State Papers, Class XIV, Claims, page 835; Annals of Congress, Seventeenth Congress, first session, Part 1, page 311.)

The third of the cases referred to is that of J. Milton Best, which was much discussed in the Senate. His claim was for the value of a dwelling house and contents destroyed by order of the officer commanding the Union forces in defense of the city of Paducah, Ky., in March, 1864. The city being attacked by the Confederates in force, the Federal troops, numbering 700, were withdrawn into Fort Anderson. The claimant's house, which was about 150 yards from the fort, was taken possession of by the sharpshooters of the enemy, who did great execution picking off men at the guns within the defenses. They were driven from the house by shells from the fort and gunboats, and late that night the Confederates retired from their assault without success. They appeared with reenforcements the next morning, and the Union officer, regarding his command in great peril, his ammunition being nearly exhausted, gave orders for the destruction of all houses within musket range of the fort. The claimant's loyalty was unquestioned. The officers in command at the post from time to time during the war testified to his reliability and the effective aid he rendered the Union cause.

The Senate Committee on Claims reported the case as one presenting the "simple question of who shall pay for the destruction of a loyal citizen's property destroyed by the order of a commanding officer to save his imperiled army, at the claimant's home, a place never in possession of the enemy, and in a nonseceding State." Upon this question they say: "It appears to your committee that the facts establish a just claim against the Government for private property taken and destroyed to prevent destruction of its own property and the massacre of its troops."

They reported that "the injuries to the claimant's house by shelling out the rebels in the battle of the 25th of March [the day preceding the destruction of the property] may be regarded as a casualty by the general ravages of war which might properly be deducted from the amount of loss proved by claimant;" and they made what they deemed a proper deduction on that account in the bill presented by them for the payment of the damages. The bill was intended to cover the value of his property at the time it was burned to prevent its use by the reenforced enemy on the following day. In the debate which followed it was contended by advocates of the bill that while the damage by shelling from our own fort during the battle came within the ravages of war, the subsequent burning of the house to prevent its being used by the sharpshooters of the enemy was a taking by the Government of private property for public use for which compensation should be made.

The bill passed in the Senate January 5, 1871, but was not acted upon by the House during that Congress. It again passed in the Senate April 8, 1872, and in the House May 18, 1872. It was vetoed by the President June 1, 1872. In his message to the Senate the President, after speaking of the claim as one for compensation on account of the ravages of war and observing that its payment would invite the presentation of demands for very large sums of money against the Government for necessary and unavoidable destruction of property by the Army, said: "It is a general principle of both international and municipal law that all property is held subject not only to be taken by the Government for public uses, in which case, under the Constitution of the United States, the owner is entitled to just compensation, but also subject to be temporarily occupied or even actually destroyed in times of great public danger and when the public safety demands it, and in this latter case governments do not admit a legal obligation on their part to compensate the owner. The temporary occupation of, injuries to, and destruction of property caused by actual and necessary military operations is generally considered to fall within the last-mentioned principle. If a government makes compensation under such circumstances, it is a matter of bounty rather than a strict legal right."—Congressional Globe, Forty-second Congress, second session, Part V, page 4155.

The message was referred to the Committee on Claims, and on the 7th of February, 1873, it was reported back with a recommendation that the bill be passed, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. On the 24th of the same month the bill was reached on the Calendar and was passed over, upon objection. No further action was ever taken upon it in the Senate, and consequently it never reached the House.

The claim has been repeatedly commended to Congress since, but has never been considered by either House. The principle that for injuries to or destruction of private property in necessary military operations during the civil war, the Government is not responsible, is thus considered established. Compensation has been made in several such cases, it is true, but it has generally been, as stated by the President in his veto message, "a matter of bounty rather than of strict legal right."

In that case it was held that the destruction of property was one of the necessary incidents of war, a necessary destruction of property in the operations of both the Confederate and Union armies.

The bill was favorably reported in the Senate and passed by that body, as well as by this House. At that time, if my memory serves me, Ulysses S. Grant, who had command of the Union armies, was President of the United States. He vetoed the bill, taking the ground that there was no foundation for it either in law or equity. After the bill was returned by him no further action was taken upon it.

Mr. MAHON. I have reported a great number of cases in which Congress paid damages for property destroyed by troops. The action of Congress on this subject has fluctuated back and forth. The precedents of one Congress do not bind another. What we want is a final settlement of this legal question by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is a certain class of cases where Congress always has compensated and always will compensate the private citizen for the destruction of his property——

Mr. MAHON. By the enemy?

Mr. RAY of New York. By the enemy, it may be, in some cases. But the court says in this case that where that has been done it has always been a gift or bounty, not as a legal or equitable right.

Mr. MAHON. I want to say to the gentleman that no case like this has been before the Supreme Court, involving the constitutional question.

Mr. RAY of New York. This case I read from involves exactly these questions.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, not at all; entirely different. In some respects it is similar, but the main question is different.

Mr. RAY of New York. The court say:

The claim has been repeatedly presented to Congress since, but it has never been considered by either House. The principle that for injuries to or destruction of private property in necessary military operations during the civil war the Government is not responsible is thus considered established.

What could be more clear and decisive of the question now under consideration? The Supreme Court holds explicitly, emphatically, and clearly that the principle that for injuries to or destruction of private property in necessary military operations during the civil war the Government is not responsible is thus considered established.

They so hold and decide. Then it says compensation has been made in several such cases, it is true, but it has generally been, as stated by the President in his veto message, a matter of bounty rather than of strict legal right.

That is what the court say. The Congress of the United States, when a just claim is presented to it, may, as an act of bounty, do what it pleases, I suppose.

There is no power that could stay our hand should we give away to worthy or unworthy objects every cent of money in the Treasury.

That is, there is no power except the veto message of the President of the United States.

You will recollect that a short time ago one of the Comptrollers undertook to hold up acts of Congress, and you know what a commotion that created. That was under a Democratic administration, however.

I read further:

In what we have said as to the exemption of the Government from liability for private property injured or destroyed during the war by the operations of armies in the field, or by measures necessary for their safety and efficiency, we do not mean to include claims.

Now, here is the character of property where there is a legal liability:

Where property of loyal citizens is taken for the service of our armies, such as vessels, steamboats, and the like for the transport of troops and munitions of war, or buildings to be used as storehouses and places of deposit of war material, or to house soldiers, or take care of the sick, or claims for supplies used or appropriated. In such cases it has been the practice of the Government to make compensation, on the general principle of justice that compensation should be made where private property is taken for a public use, although the seizure and appropriation of private property under such circumstances by the military authorities may not be within the terms of the constitutional clause.

Then again:

While the Government can not be charged for injuries to or destruction of private property caused by military operations of armies in the field or measures taken for their safety and efficiency, the converse of the doctrine is also true.

That is, that private individuals can not be charged with the cost of reconstructing such work when it is done by the Government voluntarily.

Military necessity will justify the destruction of property, but will not compel private parties to erect on their own lands works needed by the Government or to pay for such works when erected by the Government.

That covers the whole case, and it covers this whole proposition.

Mr. SNODGRASS. From what decision is the gentleman reading?

Mr. RAY of New York. From 120 U. S., pages 238 and 239, in the case of The United States vs. Pacific Railroad. And the court reiterated the same doctrine right over again soon after that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, something has been said here by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the effect that he did not think the Government had performed its whole duty in this regard. Why, what could this Government have done? What was this Government under obligation to do? From the outbreak of the war of the rebellion to its close, in 1865, 2,750,000 men on the Union side alone were called into the service.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to correct his statement? I did not say the Government did not do its duty.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; but you leave us to infer that.

Mr. MAHON. No; I admitted that the President had a right to call these troops away from these counties, but he took them under the obligation that the Government was bound to make good any loss that might come by it.

Mr. RAY of New York. I understand the gentleman's claim, and let me repeat it so there will be no mistake.

Mr. MAHON. I want you to make it right now.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman says that under the Constitution of the United States, when it was framed, the thirteen original States, each being an independent sovereignty, surrendered their right and control over their militia in time of war to the Government of the United States, and gave the Government of the United States under such circumstances the right to call out the militia and put it under orders of the Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States, and that they were thus placed beyond the control of the several States.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. He says, in addition to that, that in return for that surrender by the States the Government of the United States guaranteed to every State a republican form of government and guaranteed to every State protection against invasion.

Mr. MAHON. And that is what it did not carry out.

Mr. RAY of New York. And that it did not protect the State of Pennsylvania against invasion.

Mr. MAHON. And it could have done it.

Mr. RAY of New York. And that therefore we are legally liable on the ground of a contract—a contract of insurance—which has been broken by the Government.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will allow me—because you can not argue all the law here—if this case goes to the courts it will be shown by the official records that the President purposely withdrew those troops from the State, to invite the rebels into that territory, so that they should not come to this part of the country to destroy this capital. That is the truth of it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I can show it to you.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now you are claiming that the Government of the United States, acting through the Commander in Chief of its armies, was not only negligent but was guilty of a willful tort.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; that is not the position. The gentleman ought to be fair. It was to invite the Confederate troops into that country, to open it up, so that they would not come into this country to destroy this capital. That was war. That was right.

Mr. RAY of New York. This is your claim, that the Commander in Chief of the Army, the President of the United States, having at his command a sufficient force to protect the State of Pennsylvania, voluntarily withdrew it from the valleys and avenues leading to that State, and brought them down in front of Washington or sent them in some other direction.

Mr. MAHON. Brought them here.

Mr. RAY of New York. In order to divert the enemy from the capital of the United States?

Mr. MAHON. That is exactly my statement.

Mr. RAY of New York. Therefore you are charging the Government with a wrong?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. RAY of New York. You are charging it with negligence?

Mr. MAHON. No; that was a military movement decided upon by the War Department.

Mr. RAY of New York. It was either wrong or negligence or was a necessary military operation in seeking to put down and subdue the rebellion. If it was the latter, then the Government of the United States clearly is not responsible; and the Supreme Court of the United States says that for all necessary military operations we are not liable; and so you can not base it upon the ground of negligence or wrong. But now let us see what this Government did do, Mr. Chairman, under the existing circumstances. We raised from the beginning to the end of the war 3,000,000 men, nearly, put them in the Army, armed them, equipped them, and drilled them. We placed them all along the border line. The flower of our Army was always in front of Washington. We sent troops into Kentucky, we sent them into Tennessee, we sent them into Missouri, and sent them into Virginia.

The fair fields of Tennessee, Missouri, and Kentucky (and Kentucky never went into the Southern Confederacy)—the fair fields of all those States, especially of Kentucky, were raided from end to end. They were blackened with the smoke of battle, battles occurring almost every day. Hardly a citizen in that State—whether loyal or disloyal, but suffered the loss of nearly every, thing he or she had excepting the mere land itself. Has Kentucky ever presented any claim here? Are we to allow her to present a claim? Why do not we dignify the claim she may have, that her citizens may have, that Tennessee and her citizens may have, that Missouri and her citizens may have, that Virginia and her citizens may have, or that Maryland and her citizens may have, or Ohio may have?

Why not dignify them all and refer all to the Court of Claims? Why, for thirty-five years we have kept all these claims out, kept them from the consideration of the Court of Claims, because to send them there would be a nonsensical proceeding, would be to dignify these claims, would be to create a feeling of unrest all through the people of the loyal States, because, I almost might say, it savors of stinginess—I do not say it, but I almost might say it savors of stinginess—to ask the General Government to make compensation in any such cases as this. Pennsylvania was loyal. She did her part in every emergency that arose during the civil war. The Government did its part to the best of its ability. The very flower of the Union Army at all times was kept along the border line, along the Potomac, protecting Maryland, the District of Columbia, and the great State of Pennsylvania against these inroads by the Confederate armies.

The border line of Ohio was left almost entirely undefended all the time. When these great raiding hordes came northward, they always found the flower of the Union Army ready to stop them. There was the army under McClellan, that won victory at Antietam; there was the army under Sheridan, in the Valley; there was the army under Hooker first, and then under the gallant Meade, that won victory at Gettysburg. So that on both occasions that the soil of Pennsylvania was invaded the flower of the Union Army was there to repel the invasion. How was it in the State of Maryland? How was it in the State of Kentucky, that I have already called attention to? And I will not rename the others.

Now, then, let me call the attention of this House to the result if this bill is enacted. This wipes out, in the first place, the statute of limitations which has been enacted into law and for the last twenty years has stood against all of these claims. That statute of limitations is in the law now, and this bill would wipe that out. It has been a law for fifty years that all such claims, before they could be acted on, either by Congress or by the courts, any of the courts, in any way, directly or indirectly, should be submitted to one of the Departments, not the Attorney-General, but one of the Departments. This bill wipes out that provision of law. In other words, it wipes out three express provisions of law that have been on the statute books for fifty years in regard to this class of claims, all in order that we may let this claim and possibly other claims of like character go before the Court of Claims.

I want to say right here that in my judgment the Court of Claims has already business enough of a legitimate character before it for consideration and disposition. There are claims enough growing out of the recent war with Spain, and growing out of the present conflict in the Philippine Islands, to take all the money we will have to devote to this purpose. There are enough claims of that character to take the attention of the Court of Claims without reviving these old, discounted war claims thirty-five years old.

Why, gentlemen, if there had been any justice in this claim or claims of this character, do you not suppose that immediately upon the close of the war of the rebellion, when every loyal heart was beating and throbbing with patriotism and love of country and with a desire to compensate every citizen of the Republic who had suffered damage and who was entitled to compensation, some law of this character would have been passed to enable the speedy determination and disposition of these claims?

Do you think that a claim of this character, for such damages as are here alleged, if just, would have been vetoed in the year 1869 by that gallant Union general, Ulysses S. Grant, who understood all about it? Do you think that he, patriotic and loyal as he was, would have put his foot on this class of claims if he believed there was any justice or merit in them? I hold in my hand a resolution and memorial from the State of Maryland, which has been sent to me during this session of Congress, and I have been asked to support the measure. I doubt not that a similar document has been sent to every member of this House. It is as follows:

Joint resolution and memorial of the general assembly of the State of Maryland to the Congress of the United States, for the passage of a bill to reimburse and indemnify the mayor and aldermen of Frederick.

Whereas on July 9, 1864, during the progress of the late civil war, the town of Frederick, in the State of Maryland, was seized by the Confederate army under Gen. Jubal A. Early, and the said army, by way of retaliation against the Government of the United States for the destruction of property by the Union armies in the Confederate States of America, exacted from said town, under pain of the pillage and burning thereof, the sum of $200,000; and

Whereas the State of Maryland had faithfully satisfied all the requisitions made upon it by the Government of the United States in the prosecution of said war, and was entitled to receive for itself and the said town of Frederick from the Government of the United States protection against the invasions and aggressions of the Confederate armies, and the said Government, after having taken and removed the home defense forces of said State beyond its limits and control, failed to comply with the request of said State to provide for the defense thereof and of the said town of Frederick as one of its municipalities against the invasion of the said Confederate army under General Early, and by reason of such failure of the Government of the United States the said invasion was accomplished and the said town of Frederick was despoiled as aforesaid by way of retaliation against the said Government; and

Whereas the said municipality, as a direct result of said exaction, has ever since been under the necessity of carrying a large bonded indebtedness which has been a continuous and is a present hardship to the citizens of said town, and it is just and equitable that the Government of the United States should assume the loss suffered by said town by reason of its loyalty to the Union and on account of a policy of retaliation directed against the said Government: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the general assembly of Maryland, That the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to pass a bill appropriating the sum of $200,000 to be paid to the mayor and aldermen of Frederick, in the State of Maryland, as a reimbursement and indemnity for the loss sustained by the said municipality through the said reprisal and exaction of the said Confederate army of invasion.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit, under the seal of this State, a copy of the aforegoing resolution and memorial to each of the Senators and Representatives now in Congress from Maryland, with the request that they lay the same before their respective Houses in support of the measure hereinbefore mentioned.

Given under our hands this 13th day of February, 1900.

JOHN HUBNER,
President of the Senate.
LLOYD WILKINSON,
Speaker of the House of Delegates.

STATE OF MARYLAND, Set.:

I, Allan Rutherford, clerk of the court of appeals of Maryland, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a full and true copy of the joint resolution of the general assembly of Maryland of which it purports to be a copy, as taken from the original resolution belonging to and deposited in the office of the clerk of the court of appeals aforesaid.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand as clerk and affixed the seal of the said court of appeals this 20th day of February, A. D. 1900.

[SEAL.] ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
Clerk Court of Appeals of Maryland.

STATE OF MARYLAND, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, John Walter Smith, governor of the State of Maryland, do hereby certify that Allan Rutherford is clerk of the court of appeals of Maryland, and, as such, keeper of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of the State, and that full faith and credit are due and ought to be given to his acts as such.

In testimony whereof, I have hereto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Maryland on this 21st day of February, in the year of our Lord 1900.

[SEAL.] JNO. WALTER SMITH.

By the governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN, Secretary of State.

We are asked, or will be asked, to reimburse the State of Maryland for the money that was collected at that time. And, gentlemen, let the Congress of the United States open the door in the way proposed, recognize these claims, give them dignity and character, and where will we stop? What will be the result? All the States I have named, with Kentucky and Tennessee, would take more money from the Treasury, justly, if there is any merit in this bill, than we have in the Treasury of the United States or could put there in the next ten years.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that is a mistake. There are men on the floor of this House that know exactly what those claims are, and I assert here and defy contradiction, that the wildest estimates would not amount to over seventeen millions to wipe out all these claims. We have got seven hundred and eighty-five millions now in the Treasury, and for the next ten years it is going to come in by the billions.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, you say your people suffered to the extent of three millions?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; and if every border State suffered three millions, that would only be fifteen millions.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the State of Pennsylvania, in the Gettysburg campaign, and in that little raid, both of short duration, and only penetrating a little distance into that great State, in addition to the just and legal war claims that have been paid already, has also suffered $3,000,000 damages of this character, what must be the amount of claims that the States of Ohio, Missouri, Kansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia, and Virginia could bring against this Government?

Another thing, if there is any justice in this claim at all, if there is any foundation to it in law or in equity, then every Southern State has a just claim against the United States for all the damages sustained by loyal citizens by reason of the late civil war between the States. Why? Let me call your attention. You say that under the Constitution the Government guaranteed to protect every State against invasion. You say that an invasion by a Confederate force during the civil war was within the meaning of the Constitution an invasion of the State.

Mr. MAHON. Now, let me answer the question——

Mr. RAY of New York. Will the gentleman wait until I get through? The State of Kentucky never seceded. Virginia did, but the State did not do it; it was an illegal act, and it was done by certain individuals. Thousands of people of that State were loyal. They did not go out of the Union. They remained loyal to the flag. The government that was set up in Virginia—and this is but an illustration—the government that was set up in Virginia was never recognized by the United States as a legal government. It was not a legal government; it was an insurrectionary government. The loyal people of that State, thousands of them, remained at home. They stood up for the nation, for the Stars and Stripes all through the rebellion; they suffered damage in their person and in their property, outrageous, indescribable, at the hands of both armies. The United States had not protected them against invasion, had not protected the loyal people of Virginia against invasion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and, Mr. PAYNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8463. An act ratifying an appropriation by the legislature of Oklahoma, out of the Morrill fund, for the use of the university at Langston for colored students;

H. R. 7649. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the city of Elreno, Okla., for cemetery purposes;

H. R. 5049. An act to settle the title to real estate in the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex.;

H. R. 153. An act granting a pension to Elizabeth Johns;

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a conference report on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read instead of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. May I inquire what report this is?

Mr. HITT. It is the conferees' report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. We have been over it very carefully, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], the ranking member of the minority, has aided and agrees to it.

Mr. SIMS. It involves no discussion?

Mr. HITT. None at all; we are all perfectly agreed about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the statement be read instead of the report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effects of the action agreed upon, and recommend it in the accompanying conference report, namely:

The conferees on the part of the House recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate on the following items:

Item.	House.	Senate.	Increase.
Envoy extraordinary to the Netherlands	$7,500	$10,000	$2,500
Envoy extraordinary to Haiti	5,000	7,500	2,500
Minister resident and consul-general to Siam	5,000	7,500	2,500
Secretary of legation to Gautemala and Honduras	.....	1,800	1,800
Third secretary of embassy to Mexico	.....	1,200	1,200
Repairs to legation premises at Bangkok, Siam	.....	2,000	2,000
Consul at Cheefoo, China	2,500	3,000	500
Consul at Bahia, Brazil	2,000	2,500	500
Consul at Barbados, West Indies	2,000	2,500	500
Consul at Rotterdam, Netherlands	2,000	2,500	500
Consul at London, Canada	1,500	2,000	500
Consuls at Genoa and Milan, Italy, each	1,500	2,000	1,000
Consuls at Chihuahua, Mazatlan, and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, each	1,500	2,000	1,500
Consul at Berne, Switzerland	1,500	2,000	500
Consul at La Guayra, Venezuela	1,500	2,000	500
Clerk hire at Rotterdam (Netherlands), Osaka and Hiogo (Japan), each	500	1,200	1,400
Clerk hire at Naples, Italy	480	800	320
Clerk hire at Prague, Bohemia	480	720	240
Total	.....	.....	20,460

By the Senate amendments the feed consulates were salaried at Rosario, Argentina, $1,500; Cartagena, Colombia, $1,500; Saltillo, Mexico, $1,000; and Orillia, Ontario $1,500; but this does not increase the burden upon the Treasury.

The conferees on the part of the Senate recede from the following amendments of the Senate:

Item.	House.	Senate.	Decrease.
Consul-general at Ottawa, Canada	$3,000	{ $4,000 (3,500) }	$500
Consul-general at Frankfort, Germany	3,000	4,000	1,000
Consul at Dawson City	3,000	3,500	500
Consul at San Juan del Norte, Nicaragua	2,500	3,000	500
Consul at Beirut, Syria	2,000	2,500	500
Consul at Nice, France	1,500	2,000	500
Consul at Port Hope, Canada	1,500	2,000	500
Consul at Windsor, Nova Scotia	1,000	1,500	500
Consul at Batavia, Java	1,000	1,500	500
Decrease in conference report over Senate bill	.....	.....	5,000

Mr. HITT. The statement just read I hope is so clear that everybody will understand it. I may say by way of summary that the estimates of the Department called for $1,895,848.76; the bill as passed by the House appropriated $1,743,708.76; the amount appropriated last year was $1,714,533.76; the net increase of the House bill, as shown by the statement just read, is, I think, $20,460 less $5,000, or $15,460. I move the adoption of the report.

The question being taken, the report of the conference committee was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONFERRING JURISDICTION ON THE COURT OF CLAIMS IN CERTAIN CASES.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask ten minutes more, that I may complete what I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. I hope the gentleman does not want to take up our time. He has already occupied nearly an hour.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have a point which I want to make.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman apprehend that this bill is going to pass?

Mr. RAY of New York. I did not know but that it might.

Mr. SIMS. I hope the gentleman does not want simply to consume our time. I do not wish to cut off his remarks, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I was calling attention to the fact that if the principle of this bill is to obtain in this House, claims of this character will be brought in here from every State and in behalf of every State that engaged in secession—the so-called seceding States—those that formed the Confederacy; and I was pointing out why it would be so.

In all of those States there were a large number of loyal citizens. The governments that were formed there by those who took part in the rebellion were never recognized by the United States. They were held to be illegal, insurrectionary, void. The loyal people were not affected by them. Those States were invaded—take Virginia, for example; that State was invaded by the armies that were formed in the seceding States. They came upon the soil of Virginia in tens of thousands; they overran her fields. The United States Government, not for the purpose of protecting that State from invasion, but to drive out the Confederate forces, went down there and invaded her territory. We failed, in the first instance, to keep our contract to guarantee her a republican form of government under the Constitution.

Then we went down there—for what purpose? To sweep Virginia herself into line, and to drive out the Confederate forces from other States. We invaded her soil. She was blackened with the smoke of battle from end to end by two invading forces. We did not keep out the Southern armies, nor did we keep out our own. Men from both armies committed damage there to the rights and interests of loyal citizens in Virginia, the same as they did in Pennsylvania. Now, I ask you, why should we not compensate those citizens of Virginia for the damage that they sustained?

Mr. BROMWELL. Can the gentleman give us any information as to whether any compensation has been made to the State of Ohio for damages which grew out of the Morgan raid across that State?

Mr. RAY of New York. Not for any such claims for damage as are included in this bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. I refer to the destruction of property during the Morgan raid.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not for damage occurring because of necessary military operations—never a cent. So far as I know—of course I could not search out all these points; I take the word of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]—so far as I can find by a hasty search of the records, the State of Ohio has never made any such claim.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Never. I will tell you what Ohio did. The State of Ohio separated these cases into three classes: First, property taken and used by the Union Army; second, property taken by the rebel forces; third, property destroyed by both forces. Payment was made for property taken by the Union forces——

Mr. MAHON. The Government paid that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Property taken and used by the Union forces—nothing beyond that.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is to say, the class of claims to which I have called attention, for which the Supreme Court said we were liable.

Mr. MAHON. The reason the States in rebellion have presented no claims of this class is because the legislatures from those States, elected by and acting for the people, voted resolutions of secession, which were the act of the whole people; and as a matter of fact they have never had, never will have, never dreamed of having, such claims as these. After those States had gone out of the Union by consent of the people, they could have no claim for damages resulting from the invasion of our armies.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has not the Congress of the United States always denied that those Confederate governments represented the people?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has it not always denied that they were legal governments?

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has not the Supreme Court of the United States decided that they were not legal governments; that no act of theirs was legal?

Mr. MAHON. I beg your pardon. The first State legislatures that voted them out of the Union were legal, and their action was the act of the people.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; the Supreme Court has decided that every one of them was illegal; that they did not represent the people; that they were not acting under or within the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. Can you quote the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States for that?

Mr. RAY of New York. That they acted in defiance of the Constitution of the United States. Therefore I say that if your contention is true, every loyal man and woman in all of those States is entitled to be compensated by the General Government for every cent's worth of damage sustained, either in person or in property; and, as has well been said here, if it be true that that provision of the Constitution amounts to an insurance, then it follows necessarily that the States can not only recover for property destroyed and injured, but every man who was injured in his person has a cause of action against the Government.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman tell us what that section does mean?

Mr. RAY of New York. I will tell you what it means. It is a pledge upon the part of the Government of the United States to do its best to repel invasion by a foreign power; it is a promise that if any foreign potentate or power——

Mr. MAHON. Foreign or domestic. Where do you get your authority for your contention?

Mr. RAY of New York. It does not include any domestic foe. It does not apply to insurrection.

Mr. MAHON. Quote your authority for that.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will give you my authority. Look at the writers on constitutional law, Story and others, and you will find they say so.

Mr. MAHON. Not at all.

Mr. RAY of New York. It refers exclusively to invasion by some foreign potentate or power, and has no reference at all to internal troubles, either in a State or among the United States.

Mr. MAHON. Then you differ from the Supreme Court, that is all.

Mr. RAY of New York. It did not undertake to guarantee a State against invasion by some mob or lawless aggregation of individuals, coming from one State into another. If it was so held, you could see what the obligation would be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know my time has expired, and I have taken a longer time than I ought. I do not blame the gentleman from Pennsylvania for favoring this bill. I have no criticism to make. He lives up there in a district composed in whole or in part of those counties thus invaded.

Every legal claim against the Government growing out of those invasions has already been paid, and he now gathers together in a bunch all of these claims for damages arising from the necessary military operations in that State, occasioned not only of the Union but of the Confederate armies resulting from the movements of the Union armies to repel the invasion and the movements of the Confederate army trying to invade the State, and says that because we could not make good an alleged contract of insurance against invasion, therefore the Government of the United States must pay.

And what I say in response to that is, that if this House votes such a bill as that through, and sends such claims as that to the Court of Claims for its consideration, if this House thus dignifies them, then we ought to go back to the war of 1812 and compensate the citizens of Louisiana, who, as I have shown you, were denied a remedy. We ought to go back to the war of 1812 and compensate the people of Maryland, whose right to compensation was denied. We ought to go to the citizens of New York, who had an invasion, and compensate them.

Then let us go to Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia, Ohio, Maryland, and to the loyal citizens of every one of the seceding States, and let us put our hands in the Treasury of the United States and compensate them.

If you vote this bill through, and send this character of claims to the Court of Claims for their consideration, then do what is equal, exact, and fair justice by all. Bring in your bills, boys, and let us have a fine old time. Let us make Rome howl and the Treasury of the United States weep.

Mr. ZIEGLER. Mr. Chairman, the bill under discussion by the committee is an important measure. The manner in which the bill is drawn should limit the discussion. I do not deem it necessary to discuss at length the history leading up to the proposed legislation. The report from the Committee on War Claims clearly and exhaustively sets forth the history of the claims which this bill refers to the Court of Claims. For the purpose of the remarks I am about to make, I am not disposed to repeat it. These claims have frequently been the subject of legislation by Congress, but never in the present shape.

While it is true that a thorough knowledge concerning the manner in which these claims occurred, as well as a full discussion of the law governing the liability of the Government to pay them, might aid the committee in reaching a conclusion favorable to the bill, still the view I take of this measure, I repeat, necessarily precludes a lengthy and exhaustive argument.

It is sufficient to state that the damages claimed resulted from the invasion of Pennsylvania by the Confederate forces during the civil war; that in pursuance of legislation in Pennsylvania these claims have been fully, satisfactorily, and finally adjusted in amount, and with a care and precision that removes all doubt about their correctness. So much care, indeed, was exercised in this direction that there is not the slightest indication of fraud or misrepresentation, and if ultimately the Government must pay these claims the committee can be satisfied that it will not be obliged to pay more than is justly due the claimants.

The itemized claims and the proof in support of them will be found among the records at Harrisburg, and after many efforts to secure their payment by the Government these claimants are now again asking that action be taken by this Congress in the way indicated by the bill. Now, what does this measure provide? Negatively speaking, it does not provide by any of its terms that the amount of these claims shall be paid out of the public funds; that is to say, the bill does not carry with it an appropriation out of the public moneys for that purpose.

The passage of the measure will not commit the Government to either their recognition as valid claims or its liability to pay them. It is expressly declared in the closing words of the act, as its true meaning, merely to secure to the claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts. It simply confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction with respect to the claims.

What member of Congress, be he lawyer or layman, will by his vote deny this right to these claimants? As well might the learned judge of a court say to a suitor, there is no use to bring your action into my court, you have no case. Courts are established to hear and determine the facts and law of a case. Suitors are not arbitrarily turned away, their rights denied, and the case prejudged.

If these claimants were by this measure seeking to commit the Government to a recognition of the validity of these claims, if they were asking an appropriation from the public Treasury by any clause or provision of the bill, then I would exhaustively argue their history and the legal question of the Government's liability; but it is not by me deemed essential at this time, in the light of the provisions of the bill. True, all this is fully set forth in the report from the Committee on War Claims, and so strongly, indeed, that there should not be one vote in this House recorded against this most just measure.

Mark its provisions. The first section declares that the Court of Claims shall have and possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into certain alleged claims for property of citizens of the United States alleged to have been taken or destroyed by the Confederate troops in their several invasions into the border counties of York, Adams, Cumberland, Franklin, Fulton, Bedford, Somerset, and Perry, in the State of Pennsylvania, during the civil war, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, and requires that suit be brought within five years after the approval of the act.

The second section of the bill waives the question of limitation against the claims because not presented to the proper officer or department of the Government.

The third section, in a most clear and precise manner, prescribes the method of bringing suit.

I will not take the time of the House to read it, and for the purpose of this argument it is not essential.

The fourth section provides the method of serving the petition and defines the Attorney-General's duty, and all must be done as provided by the rules of the court.

The fifth section declares what shall be evidence, both legal and competent, but such weight shall be given thereto as in the judgment of the court is right and proper. The sixth section gives the court power to make rules and regulations for taking testimony by deposition or otherwise, and declares that any party in interest may be a witness and examined on the part of the Government.

It is the seventh section of the bill, Mr. Chairman, to which I wish to call special attention, and I read it in its entirety.

That in case the court, upon hearing, shall find the claimant to have been a loyal citizen and his claim duly proven, and shall also find that the United States is liable for the payment thereof, in every such case, but in no other, judgment shall be entered for the amount of said claim so proven.

Now, it seems to me that in the discussion of this measure we need go no further. If the claimant can not prove his loyalty, and if his claim is not duly proven, that is the end of the claimant's right to recover, even if the court should hold that the Government is liable to pay. If, however, the claimant establishes his loyalty to the Government and proves his claim, and if the liability of the Government to pay is established, then and then only will the public treasury be called upon to pay.

Who will say that this is not just? Who will deny the right of the claimants to prove their loyalty, their claims, and the legal liability of the Government to pay, in the due form of a legal action in the Court of Claims? This is all the bill does. It may be said in reply to this argument that we may as well decide the whole case here by the committee. This would necessarily involve the proof of loyalty on the part of the claimants, proof of the claims themselves, and the legal question of the Government's liability. Are we prepared to do this? Do we sit here as a court? So far as I am concerned, from my knowledge of the history of these claims, having lived at the time of the invasion in Gettysburg, and from what I believe to be the law governing the case, I would promptly vote an appropriation out of the public Treasury to pay these just and well-established claims; but this is not asked by the bill.

It merely confers jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims with respect to these particular claims, and I ask, Is it not fair and just to these claimants to permit them to go with their demands before the court for final trial and adjudication under the terms of the act? It is proper, however, to call attention to the remaining sections of the bill in order that its absolute fairness both to the claimants and the Government may be understood.

The eighth section says that all judgments of the Court of Claims shall be a final determination of the causes decided, and of the rights and obligations of the parties thereto, and shall not thereafter be questioned unless a new trial or rehearing shall be granted by said court or the judgment reversed or modified upon appeal.

The ninth section says that immediately after the beginning of each session of Congress the Attorney-General of the United States shall transmit to the Congress of the United States a list of all final judgments rendered in favor of claimants and against the United States and not paid.

The tenth section contains an important provision. It declares that all sales, transfers, or assignments of any such claims heretofore or hereafter made, except such as have occurred in the due administration of decedents' estates, and all contracts heretofore made for fees and allowances to claimants' attorneys, are hereby declared void, and all warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury in payment of such judgments shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant or his lawful heirs, executors, or administrators, or transferee under administrative proceedings, thus removing what has heretofore been an objectionable feature, that a great portion of these claims would go into the hands of attorneys.

The eleventh section gives the right of appeal or writ of error to either the claimant or the United States under the conditions and limitations of existing laws.

The twelfth section provides that all papers, reports, affidavits, evidence, records, and proceedings relating to said claims now on file in the departments of the State of Pennsylvania shall be deposited and filed with the Quartermaster-General of the United States before the claim or claims are taken up by the court, and the same shall in every case be furnished to the court upon its order at the request of the claimant, or his or her attorney, or of the Attorney-General or the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States.

The last section of the bill says that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as an admission upon the part of the United States of the validity of the said alleged claims or of the liability of the United States for the payment thereof, it being the true intent of this act merely to secure to said claimants an opportunity to have their legal rights determined in the courts.

The following is a statement of the amount of losses suffered by each county from invasions by the Confederate forces:

Adams County		$485,900.71
Stuart's raid		3,538.28
		489,438.99
Franklin County	$726,503.98
Stuart's raid	119,529.32
Burning of Chambersburg	1,625,435.55
		2,471,468.85
Cumberland County		211,778.95
Fulton County		6,808.03
York County		53,944.08
Somerset County		214,366.15
Do		120.00
Perry County		2,640.40
		3,450,565.45

The magnitude of this aggregate may startle the committee. No figures should be startling in any case when a question of right and justice is concerned. We appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for other purposes, and I venture the assertion that in no case more deserving than when under this bill, if it shall become a law, and if the claimants shall bring suit in the Court of Claims and prove their loyalty and their claims and the Government's liability to pay is established, it shall be called upon to pay.

Mr. Chairman, I may well close what I have to say by quoting a portion of the eloquent language of the Committee on War Claims at the close of their report:

> The State of Pennsylvania responded to every call of the Government for the common defense. Her quota of troops was never unfilled. There was no duty she did not perform in common with her sister nonseceding States for the maintenance of the authority of the Federal Government. But she was situated on the border, and in addition to responding as above stated, and notwithstanding that she had the right to expect that the Government would prevent the enemy from entering upon her territory, she organized in addition militia of her own to repel any attempted invasion. She took every precaution against such a calamity. These forces were organized, drilled, armed, and equipped at the expense of the State, and stationed to protect against the very invasion and injuries for which she now presents this claim.
>
> But there was imminent danger to the entire country of incalculably greater loss. The capital of the nation was threatened. Its vast property interests at the seat of government—its Treasury, its archives, its very existence as a Government—all were in the greatest peril, and in this crisis, under the Constitution, the President called this force, organized to protect the State, to the higher duty of protecting the nation. The call was responded to by the withdrawal of the reserved militia raised by the State, and that withdrawal left the State defenseless and this injury followed.
>
> It is impossible to make a stronger case than this for asking compensation.

But compensation is not asked by any of the terms and provisions of this bill. I repeat what I have already said, and what every member of the committee now well understands, the bill simply confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction with respect to these claims, and there allows them to be tried and finally determined either in favor of the claimants or the United States Government. The Committee on War Claims unanimously recommend the passage of the bill. There ought not to be one vote recorded against this just measure.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, this is not a bill for the State of Pennsylvania, but a bill for the relief of certain citizens in certain counties of Pennsylvania. It is a bill which is local in its character; it is special legislation. For that reason, among others, Mr. Chairman, I am unable to support the bill. It provides not only for the relief of people whose property has been taken, and for the destruction of property by the Union armies, but by the Confederate armies as well; and so far as I know this is the first attempt to secure compensation for damages to property by the Confederate armies.

I represent a district, Mr. Chairman, which possibly suffered more as the result of the war than any other district in the United States. It was a border district, lying upon the Potomac for a hundred miles. It was the camping and tramping ground of one army or the other, and sometimes of both, during the whole war.

Many of the people suffered the loss of everything that they had. Their personal property was driven off and consumed for the support of the Union Army, and much of their real property destroyed by fire or otherwise.

I introduced a bill here recently to pay the loyal citizens of Loudoun County for the destruction of their property by the Union Army during the war. The bill has been twice reported from Committees on War Claims, once in the Fifty-first Congress and again in the Fifty-third Congress.

If there was ever a meritorious case, deserving of equitable and favorable consideration, the one set forth in that bill and in the report upon it is as meritorious as any other. The facts in that case seem to be about as follows:

In 1864 General Sheridan issued an order, one paragraph of which I will read, commanding the Union Army—

> To clear the country of these parties that are bringing destruction upon the innocent as well as their guilty supporters by their cowardly acts, you will consume and destroy all forage and subsistence, burn all barns and mills and their contents, and drive off all stock in the region, the boundaries of which are above described. This order must be literally executed, bearing in mind, however, that no dwellings are to be burned and that no personal violence be offered the citizens.

A more sweeping order never emanated from a commander. How different was that order from the order issued by General Lee, the great commander of the Confederate troops, when he invaded the State of Pennsylvania.

The names of the loyal citizens of Loudoun County are here given in the report I hold in my hand. Almost without exception, they were of the Society of Friends and of Quaker descent. They were loyal to the Federal Government during the whole war. After the war was over they sent their memorial to Congress, and were paid for the stock which was driven off, but they have never been paid for their property which was destroyed in the wholesale and unreasonable manner directed by the order of General Sheridan. These claims are supported by evidence taken before officers of the Federal Army. Proof has been taken in every case and the amount ascertained.

I ask, do the citizens of Pennsylvania stand upon any higher equitable ground than the loyal citizens of Loudoun County?

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrogate him?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. I want to say to the gentleman that his district has been sending these claims to the Court of Claims, and they have been adjudicated and sent to Congress, and this district has received as much attention in Congress as any district in the United States, and thousands of dollars of these claims from that district have been paid.

Mr. RIXEY. I will say to my friend that if he will report a general bill, allowing these people to present their claims to the Court of Claims and stand upon their legal rights, it is all that I ask and all that these people ask.

The report of the committee in the Fifty-third Congress says this in regard to the Loudoun County claim:

> The Confederate States authorities had no military occupation of the county of Loudoun—it was under protective surveillance of the Federal Government. There was no "military necessity" for the issuing and carrying into such vigorous effect as was displayed of such an order for the wholesale running off and destruction of the private property of loyal citizens, in order to prevent the chances—then more or less remote—of their being occasionally robbed by "lawless bands who from time to time depredated upon small parties on the line of the army communications, on safeguards left at houses, and on small parties of our troops," and whose "real object," as further stated in the order, was not war, but "plunder and highway robbery."
>
> It would seem that the condition of affairs in Loudoun County at the time, as set forth in the order, could well have been obviated by the capture of these "lawless bands," and of those who harbored and encouraged them.
>
> As has been stated, the order was carried vigorously into effect and the whole loyal county of Loudoun was wrapped in the blaze and shrouded in the smoke of burning barns and their valuable contents. As it transpired it appears to have been in vain, and effected no actual benefit to the Union cause or damage to the Confederate cause, while it stripped and impoverished over 200 loyal families, mostly belonging to the "Society of Friends," depriving them of the means of subsistence. It wrought wholesale destruction and ruin, from which most of these loyal and devoted adherents to the Union cause have not to this day recovered.

Now, it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there ever was a claim that would appeal to the equitable consideration of this House or the Committee on Claims, it is the case of loyal citizens of Loudoun County. Why make a distinction between those people and the people of Pennsylvania? The people of Pennsylvania were not stripped as the people of Virginia. Their barns and their houses were not destroyed by fire; and it does seem to me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to concede to the balance of the country the same rule of equity he asks for the State of Pennsylvania. So far as Virginia is concerned, I do not ask for compensation for damage by the Confederate troops, but I do insist that those citizens who can prove their loyalty to the Federal Government during the war should be paid for the destruction of their property by the Federal troops, and placed upon the same footing as loyal citizens residing in other sections of the country.

Mr. LAMB. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RIXEY. Certainly.

Mr. LAMB. When the claims of these loyal people are presented here, will you not vote to refer them to the Court of Claims for decision?

Mr. RIXEY. The Loudoun County claims have been referred to the Committee on War Claims, which has not reported.

Mr. LAMB. Do you not want them referred to the Court of Claims?

Mr. RIXEY. I do.

Mr. LAMB. If that be so, why not let the loyal citizens of Pennsylvania have the same rights that you ask for the loyal citizens of Loudoun County?

Mr. RIXEY. I am willing that they shall have the same rights that I ask for the loyal citizens of London County; but I want the same rights for the loyal citizens of Loudoun County that is now demanded and sought for the loyal citizens of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LAMB. Certainly; and you will get them.

Mr. RIXEY. I am not going to vote now, and I can not say that I would vote to pay the citizens of Pennsylvania for the destruction of their property by the Confederate troops, because I know of no warrant or authority for any such payment.

Mr. MAHON. We are not asking for payment, we are asking to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. RIXEY. But I am willing to vote for a general law to refer all claims for the destruction of property by the Union Army to the Court of Claims, where the parties will be required to prove their loyalty and the amount of property destroyed; but it ought to be a general bill. I can conceive of no equity in passing a bill limited to four or five counties in Pennsylvania. It is class legislation of the worst kind, and is as objectionable as it can possibly be. I favor a bill to pay the citizens of Loudoun County and the citizens of every other county in the United States whose property was destroyed under like conditions.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I can say all I desire to say in respect to this bill in a very few words. My colleague, who opened the discussion, has very exhaustively gone over the subject and leaves little to be said by me. Ever since the termination of the civil war the State of Pennsylvania, in the interest of certain of her citizens, has conceived that she has valid claims against the Government of the United States. In every Congress until the Fifty-fourth Congress, bills have been introduced asking for an appropriation from Congress for the payment of these claims.

In the Fifty-fourth Congress for a bill of that character was substituted a bill referring the claim to the Court of Claims. That bill was subjected to very earnest scrutiny upon the part of gentlemen who favor economy in the House and was severely and rigidly pruned so as to get a bill if possible that would carry with it no implication of an assumption on the part of the United States of a liability. That bill is the bill now before the House. It provides for the presentation of certain facts to the Court of Claims and calls for a judgment of the Court of Claims upon a legal proposition. When the Court of Claims shall have passed upon the facts and the law, then an appeal lies to the Supreme Court of the United States. In other words, all that is asked here is that the State of Pennsylvania, conceiving that she has a legal claim against the Government, shall have an opportunity to have that claim passed upon by the only tribunal capable of rendering a final judgment.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. I understand this is not a claim of the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. DALZELL. I say in the interest of certain of her citizens.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. Would there be any objection to an amendment making it apply to all such claims?

Mr. DALZELL. The questions of fact in regard to the different claims are entirely different. These claims stand on no other basis than those that the gentleman has spoken of, the claims in Loudoun County. They are entitled to the same treatment that we ask for Pennsylvania here, and because the gentleman has not yet procured from the Committee on War Claims a report on his bill is no reason why he should refuse to support a bill the principle of which he admits to be correct.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. Will you permit an amendment, then, bringing in the loyal citizens of Loudoun County?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think such an amendment could be put on this bill. I think this bill would have to be entirely redrafted before that could be done. The loyal citizens of Loudoun County are entitled to precisely the same relief that the citizens of Pennsylvania are entitled to, and I have no doubt the gentleman will find that this House will deal with both classes of claims on the same basis.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does not this bill establish an absolutely new precedent on the part of the Government as to the payment for destroyed property? I would like to ask the gentleman if the Government has ever heretofore paid for any property destroyed by the Army?

Mr. DALZELL. I will say that I am not willing to express any opinion as to the legal rights of the State of Pennsylvania. I was just coming to the point of saying that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] spent over an hour to-day discussing the question whether or not the Government is liable. That is not the question involved in this case at all. I do not know whether the Government of the United States is liable to the State of Pennsylvania under the facts set out in this claim. It is to ascertain whether it is or not that this bill is brought here. If the State of Pennsylvania was satisfied to stand by the opinion of the House upon the legal question, she would not be asking that you allow her to go to the Court of Claims. All she asks is that the tribunal of last resort, that which settles every question of importance in this country, shall pass upon this question.

There is either a liability or there is no liability. If there is no liability, no harm can come from the passage of this bill. On the contrary, great good will come from the passage of this bill, because the decision of the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court will forever set at rest all claims of this character and relieve this and all future Congresses from their discussion and consideration. If, on the other hand, there be a liability, then I care not how many million dollars be involved. I care not whether this claim be a precedent for a thousand other claims; the United States can not afford, nor can we as her trustees afford, to refuse to pay any amount to a State or to any set of men that which is legally due them.

Now, I said I would occupy but very little time. This is a claim or it is no claim. If it is no claim, no harm can come from the passage of this bill. If there is a legal claim, it ought to be paid, and Congress ought to provide the means for ascertaining whether it is legal or not.

All that we ask is fair play, a right to ascertain by legal methods whether we have a claim, and for that reason the bill ought to pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, there is a bill before the Committee on Ways and Means, brought there in the interest of people who claim to have used alcohol in the arts, under an amendment to the tariff laws of 1895. That provision in the tariff law was placed there by the Senate, providing that when the Secretary of the Treasury should prescribe rules and regulations for the proper protection of the Treasury—I am not giving the exact language, but the idea—that then persons using alcohol in manufacturing should have a rebate of the tax which they had paid.

When that amendment was proposed in the Senate, the question was raised as to whether such rules and regulations could be made that would properly protect the Treasury of the United States, and it was also stated, what every man knows who had experience in the House prior to that time, that the Committee on Ways and Means and the committee in the Senate——

Mr. MAHON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is not discussing the bill before the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I am discussing the bill, as the gentleman will find out before I get through, if he will possess his soul in patience.

Mr. MAHON. I have no objection to the gentleman discussing this bill. I understand the gentleman's motive—it is to kill time.

Mr. PAYNE. I am discussing this bill. It was stated that both committees had endeavored to find out some way by which alcohol might be used free in the arts, because everyone believed it was just to the manufacturers that it should be so, if it could be done with safety. The advocates of the amendment said in the Senate that if the Secretary of the Treasury found it was impossible to prescribe proper rules and regulations under which this could be carried on without fraud being perpetrated on the revenue, then these people would have no claim for rebate of the tax, and on that assumption, with that promise, the Senate concurred in the amendment. You remember, gentlemen, how the amendment was finally concurred in by the House and became a part of the law.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. We are not in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; we are in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and there is a particular bill before the House. I believe in fair play. I understand the motive of the gentleman from New York, and I simply say this to him, and I say it with all frankness——

Mr. PAYNE. I am speaking in good faith, and the gentleman will recognize the point I am making.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; the Puerto Rican bill has nothing to do with this bill [laughter]—I mean the bill with reference to alcohol. [Renewed laughter.] I want fair play in this bill. If the gentleman wants to kill it——

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York wants to kill the bill by fair argument, and he proposes to do it.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we will get up a contest and throw him out. [Great laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. I want to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been in the House long enough to demand fair play and to know when he gets it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will please confine his remarks to the matter pending before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. "The gentleman from New York" has done so, and proposes to do so; he will not violate the rule.

As I have said, this provision became a law. Then the Secretary of the Treasury endeavored to prescribe rules and regulations; and finally he published in the newspapers the correspondence between himself and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the result of which was that he could prescribe no effective rules and regulations, unless he would put a man in charge of every factory to look after this business and see that there was no fraud upon the Treasury. To do this would have cost $2,000,000, for which there was no appropriation; and therefore he could not put the law into operation. Notwithstanding this, an action was brought which was finally carried to the United States Supreme Court. The court declared that those men had no right under that law to recover a farthing from the Treasury of the United States.

Now, my friend from Pennsylvania says, Let this case go to the Supreme Court of the United States, let it be decided there, and that will be an end of the matter. How can he promise that? Why, sir, the gentleman may some day depart from these halls, but the State of Pennsylvania will "go on forever," and will be represented here. If the Supreme Court should decide in this case that there is no liability on the part of the Government, how can the gentleman say that some future Representative from the Gettysburg district of Pennsylvania will not appear here presenting these claims again?

Such things are being done now. We have parties knocking at the doors of this Congress in behalf of free alcohol in the arts. They want us to pass a bill to give them what the Supreme Court said they never had a right to—free alcohol in the arts. They come here asking for only three or four or six million dollars, just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has come in here with a bill of limited amount; but behind them are claims for millions of dollars; and they want us to give them what they never possessed.

What is the fact in this case? As I understand, my colleague has read a decision of the Supreme Court which seems to be on all fours with this proposition and dead against the proposition of Pennsylvania, holding that these claims have no status here. And still, in the face and eyes of that decision, these parties come here and ask Congress to pass a law to give them a standing before the courts.

Now, the proper way to meet this bill and to kill this proposition is to vote it down every time it is presented anywhere in a legislative assembly or anywhere else, not to bother the Court of Claims or any other court by requiring it to decide a proposition of law that has already been decided.

This claim should go no further.

Now, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania realizes that I have been talking to the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that it be reported back with a recommendation to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that the bill has not yet been read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. MAHON. I ask unanimous consent that the reading by paragraphs be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] moves that the bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House——

Several MEMBERS. Let us take the question directly.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MAHON, there were—ayes 26, noes 53.

Mr. MAHON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN proceeded to count the Committee of the Whole.

Pending the count,

Mr. MAHON said: Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make a dilatory motion. I desire to make a statement. A good many of the friends of the bill are absent to-day, it being toward the end of the week, and if the committee will consent that we take a vote when we meet on the next day for the consideration of bills of this character, I will not insist on my point of no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. MAHON. That when we get onto this Calendar again we shall take a vote on the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the members who have heard this discussion ought to vote on it. I can not consent to the gentleman's proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. MAHON. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to report the bill with a favorable recommendation is negatived.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the bill be reported back with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

Mr. MAHON. I hope the House will vote that motion down, and will extend to me that courtesy at least.

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. A majority of the Committee of the Whole having refused to report the bill back with a favorable recommendation, where does that leave the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It leaves the bill on the Calendar, in its place.

Mr. CANNON. And it can be called up two weeks from to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. It can.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] ought, at least, to consent that the bill be disposed of. Something ought to be done.

Mr. PAYNE. My motion was that it be reported back with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that the bill be reported back with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If this bill is not reported back and not laid on the table, then it can be called up here at the next Friday that is set apart for private business reported from this committee and the time of the committee consumed in its consideration, and thereby other claims on the Private Calendar delayed. Will that be the situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIXEY. Would it be in order to move that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would be in order, but the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] would first have to be disposed of. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that the bill be reported back with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE, the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MAHON demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 27.

Mr. MAHON. No quorum. I call for a quorum on that. If you want to get your bills through, you ought to have a quorum here.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to warn the gentleman that if he insists on that, I shall get up a contest in his district and have him thrown out of the next House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman and I made up our little fight the other day, and I thought he had forgotten all about it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the committee) announced 113 members, a quorum of the Committee of the Whole, present.

Accordingly, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 2356) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Tennessee can not do that.

Mr. SIMS. I have the permission of the committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That does not make any difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will read the next bill on the Calendar.

GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 159) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of George W. Lawrence for further compensation for the construction of the United States monitor Wassuc, under his contract with the Navy Department of June 2, 1863, may be submitted by his personal representatives within six months after the passage of this act to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of said court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same: Provided, however, That the investigation of said claim shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for the construction of the ironclad monitor Wassuc under said contract in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work: Provided, further, That such changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required were occasioned by the Government of the United States; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work beginning February 3, 1864, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contractor and the Government for specific alterations in advance of such alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: Provided, That such alterations, when made, complied with the specifications of the same as furnished by the Government aforesaid: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractor by the Government over and above the original contract price for building said vessel shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That if any such changes caused less work and expense to the contractor than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding deduction shall be made from the contract price and the amount thereof shall be deducted from any allowance which may be made by said court to said claimant.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. There is a long report upon it. There has been a controversy between this man Lawrence, of Portland, Me., and the Navy Department as to the sum, as I understand, of about $17,000, and they have never been able to adjust their differences. This bill simply refers the matter to the Court of Claims to ascertain whether the estate of Lawrence owes the Government anything or whether the Government owes the estate of George W. Lawrence.

The bill has been reported by the committee some eight or nine times, recommending a direct payment. It has been reported favorably and passed by the Senate, to make a direct payment. I think it has passed the Senate several times; but it has been the policy of the Committee on War Claims during the last Congress, and especially during this Congress, to refer all these claims to the Court of Claims and let them ascertain where the trouble is. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CANNON. This bill refers this claim to the Court of Claims. I should have no objection to a bare reference to the Court of Claims; but, as I understand, this bill it is to refer the matter to the Court of Claims under instructions. For instance, I find in the bill the following:

Provided, however, That the investigation shall be made upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by the contractor for the construction of the ironclad monitor Wassuc under said contract in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required and delays in the prosecution of the work.

I should see no great harm in referring the bill, but I want to glance over these provisos.

Mr. MAHON. I will call the gentleman's attention to the last clause.

Mr. GROSVENOR. These are limitations. It does not allow the court to go out into general questions. I think the gentleman from Illinois will find that it is a pretty well limited bill.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if there has ever been a settlement and a receipt in full by the claimant?

Mr. MAHON. I think not. The report would show that. The passage of this bill is recommended by the Chief Engineer of the Navy.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that the report ought to be read.

Mr. MAHON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 159) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

On the 9th of June, 1863, George W. Lawrence, of Portland, Me., accepted the offer of a contract for the construction of a light-draft monitor, and thereupon a written agreement was entered into between him and John Lenthall, Chief of the Bureau of Construction of the Navy Department. By its terms he agreed to build within eight months from the 2d of June, 1863, one ironclad steam battery of iron and wood combined, for a consideration which was to be increased $4,500 for every month of earlier delivery, and was to be similarly decreased for every month of his delay.

By reason of delays for which he was not responsible, the vessel was not delivered until October 4, 1865. During this whole period prices of labor and material were continually advancing, and almost all the labor and material entering into the construction of this vessel called the Wassuc cost the contractor more than it would have done, owing entirely to the delays caused by the Government by making unexpected changes and by unreasonably holding back the essential plans and drawings and suspending the entire work for three months on account of the faulty construction. The present bill under numerous restrictions confers jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine this claim.

Your committee are of the opinion that the facts set forth in House Report No. 97, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, made by this committee, are correctly stated, and therefore adopt the same as their report and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Let the Clerk continue the reading. The important part is yet to follow.

The Clerk read as follows:

[House Report No. 97, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3717) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

Your committee are of the opinion that the facts set forth in Senate Report No. 372, hereto attached and made a part of this report, are correctly stated, and therefore adopt the same as their report and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 372, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2324) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

Your committee adopt the following report of the House Committee on War Claims (No. 1346, Fifty-first Congress, first session) as a part of this report, and recommend the passage of the bill:

[House Report No. 1346, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1566) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of George W. Lawrence, report as follows:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House report from the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, No. 452, a copy of which is hereto appended for information. Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Your committee find that this bill has been favorably reported by seven Committees on War Claims on the part of the House and three of a like committee on the part of the Senate within the past twenty years; that the bill has passed the House three times, passed the Senate three times; and we adopt, in the main, the report made by the Senate and House Committees on War Claims in the Forty-ninth and Fiftieth Congresses, and Senate committee of the Fiftieth Congress, which is as follows:

"In the winter and spring of 1863 the Navy Department prepared plans and drawings for several light-draft steam ironclad monitors, with specifications showing the dimensions, kind, and thickness of the plating, and submitted the same to various contractors for proposals for construction.

"The time required in the construction was a material element in the contract, and none were made for a period longer than eight months. Some of the contracts were limited to six months. So material was the matter of time considered that in the contracts made for six months the contractors were to receive $395,080, while those whose contracts extended to eight months for completion were only to receive $386,000, or at the rate of $4,500 per month less; but there was a provision in all contracts then made that if the vessels were completed in less time than provided in the contract the contractor was to receive an additional pay of $4,500 per month, and if the completion was delayed beyond the period named the Government was to deduct from the contract price at the same rate; that is, $4,500 per month. McKay & Aldus were contractors for the building of the light-draft monitor Squando, to be completed in six months, the Department first satisfying itself of their facilities for doing the work in that time.

"Donald McKay was contractor, and built the light-draft monitor Nausett, also the iron double-ender Ashuelot. The Squando and Nausett were identical in the original plans, and in the changes and alterations thereon, with the Etlah and Shiloh, built in St. Louis.

"Having accepted the undertaking to build these vessels, the several parties named made their arrangements accordingly, having the yards, machinery, etc., necessary therefor, and entered into contracts for the necessary materials, based upon the contracts with the Government, and commenced the work on the several vessels named. About this time, Chief Engineer of the Navy Stimers having returned from Charleston, where he had been sent to make observations as to the conduct of Ericsson's monitors in battle, a consultation was had at the Navy Department, in which (quoting from Stimer's evidence)—

"'The matter was discussed as to whether we had better build our vessels in strict accordance with the letter of the contracts which we were giving out, without any change whatever, or had better take advantage of every such fight and make improvements as we went along, although we fully appreciated that it would delay their completion and add to their cost. Assistant Secretary Fox made the remark that he thought following this course would probably entail an extra cost of a million of dollars for each battle where the monitors were engaged.

"'Well, it was decided that that course should be followed. The contracts for the light-draft monitors, of which the Etlah was one, had already been drawn, specifications, general drawings, etc., of the original plans, but we went immediately to work to make changes on them in accordance with what I have already explained as the policy to be pursued. You will understand, therefore, why it was that I should send constant instruction to Mr. McCord directing him to make his vessel different from what he had contracted to do; why I sent him drawings that differed from those specified in the contract. You will find, too, that these might be very material, as they certainly were. The acts, therefore, which I performed, which affected Mr. McCord and affect this case, were to direct him to make a different vessel from the one he contracted to do.'

"Acting upon this theory, the Department commenced forwarding to the contractors orders for changes and drawings before even the keel was laid, and those changes, which in the aggregate affected all parts of the vessel, making in the end almost entirely different vessels, were continued, and the drawings furnished therefor for nearly a year and a half after the time specified in the contract for their completion had elapsed, and from the 23d of June, 1864, for about the period of three months, work was suspended altogether upon these vessels, by the orders of the Navy Department, which had then in contemplation some general changes in their construction which required time to perfect. All of this time, however, the contractors were under heavy expenses for the maintenance of the yards and men, whom they dared not discharge for fear of inability to supply their places, and not knowing on what day their services would be required.

"In addition to all this, the prices of labor and materials required for the work, and for which the contractors had made provision during the time of the contracts, rapidly advanced, so that, as found by the Committee on War Claims of the first session of the Forty-third Congress, iron that at the date of the contracts was worth $65 per ton advanced during the prolonged time to $220 per ton, and labor from $2.50 per day to $4 per day.

"This committee have not, however, considered it necessary to investigate the details as to amounts or percentage of such increase of prices, but are convinced that the cost of the work was greatly enhanced by reason of the delay caused by the course adopted by the Government in these changes and alterations from the original plans.

"Chief Engineer Stimers, in his evidence in McCord's case, states the case as understood by him and presumably by the Department, which had no authority to adjust claims for damages, as follows:

"'Before expressing an opinion on the matter as an expert, I must explain that the principles upon which the contractors of this and the contractors of similar vessels were to be paid were settled upon before I left the office, and I have always understood that these principles were adhered to, and they were as follows: That we should pay for the contract work by making the contract payments, or the payments provided for in the contract; that we should pay for alterations and changes a proper sum as might be agreed upon between the Government and the contractors at current rates. Now, that being the case, I consider that the Government is still indebted to the contractors of the Etlah, because, although the original contract work has been paid for as originally agreed upon, and the extra work may have been paid for per se, the fact of calling upon the contractor to make the changes on his vessel, and his compliance with those demands, delayed him in the execution of the original contract work.

"'This delay compelled him to pay the increased rates for labor and material which obtained at the time when the work was actually performed; and although the contractor took the risk of a rise in prices when he signed his contract, it was only for a risk during the period of his contract, or the period he would have required to perform the work if the Government had not delayed him by their direct interference; now, whatever increase there was in the cost of the original work contemplated by the contract, due to the delay caused by the Government, that increase is now due, as there has been no pretense on the part of the officers of the Government to have paid it. If you will determine the increased cost of material and labor of the original contract work during the extent of time when the contract was delayed by an interference of the Government to execute it, you will have, in my judgment, the indebtedness of the Government. There may be very large claims on account of extra work of which I know nothing.'

"There seems to be no question that but for the interference of the Government these vessels would have been completed within the time specified in the contract; that these contractors had the means and the ability to do so, and that the heavy losses sustained by reason of the interference of the Government could not have been prevented by any reasonable prudence or foresight on their part, as the labor could not be anticipated, nor could they possibly know from the frequent changes being made, the kind, quantity, or, in the case of the iron plating, the thickness or size of the plates to be used. The question of the duty of the Government to relieve the contractors for the building of these vessels has been repeatedly recognized by Congress. (Slone, Report No. 17, Thirty-ninth Congress, second session; Senator Nye, Report No. 45, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session; Senator Drake, Report No. 163, Forty-first Congress, second session; Senator Nye, Report No. 37, Forty-second Congress, second session; A. B. Smith, Report No. 36, Forty-second Congress, third session; Senator Cragin, Report No. 124, Forty-third Congress, first session; Senator HOAR, Report No. 14, Forty seventh Congress, first session.)

"Congresses reported favorably on those bills, recommending the claimants such relief as they desired. Several of them have passed both Houses of Congress.

"In 1865 a board was appointed under a resolution of the Senate, called the Selfridge board, which examined and reported upon numerous vessels. Their awards were not paid, but their discussion led to the passage of the act of March 2, 1867, directing the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of iron, etc., and to ascertain the additional cost incurred by them by reason of any changes and alterations there, with the proviso:

"'But no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered, unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work made necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor.' (14 Stat., 424.)

"The Secretary of the Navy delegated the matter thus submitted to a board, of which J. B. Marchand was chairman, and called the Marchand board. This board, perhaps for economic reasons, decided to confine their examination to the question of extra work, holding that the question of increased cost by reason of the delays caused by the Government was one sounding in damages, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the Department, and not included within the act.

"Claims were filed by these contractors, but reported as 'not considered within the province of the board' (report contained in volume 10, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1504), nor were the claimants permitted to appear before the board on behalf of their claims.

"In the Forty-first Congress, second session, a joint resolution was passed by Congress referring these cases to the Court of Claims, but failed to receive the sanction of the President on the ground that the bill as passed omitted the proviso contained in the act of March 2, 1867, and above quoted, since which time various reports have been made, and favorable action had by one branch of Congress or the other, but no general bill for the relief of these and other contractors has become a law.

"A majority of the contractors for the building of this class of vessels have, from time to time, received relief through Congress, but these claimants have thus far received no relief. Among those who have been relieved are George C. Bestor, contractor of the Shiloh, by act of Congress (17 Stat., 733, 1873) appropriating $125,000; Miles Greenwood (17 Stat., 761); S. S. Marchen, jr. (18 Stat., 635); Donohue, Ryan & Co. (15 Stat., 353); C. W. Whitney (17 Stat., 671). Under act of 25th June, 1864 (13 Stat., 409), Ericsson was allowed $1,070,438.93 for such increased cost.

"These contractors also claim that they have not received full pay for the extras furnished by them in the construction of the said vessels, aside from the main question of increased cost by reason of the delays. The facts concerning this branch of the case are as follows:

"The frequent changes and alterations ordered by the Department on these vessels, and which, under the contracts, the Government had a right to demand by paying the extra expense caused thereby, occasioned a large amount of extra work, some of which was specifically agreed upon, and part of which was done under the orders of the Department without any agreed price. This extra work was recognized as being within the jurisdiction of the Department to pay, and the Department did pay a large portion of said extras, but did not pay all that the parties were entitled to receive. The accounts were made up in the Department without consultation with the claimants, and payments made from time to time until the last and final payment, when a voucher containing the words, 'For work done which is extra to the contract, being the full and final payment on all extras, and in full for all claims and demands for that work,' was presented, and which was required to be and was receipted by the claimant upon receiving the amounts specified in the vouchers.

"This committee are satisfied, from the evidence before it, that the account for such extra work was not correctly adjusted; and inasmuch as the said receipts are prima facie evidence not only of payment in full for such extras per se, but may be construed to cover the question of the extra expense caused by the delays as well, therefore deem it just to all parties that the entire matter should be considered by a legal tribunal, with competent jurisdiction to hear and determine the question involved, and in considering such receipt to treat the same as prima facie evidence, but susceptible of explanation by proofs, if any they have, showing the real indebtedness of the Government to them for such increased cost of such vessels beyond the contract price, and beyond the accounts paid by reason of such changes and alterations as evidently contemplated in the previous acts of Congress providing for an adjustment thereof, upon the principle that when the Government has by its acts caused its citizens performing labor for it to incur additional expense in its performance, such additional cost should be borne by the Government."

In addition to that report your committee would further observe:

The claimants have been assiduous for twenty-three years in their efforts to obtain redress for their alleged grievances. This great lapse of time has been due not to any want of energy on their part, nor to any rejection by either House of Congress, but solely to the delay incident to the procurement of private legislation. They have never had a hearing, in the ordinary sense of the word, before any tribunal, and the present bill for their relief is to permit them to appear before the judicial branch of the Government, where their witnesses may be cross-examined by the attorneys for the United States, the credibility of their witnesses tested, and the evidence relied upon by the defense be subjected to similar tests. There they will have an opportunity to explain their failure or refusal to appear before the Selfridge board, and your committee think the Court of Claims can be relied upon to give due weight to this failure or refusal; and if it should appear that the board convened too soon after the Department expressed its satisfaction with the vessels (which was a sine qua non to consideration of the claims), to permit proper preparation of the claims the failure to appear before the board may disappear from the case.

The Marchand board, which sat in 1867, was directed by the Secretary of the Navy to inquire into and report facts, and an examination of the act of March, 1867, shows a clear intention not to submit the claims to him in such a way as to make his conclusions binding either upon the Government or the claimants.

No one has ever attempted to recover in the Court of Claims on the conclusions of the board, and it has never been pretended on either side that its decisions had the force either of judgments or awards. Congress has not considered itself under moral obligations to pay the sums found due, nor has it refrained from paying claims rejected by it.

The nature of its work may really be determined when we find by its report that during a session of four months and twenty days it passed upon the separate accounts of 40 contractors, embracing 55 different vessels, the construction of most of which had extended over the whole period during which the rise of prices changed from day to day, and very naturally the contractors have always been dissatisfied with results reached by such a forum and in so hasty a manner.

The facts which Congress desired to obtain the board did not report. The act required it (14 Stat. L., 424) "to report to Congress a tabular statement of each case which shall contain * * * the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price."

The board did not enter upon so elaborate and extended an inquiry, but substituted in its tabular report a column (No. 4) entitled, "Whole increased cost of the work over and above the contract price as claimed by the contractors."

The next statement required by the act was: "And the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government aforesaid." Not having ascertained the whole increased cost of the work over the contract price, it was of course unable to state "the amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as aforesaid," and it substituted therefor a column (No. 5) entitled, "Amount of such increased cost caused by the delay and action of the Government as determined by the board to be due."

These two requirements of the statute were neglected by the board and other findings substituted.

The act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. L., 424), required the Secretary of the Navy to ascertain "the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work occasioned by the Government which were not provided for in the original contract."

The contract for the Wasuc contained the same provisions for alterations and additions as those considered by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Choteau vs. The United States (95 U. S., 61), and the Marchand board might well find that nothing was due the claimants under the submission of the statute, for the changes and alterations complained of were undoubtedly provided for by the original contract. The inquiry which this bill proposes differs from the examination of the Marchand board in that respect; it recognizes that the alterations were provided for, and that claimants, like Choteau, could not recover for the enhanced cost resulting from such alterations.

The issue which the bill proposes to submit has never been examined by any tribunal. The Supreme Court in the Choteau case did not and could not pass upon any equities in the case. Equitable jurisdiction was not conferred upon the Court of Claims until March 3, 1887 (sec. 1, 24 Stat. L., 505). Your committee appends hereto a letter from Chief Engineer B. F. Isherwood, of January 26, 1887, which explains fully the causes of the increased cost to the claimants.

In addition to the safeguards as they now exist in the Court of Claims for the prevention of fraud against the United States, and the detection of misstatements or mistakes, other precautions have been adopted in the bill itself which seem to your committee sufficient to prevent any wrong or injustice being done to the United States.

Your committee are unanimously of the opinion that the claimants should not be concluded by the voucher and final receipt in question unless it should appear in equity that they should be, and that the claimants should have their rights adjudicated upon the merits of their claim.

Wherefore your committee report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of your communication of the 22d instant, asking me to inform you of the causes of the alterations and changes in the plans of the light-draft monitors constructed during the war for the Navy Department, and the causes of the delays in their construction, and whether these delays caused extra expense to the contractors.

In reply I would refer to the report on this subject made by the Hon. B. F. Wade, chairman of the Committee on the Conduct of the War, United States Senate, volume 3. From this report you will find that although I was, as you state in your note above referred to, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department during the war, I had nothing to do whatever with either the designing or the execution of the work for these monitors.

The Navy Department had established what was in effect a bureau for this purpose in New York City, and had placed Mr. Alfan C. Stimers at its head, with a large corps of assistant engineers, draftsmen, etc. The whole work, hulls and machinery, was entirely in his hands. He was absolutely untrammeled, being allowed carte blanche by the Department, and his acts and plans were never submitted to any other person.

The selection of Mr. Stimers by the Navy Department for this duty was most unfortunate. The selection was wholly the act of Mr. G. V. Fox, then the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who had unbounded but misplaced confidence in Mr. Stimers's abilities. In making the appointment Mr. Fox did not consult either of the mechanical bureaus of the Navy Department, nor was Mr. Stimers's plans ever submitted to them. The result, as is well known, was a most disastrous failure, due to the absolute and astonishing incapacity of Mr. Stimers, and to the fact of his selection by Mr. Fox without inquiry of the mechanical bureaus as to Mr. Stimers's qualifications. In a professional matter of which Mr. Fox had no knowledge, such a selection, without careful investigation of Mr. Stimers's abilities, was an act of temerity which in a measure made the Navy Department a party to the cause of failure.

At the commencement, then, Mr. Fox was responsible for a most injudicious selection for a most important position, and Mr. Stimers was responsible for the absurd blunders he committed, and as both represented the Government, the latter was to that extent justly responsible for their acts. Under this system twenty vessels were built, all of which (they were exact duplicates) proved absolute failures, their only value being their worth as old material. The cost to the Government was about $3,000,000, and there was, in my opinion, a considerable loss borne by the contractors chargeable to the action of the Government, and not yet compensated.

The contracts were taken at a round sum for a certain amount of work to be done in a certain time conformably to drawings and specifications to be furnished by Mr. Stimers. The responsibilities of the contractors where limited to the quality of the materials and workmanship, and to the completion of the vessels in the specified time. They were not at all concerned in the final success or failure of the vessels.

From the first the plans were continually changed and important modifications introduced, all in the direction of more expensive work and materials, and requiring longer time for execution. This increased length of time involved greatly increased cost of the work of the contractors, owing to the daily and rapidly increasing rise, at that date, in the cost of materials and labor. The war was then at its height, and the Government was in the market for the whole mechanical resources of the country, which were not able to meet the demand upon them, and, as a result, the price of certain materials and labor used in the construction of ships and machinery rose abnormally high above even the general increase of price. The loss due to this cause was of necessity borne by the contractors, and has never in any of the settlements made been taken into consideration. Had the plans and specifications been delivered to the contractors at the date of the contract, so that they could have then made their purchases of materials, and had there been no changes in these plans and specifications, so that the work could have been prosecuted uninterruptedly to completion without the great delays unavoidable to such changes and alterations, it could have been executed in the contract time, and the contractors would have saved to themselves the rise in the price of materials and labor which took place during the extended time.

There must be here recalled that for the great extension of time in the completion of these contracts the Government alone was responsible by the changes, alterations, and additions it made to the work after the contracts were executed. This extension of time reacted upon the cost of the work as a whole, and though the Government paid a certain sum for additional work, that sum was inadequate to cover the losses of the contractors by the rise in the cost of materials and labor used in the construction of the work done according to the original contract, and which was prolonged in consequence of the alterations and additions.

All that the Government paid for was the price of additional work at current rates, but the work as a whole could only progress together; that which was in accordance with the original contract had to wait until the additions and alterations could be completed, and in the meantime the cost of materials and labor was rising rapidly and enormously. These delays, which no efforts of the contractors could prevent and which were caused exclusively by the action of the Government, were ruinous to the contractors by reason of the continual rise of prices; materials and labor became every day scarcer and scarcer; the shops and plant of the contractors were occupied by the vessels that they could neither abandon nor complete. They could not therefore take other and remunerative work, and they had to keep a full force of workmen, for if they once lost them they could not, at that time, be recovered, so great was the demand.

Some approximation may be furnished of the losses sustained by the contractors from the action of the Government in departing from the original plans and specifications by additions and alterations involving great increase of time, by estimating the cost to the contractors of the original work had it been done in contract time, which would have been the case but for the interference of the Government, and the cost of the same work done in the extended time caused by the action of the Government taking as the basis the average price of materials and labor in the two cases.

The additions and alterations referred to were due to the incapacity of Mr. Stimers to properly design such vessels. Without knowledge of how to proceed, he was constantly vacillating, doing and undoing; completed work was destroyed and other work substituted; time was lost between the notification to the contractors that other plans would be prepared in place of those already furnished and the reception of such plans. In fact, the character of the vessels was essentially changed during their construction from the original programme; great delays were consequently necessarily experienced, and as the price of materials and labor was continually increasing, due to the continually increasing demand for the same caused by the war, the cost of executing the work which was done according to the original contract was much increased at the expense of the contractors.

Respectfully,

B. F. ISHERWOOD,
Chief Engineer, U. S. N.

Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH.

I certify the above is a true copy.
[SEAL.]

WM. H. DAVIS,
Notary Public for New Jersey.

That Congress has in the past comprehended the injustice of permitting these contractors and others similarly situated to bear the immense losses they suffered under the circumstances stated has been made apparent in various proceedings had at different times since the close of the war, sometimes by one House acting separately and independently, sometimes by the joint action of both Houses—notably in the former case the action of the Senate of March 9, 1865, which led to the organization of the Selfridge board, and of the latter by the act of March 2, 1867, which resulted in the organization and report of the Marchand board, to say nothing of the various special acts of Congress and numerous reports submitted from the committees of the respective Houses from time to time. Among the latter reference might be properly made to the following: Report of Senator Nye, Senate Report No. 45, second session Twenty-ninth Congress; Senate Report No. 37, second session Forty-second Congress; Representative Stone's report, No. 17, second session Thirty-ninth Congress.

One of the awards has been paid by joint resolution of March 30, 1867 (15 Stat. L., 353), by which Donahue, Ryan & Secor were paid $179,000 for losses sustained by them in constructing the Comanche. Amount allowed by the board, $179,993.80.

In addition the following special acts have been passed to relieve contractors in similar cases, to wit:

Act of February 18, 1870, to relieve the heirs of George C. Bestor, $125,000. (17 Stat. L., 733.)

Act of June 1, 1872, to pay Charles W. Whitney $50,000. (17 Stat. L., 671.)

Act of June 10, 1872, to pay J. S. Underhill $23,310.75. (17 Stat. L., 691.)

Act of March 2, 1875, to pay Daniel S. Mershon, jr., $46,715.08. (18 Stat. L., 635.)

The contractors for building the Dome of the Capitol were awarded and paid $96,000 for increase in the price of labor and material during its construction. The Government prolonged the time of its completion. (See Senate Report No. 132, first session Thirty-ninth Congress.)

John Ericsson was paid $1,070,498.93 on the Puritan (U. S. Stat. L., June 25, 1864, vol. 13, 409) for increased cost of labor and materials.

Miles Greenwood, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was paid $76,000 for increased cost of labor and material in building the United States vessel Tippecanoe, in 1873.

During the reading of the above,

Mr. CANNON. The Clerk has not concluded the reading of the report.

Mr. MAHON. The report is finished. The appendix is a short one and has not been read.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman call the appendix?

Mr. MAHON. You called for the reading of the report, and the reading of the report proper is finished. The remainder just shows how many Congresses this bill has been before.

Mr. CANNON. I have been following the reading of the report, and if the Clerk is tired I will read it.

Mr. MAHON. Let it be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the remainder of the report.

Mr. MAHON. I understand the gentleman from Illinois wants some time.

Mr. CANNON. After you.

Mr. MAHON. I have the floor, and I will yield any time the gentleman wants.

Mr. CANNON. I am listening. The gentleman is familiar with the bill, and I would be very glad to hear from him about it.

Mr. MAHON. This follows the rest of the bills of this character. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. It came to the committee and was carefully considered by it. A similar bill passed the Senate and the House on two occasions, but failed to become a law. So far as I am individually concerned, I think the committee did right in reporting the bill.

A great many of these boat bills have been considered and the money has been paid and they have been wiped out. There are a few more of them remaining. This bill is to send the claim to the Court of Claims. It is for this committee to say whether they will pass it or not. I think we ought to get rid of these controversies. This question has been in Congress for twenty years and has passed both Houses, but has failed to reach the President. Now, the committee has adopted a rule to send these claims to the Court of Claims and let them ascertain the facts. The Navy Department is tired of the case, and the Chief Engineer recommends that this matter be taken up and finally settled. I reserve the balance of my time and yield as much time to the gentleman from Illinois as he wants.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that this matter is a generation old.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; when any claim is filed for something owing by the Government they all get old.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, that is right; they all get old; and under our power to legislate we might pay and pay and reject and send to the courts, and the courts might reject, and the claimant could still come, like hope, springing eternal.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will state that of all the claims that have gone to the courts they have knocked out about 90 per cent of them, and they never came back here, because it is a bar that anybody can set up against a claim. But there are a great many bills introduced here. I want to say that one member of the House offered 110 bills, and my committee found that 42 of them had been paid, and all such bills are laid aside. They will never come up before this committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This bill has been reported to the House seven times. There seems not to have been any kind of laches on the part of the claimant. It has been recognized by Congress as long as eighteen years ago, and constantly ever since.

Mr. CANNON. I want to call attention to page 4 of the report:

In 1865 a board was appointed under a resolution of the Senate—

Not an act of Congress, but a resolution of the Senate—called the Selfridge board, which examined and reported upon numerous vessels. Their awards were not paid.

Certainly not; because one coordinate branch of Congress has no power to legislate, and it did not bind the House or either the Senate and the House.

Their awards were not paid, but their discussion led to the passage of the act of March 2, 1867—

And I crave the attention of the committee and the gentleman to it—directing the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of iron, etc., and to ascertain the additional cost incurred by them by reason of any changes and alterations there, with the proviso:

"But no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered, unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work made necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor." (14 Stat., 424.)

That legislation was had. This party, before the board appointed by virtue of the legislation of 1867, had his day and took nothing in his day. Others did take something, but he took nothing under that legislation; and because he took nothing Congress supposed it was disposing of it; but he has all the while acknowledged that Congress controls the matter, and has introduced bills to get something, but not having taken anything, I have no doubt if the House finally passes the bill and it is approved and he goes to the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims turns him down he would be back the first Congress after the Court of Claims had turned him down knocking at the door of Congress for an absolute payment. For a long time these bills took the form of absolute payment. Lately they have taken the form of being sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I want to say to him that there are a great many bills introduced here by members. They follow their predecessors. But it is a written rule of the committee that where the claim contained in any bill has been turned down by the Court of Claims not to report that claim to the House. I want to say further to the gentleman from Illinois that this matter has been in dispute between the two Houses for a great many years, that it originally involved $17,000 and perhaps settlement may not involve more than $5,000. The Navy Department wants it settled. Now, the gentleman from Illinois will understand that these vessels were all under construction in 1862, and there were vessels under these contracts away up to 1864 and 1865, and changes were made from time to time. Let me read just a moment what the Chief of Engineers of the Navy said about this man, to whom carte blanche had been given to alter and change them:

The Navy Department had established what was in effect a bureau for this purpose in New York City, and had placed Mr. Alfan C. Stimers at its head, with a large corps of assistant engineers, draftsmen, etc. The whole work, hulls and machinery, was entirely in his hands. He was absolutely untrammeled, being allowed carte blanche by the Department, and his acts and plans were never submitted to any other person.

The selection of Mr. Stimers by the Navy Department for this duty was most unfortunate. The selection was wholly the act of Mr. G. V. Fox, then the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who had unbounded but misplaced confidence in Mr. Stimers's abilities. In making the appointment Mr. Fox did not consult either of the mechanical bureaus of the Navy Department, nor was Mr. Stimers's plans ever submitted to them. The result, as is well known, was a most disastrous failure, due to the absolute and astonishing incapacity of Mr. Stimers, and to the fact of his selection by Mr. Fox without inquiry of the mechanical bureaus as to Mr. Stimers's qualifications. In a professional matter of which Mr. Fox had no knowledge, such a selection, without careful investigation of Mr. Stimers's abilities, was an act of temerity which in a measure made the Navy Department a party to the cause of failure.

Now, under this man these men worked for three and a half years to construct this boat, and during that time metal went up from $90 to $250 a ton; labor increased from $2 to $4 or $5 a day. Many contractors were ruined. Now let the court settle it.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask my friend upon that point whether the contract for the construction of this monitor did not expressly provide that the Government should have the right to change the specifications?

Mr. MAHON. In all its contracts in building a vessel and everything else, if a contractor wants to build it, the Government retains the whole barrel of the gun. They reserve the right to change the plans and specifications, and in this case the boat was entirely changed, so that you would not have known her originally.

Mr. CANNON. In pursuance of the original contract?

Mr. MAHON. They did not suppose the Government would hold these people up for four years. No such large increase in the price of iron and labor was anticipated. It was no fault of the contractor that the boat was not finished properly. If the Government has a defense to the claim, they can make it in the Court of Claims. The gentleman knows that the Government will be well defended there.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. Now, I have two points that I want to state to the gentleman: First, this man has had his day in court, if he was entitled to any, under the legislation of 1867, under the Marchand board, and he took nothing by it. But, so far as I have knowledge, if it was between A and B, private citizens, there is nothing in law or morals by which the claimant would be entitled to recover one cent, or could recover one cent.

Mr. MAHON. It is evident that the Government did not keep its contract with the man. The Government has never recognized until within the last ten years that where a party to a contract has failed to keep his part of the contract that the doctrine of estoppel prevails. That defense could be raised; but it is only within the last ten or twelve years that the Government has recognized that as a defense.

Mr. CANNON. There is no allegation here that the Government did not keep its contract.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, there is. The chief engineer says that you sent a man down there who was a failure.

Mr. CANNON. I am talking about the contract. You take good care not to set out the contract in the report.

Mr. MAHON. The contract was that the Government could make the changes.

Mr. CANNON. My friend admits that the contract was that the Government could change the specifications. Of course I have no doubt the contract provided that if there was an increased expense from the changes, that that expense should be paid; but nowhere is there to be found in the contract any stipulation that the Government would pay for the increase in the cost of the materials, or in the price of labor. The Government does not make that kind of a contract.

But I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he fixes the time in the bill. Let me read again from the act of March, 1867:

But no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered, unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work made necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor. (14 Stat., 424.)

Now, the gentleman, on page 2, line 10, does more than this legislation of 1867 contemplates, by providing that—no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work—

That was in the act of 1867 creating the Marchand board. Now the gentleman puts in the bill—beginning February 3, 1864.

So the gentleman fixes the time in his bill, rather than leaving it as a question of fact for the court. If the gentleman desires to proceed, in substance, under the equities set out in the legislation of 1867, why does he fix the time?

Mr. MAHON. The evidence filed with the Navy Department shows that that is the time. I did not draw the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I do not see it stated in the report, and I have followed it quite closely, at what time this contract was to be completed on the part of the claimant.

Mr. HEPBURN. In eight months.

Mr. CANNON. When was it made?

Mr. HEPBURN. On the 9th of June, 1863.

Mr. MAHON. You will find it on the first page of the report. The Government never allowed this man to finish the boat until 1864.

Mr. HEPBURN. October 4, 1865—six months after the close of the war.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; 1865. The claimant would have finished it in six months if he had been allowed to follow the original specifications; but they changed them over and over and over again.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Has any extra amount been paid by the Government to the contractor by reason of the change?

Mr. MAHON. He did not go before the Marchand and Selfridge boards. He claims that $17,000 is due him. I do not know whether the Government owes it to him or not.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to occupy a moment or two on this bill. I think I ought to say something about it, because it is an old acquaintance. It was pending in the first Congress that I was here, nearly twenty years ago, and it is here now.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not correctly stated the claim of the beneficiary in this bill. The gentleman says that the claimant is entitled to compensation for the advance in the price of labor and material. That is not a fair statement. This party is here claiming damages because of the depreciation of the currency of the United States. That is the claim.

Mr. MAHON. I did not see any evidence of that.

Mr. HEPBURN. There was no appreciation of either wages or material as measured by gold during the war; the appreciation was only apparent because of the depreciation of the currency.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN. In a moment.

If the depreciation of the currency is to be recognized as the basis of a claim, see where it will extend. Here were millions of men employed by the Government of the United States. As their first payments were in gold, or its equivalent, they expected and had a right to expect that such payments would continue. But they were afterwards compelled to take a depreciated currency—a currency $2.40 of which were required to purchase a gold dollar. Now, is it the purpose of Congress to reimburse all men who, in their dealings with the Government, suffered in that way?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman think that such a proposition would be favorably considered by the Court of Claims? Would it not be safe to leave the proposition as the gentleman now states it to be determined by the Court of Claims as a legal proposition?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know as to that. There are certain provisions in this bill which make me think that we had better deal with the question here, so as to leave no room for controversy about the matter in the courts. I am entirely unwilling that claims like this, coming here years after the facts are ascertainable, should be recognized by this body.

Mr. MADDOX. I have been informed that these gentlemen have receipted to the Government in full for all their claims against it. Is that true?

Mr. HEPBURN. The report so says; that is, if this is one of the series of claims discussed in this report. I do not know whether it is or not. It is not specifically so stated. All the evidence reported here is in relation to another claim. The gentleman from Pennsylvania assumes that this is one of that series.

But let me call attention to a statement made by the chief engineer who has been referred to:

Under this system—

A system which had been instituted by Mr. Stimers—

Under this system twenty vessels were built, all of which (they were exact duplicates) proved absolute failures, their only value being their worth as old material.

Mr. MAHON. That is an argument in favor of this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing the reading)—

The cost to the Government was about $8,000,000, and there was, in my opinion, a considerable loss borne by the contractors, chargeable to the action of the Government and not yet compensated.

Now, there was a time when this claim could have been adjudicated. The Government made ample provision. It appointed a commissioner, Mr. Marchand, with full jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but with a provision that no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material should be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work made necessary by the delays resulting from the action of the Government.

If there was an advance during that time, Mr. Marchand had absolute jurisdiction. Yet these gentlemen failed to go before him. Why? Because this rise in the price of material and labor did not occur at the proper time. At least, we have tried to infer that that is what deterred them from going before him.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; that is not the reason.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why did they not go?

Mr. MAHON. Because it was a board that had been hastily appointed, consisting of one man, and the boat builders did not all feel that the Navy Department had the right to take that action.

Mr. HEPBURN. But this was an act of Congress authorizing the appointment of one man, who was the agent of the Government, to make the adjustment.

Mr. MAHON. They were afraid he was another Stimers.

Mr. HEPBURN. They were afraid of their tribunal, were they?

Mr. MAHON. We have the statement here that the Government lost about $8,000,000 and that these contractors lost a considerable amount, through no fault of theirs, but through delays and on account of defective plans furnished by the Navy Department.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think it is fair for the gentleman to say that these men were afraid of that tribunal. They could have had the right of appeal to Congress after that adjudication, the same as now. That is not a reason to give, simply that they were afraid he would not do them justice. Some were not afraid; some had their cases adjudicated, but this man did not. Why? Simply because this rise in prices did not occur during the time of delay for which the Government was responsible. I assume and have the right to assume that that was the reason why they failed to appear.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 18.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 2356) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 2356. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the respective sums of money as hereinafter provided, to the respective persons named herein or to their heirs or legal representatives, to wit:

To H. Johnson, $659.86;
To Stephen M. Johnson, $659.86;
To D. J. Franklin, $130.48;
To Josiah Franklin, $156.60;
To Nat Buckley, $261.20;
To John Turl, $313.49;
To Elias Bray, $391.92;
To Dr. G. Johnson, $156.60;
To Harrison Trice, $261.20;
To Jeremiah Crook, sr., $522.41;
To Willis Arnold, $5,213.89;
To Arch McCorkle, $391.92;
To G. L. Ross, $1,306.91;
To S. L. Ross, $1,306.91;
To John M. Hart, $522.41;
To William A. Brummer, $801.69;
To John D. Smith, $261.30;
To A. B. Crook, $261.20;
To Daniel McCollum, $261.20;
To Jeff Jones, $130.48;
To Thomas McGill, $156.61;
To James Ledbetter, $156.61;
To William Ozier, $522.41;
To Elijah Bond, $261.20;
To John L. Cawthon, $522.41;
To William Hall, $522.41;
To Carroll Beaver, $522.41;
To John West, $389.88;

To James Clifford, $261.20;
To O. F. Hendrix, $784.04;
To Frank Cawthon, $313.49;
To James Cawthon, $130.49;
To S. E. Grider, $130.49;
To Silas Grider, $130.49;
To John Robinson, $240.34;
To Hugh McKnight, $200.25;
To John G. Smith, $79.96;
To Caleb McKnight, $200.25;
To James Thomas, $200.25;
To William P. Walker, $120.06;
To A. S. Rogers, $341.55;
To Tyson G. Maness, $561.02;
To William H. Bond, $130.06;
To F. M. Ballard, $240.04;
To Stephen Massengill, $120.06;
To William Swink, $440.80;
To Keton M. Jones, $361.15;
In all, $22,271.26.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I think if I explain this bill it will not be necessary to read the report.

In November, 1862, the Federal forces occupied all of West Tennessee west of the Tennessee River. At Henderson, a station on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, there was a small Federal force. Col. N. N. Cox, now my honored colleague on this floor, led a number of Confederate soldiers from the Tennessee River across to Henderson, made a raid and captured this Federal force, burned a lot of cotton, and burned the depot.

Under an order of General Grant, who was in command of that department at that time, an assessment was made upon the citizens living in the vicinity of Henderson to repay the Government for its losses. First, an appraisement was made of the losses. The Government lost $1,900 worth of cotton, and camp equipage and other property, amounting in all to $5,080. Individual citizens had something over $18,000 worth of cotton destroyed, and the Mobile and Ohio depot was burned. In appraising the value of the property lost they also appraised the value of the depot and of this cotton which belonged to these private individuals. The whole money was collected, amounting to $27,000 and over.

When the facts were made known to General Grant that a collection had been made from these citizens to pay for the private property, he immediately stated that he had no idea of making any such order, and that his order had been misconstrued, his only object and purpose being to collect from the citizens a sufficient amount to reimburse the Government for its losses.

The money was turned over to the provost-marshal-general, and was used for Army purposes. The entire amount was so used. Now, there are forty-eight claimants, or their representatives in this bill, from whom this money was collected. It was not applied to the payment of these individual claims, and we are only asking in this bill a return to the parties, or their heirs, of so much of said funds as was over and above the amount required to reimburse the Government, which amounts to $22,272.26. We are not asking for a cent of interest.

Now, the report is somewhat long, but the proof shows that this was entirely within the Federal lines; that these were good and law-abiding citizens, and I have here General Grant's letter, written in his own hand and signed with his own signature, in which he says that no such purpose was intended by him, and he repudiated the construction of his order placed upon it by his subordinates. A similar bill has been before Congress for about twenty years, and this identical report was made by General Bragg in 1882.

I have a letter here from Secretary Gage, in reply to one which I wrote him, inquiring whether the money had been received into the Treasury. The letter of Secretary Gage is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 20, 1899. You refer therein to the rebel raid on Henderson Station, Tenn., in November, 1862, the damages sustained by the Government and loyal citizens, and the subsequent assessment of $26,751.36 on disloyal citizens to reimburse the Government and loyal citizens for the damages thus sustained. You summarize your inquiries by this statement: "What I want to know, and all I want to know, is, did the Government by its authorized officers receive this money?"

In answer you are informed that collections were made on this assessment, but it can not be found that more than $23,325.15 was in fact collected and accounted for by the military. The money was obviously used in the military operations of the Army, but none of it can be traced into the Treasury.

Respectfully, yours,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now, there are a number of other letters here, including one from General Hillyer, showing that every cent of this money was used for Army purposes, and therefore was virtually paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, as it is getting late, unless some member desires to know more about it, I will ask that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MATHIAS PEDERSEN.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 1992) for the relief of Mathias Pederson. The bill is meritorious, and I ask that it be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 1992. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Let the bill be read first, and then we will see.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Mathias Pederson, late of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, with interest at 6 per cent per annum from November 27, 1863, being the sum unlawfully collected from him on that date by the board of enrollment, namely, $300, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the Army, he not being a citizen of the United States.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

In lines 7, 8, and 9 strike out "with interest at 6 per cent per annum from November 27, 1863."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask that the report be read. It is short.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The report (by Mr. HAUGEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1992) for the relief of Mathias Pedersen, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with an amendment.

A bill similar in its nature has been before Congress for many years; has often been reported favorably in the House and in the Senate, and has passed the House at various times.

The claim is for the repayment of $300, together with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum, amounting in all to $768. The $300 was collected from the claimant by the board of enrollment on November 27, 1863, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the Army, the receipt for which accompanies this report. Evidence is submitted showing the claimant to be a native of Norway; that he came to the United States and located in the State of Wisconsin in the month of June, 1860, when 21 years of age. It is shown also that the claimant was drafted into the service of the United States from the town of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis., on November 12, 1863, and in order to secure his release he was obliged to pay to the board of enrollment the sum of $300.

It is further shown that the claimant was exempt from military service at the time he was drafted and at the time he paid the $300, on the ground that he was then the subject of a foreign government, and that he did not declare his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States until October 17, 1864.

The act of Congress approved February 23, 1867, authorized the Secretary of War to refund from the commutation money the amount paid by any person drafted during the civil war who was not legally liable to draft; but the act applied only to claims received at the War Department prior to its passage. The act is as follows:

[14 Stat. L., page 417.]

Extract from an act for the relief of certain drafted men.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War is authorized and required to refund from the commutation money the amount (not exceeding $300 in any one case) paid by any person drafted during the late war who furnished a substitute or paid commutation money, wherever it shall appear that, under the decisions and rules of the War Department governing at the time, the said person was entitled to discharge from the obligation to render personal service under the draft for which he paid money or furnished a substitute, and to refund, in like manner, in all cases wherein it shall appear that a person so having paid commutation money or furnished a substitute was not legally liable to draft: Provided, That this section shall apply only to claims received at the War Department prior to its passage.

"Approved, February 28, 1867."

Claimant was ignorant of the law and did not file his claim in the War Department until after the passage of the above act. Your committee have considered the facts in the case and are of the opinion that the claim is a just one, and report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment:

In lines 7, 8, and 9 strike out "with interest at 6 per cent per annum from November 27, 1863."

Mr. HAUGEN. I submit the following documents relating to the case:

United States Statutes at Large, page 731, act of March 3, 1863, reads as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all able-bodied male citizens of the United States and persons of foreign birth who shall have declared on oath their intention to become citizens under and in pursuance of the laws thereof between the ages of 20 and 45 years, except as hereinafter excepted, are hereby declared to constitute the national forces and shall be liable to perform military duty in the service of the United States when called out by the President for that purpose."

Sections 4 and 9, page 732, provide: "States to be divided into enrollment districts."

Section 13, page 732: "And it is further enacted, That any person drafted and notified to appear as aforesaid may on or before the day fixed for his appearance furnish an acceptable substitute to take his place in the draft, or he may pay to such person as the Secretary of War may authorize to receive it such sum, not exceeding $300, as the Secretary may determine, for the procuration of such substitute, which sum shall be fixed at a uniform rate by a general order made at the time of ordering a draft for any State or Territory, and thereupon such person so furnishing the substitute or paying the money shall be discharged from further liability under the draft, and any person failing to report after due service of notice, as herein prescribed, without furnishing a substitute or paying the required sum thereof shall be deemed a deserter, and shall be arrested by the provost-marshal and sent to the nearest military post for trial by court-martial unless, upon proper showing that he is not liable to do military duty, the board of enrollment shall relieve him from the draft."

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 19, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, inclosing copy of H. R. bill 1992, for the relief of Mathias Pederson, and asking to be advised under what law was the board of enrollment authorized to accept $300, and if the record shows that the $300 was paid, and to inform you that the same has been referred to the Chief of the Record and Pension Office, War Department, to whose Bureau the subject-matter pertains.

Very respectfully,

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant-General.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 22, 1900.

SIR: In reply to your request for information relative to Mathias Pedersen, drafted man from Wisconsin, I have the honor to inclose a report from the Chief of the Record and Pension Office of this Department.

Very respectfully,

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS,
House of Representatives.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 20, 1900.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 17th instant, received to-day, in which you inclose a bill (H. R. 1992, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mathias Pederson, late of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis., the sum of $300 with interest at 6 per cent from November 27, 1863, which, it is stated, was collected from him by the board of enrollment to furnish a substitute when drafted, and request to be informed of the law under which the board of enrollment was authorized to accept the sum mentioned, and further request to be informed whether the records show that the sum mentioned was paid, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that there is on file in this office a duplicate receipt; dated office of receiver of commutation money, Second district of Wisconsin, Madison, November 27, 1863, signed by E. R. Wadsworth, receiver of commutation money, in which he acknowledges to have received on that date from Mathias Pederson, who was drafted into the service of the United States on the 2d day of November, 1863, from the Second district of the State of Wisconsin, the sum of $300 to obtain, under section 13 of the act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, bearing date of March 3, 1863, discharge from further liability under that draft.

The copy of the bill submitted by you is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Chief, Record and Pension Office.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
House of Representatives.

CASE OF MATHIAS PEDERSEN, DRAFTED MAN FROM WISCONSIN.

The records show that Mathias Peterson was drafted from Spring Valley, Rock County, twelfth subdistrict, Second district of Wisconsin, November 12, 1863, and that he was exempted from personal service under the draft November 27, 1863, by reason of the payment of $300 commutation money, a duplicate receipt for which is as follows:

[Duplicate. No. 79.]

"OFFICE OF RECEIVER OF COMMUTATION MONEY,
"SECOND DISTRICT OF WISCONSIN,
"Madison, November 27, 1863.

"Received at Madison, on the 27th day of November, 1863, from Mathias Pederson, who was drafted into the service of the United States on the 12th day of November, 1863, from the Second Congressional district of the State of Wisconsin, the sum of $300, to obtain, under section 13 of the 'Act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1863, discharge from further liability under that draft.

"E. R. WADSWORTH,
"$300. Receiver of Commutation Money."

Nothing has been found of record in this office to show that he was an alien at the time of his draft, or that he claimed exemption from service under the draft by reason of being an alien.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Chief, Record and Pension Office.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
January 22, 1900.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

STATE OF IOWA, Worth County, ss.:

I, Mathias Pedersen, of the county and State aforesaid, being first duly sworn, upon oath do depose and say: That in May, 1860, as a native of Norway, I landed in America; that on or about November 12, 1863, while yet a subject of Norway, I was drafted into the United States Army from the town of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis.; that on or about November 12, 1863, I paid to the board of enrollment the sum of $300, receipt for which sum has already been filed in connection with H. R. 2062, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session; that on November 12, 1863, this affiant was not a subject of the United States, for that on the 17th day of October, 1864, he declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, in Janesville, Rock County, Wis.; that the sum of $300 was paid to said board of enrollment through ignorance as to his rights and as it was then understood to purchase for him a substitute for service in the United States Army; that full evidence has already been filed, but can not be found.

MATHIAS PEDERSEN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Mathias Pedersen, this 22d day of January, 1900.

[SEAL.]

DOW SIMMONDS,
Notary Public in and for Worth County, Iowa.

STATE OF IOWA, Worth County, ss:

I, Dow Simmonds, being first duly sworn, on oath depose and say that I have been acquainted with Mathias Pederson for twenty-two years last past; that during said period I have never heard of his honesty or integrity being impugned; his reputation for truth and veracity has never been called in question.

Signed this 22d day of January, 1900.

DOW SIMMONDS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me by Dow Simmonds this 22d day of January, 1900.

[SEAL.]

T. L. RINGHAM,
Notary Public in and for Worth County, Iowa.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration various bills and had directed him to report them back to the House with the following recommendations: That the bill H. R. 6909 be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims; that the bill H. R. 909 lie on the table; that the bills H. R. 159, H. R. 2056, and H. R. 1992 do pass.

EASTERN EXTENSION AUSTRALASIA AND CHINA TELEGRAPH COMPANY, LIMITED.

The bill (H. R. 6909) authorizing the Secretary of State to pay the claim of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company, Limited, for compensation on account of expenses incurred in repairing its Manila-Hongkong and Manila-Capiz cables, which were cut by United States forces during the war with Spain, reported back with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

CONFERRING ON THE COURT OF CLAIMS JURISDICTION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN CLAIMS.

The bill (H. R. 909) conferring on the Court of Claims jurisdiction with respect to certain claims reported by the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it do lie on the table, was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

The first bill reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 159) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 736, which is exactly the same as the bill H. R. 159, which has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it do pass, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a similar bill, S. 739, be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the title be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2356) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MATHIAS PEDERSON.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1992) for the relief of Mathias Pederson, with an amendment.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the several votes by which the various actions have been taken on the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MEEKISON, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHACKLEFORD (by request of Mr. LLOYD), for one week, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1763. An act granting a pension to Ella F. Snyder;

H. R. 470. An act granting a pension to Jane Dykes;

H. R. 6700. An act granting an increase of pension to Maria Andrews;

H. R. 2397. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Kauffung;

H. R. 3012. An act granting a pension to Sarah Claggett;

H. R. 6701. An act granting a pension to Serelda McGrew;

H. R. 5139. An act for the relief of Joseph Bacigaluppi and others; and

H. R. 3538. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Ross.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3207. An act approving a revision and adjustment of certain sales of Otoe and Missouria lands in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER submitted to the House the following changes of reference, to which there was no objection:

A bill (S. 1919) granting an increase of pension to Consolacion Victoria Kirkland, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions;

A bill (H. R. 958) to provide for the reimbursement of the governors of the several States for payment of certain pay and expenses of the naval militia, from the Committee on Naval Affairs to the Committee on War Claims; and

The bill (H. R. 1190) granting thirty days' leave of absence with pay to the compositors and pressmen employed in the awards division of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Claims.

LATE HON. EVAN E. SETTLE.

Mr. GAYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, April 21, after the hour of 1 p. m., be devoted to eulogies on the late Representative EVAN E. SETTLE, of the Seventh district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the order will be made.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent to print a speech that I prepared on the Pennsylvania bill that was defeated. It is a purely legal argument, and I ask unanimous consent to publish it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Pennsylvania bill, which was laid upon the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Hezekiah M. Martin against the United States, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1939) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 878); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9634) to set apart certain lands in the Territory of Arizona as a public park, to be known as the Petrified Forest National Park, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 879); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MAHON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4450) for the relief of the legal representatives of George M. Clapp, of the Washington Iron Works, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 877); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4554) granting a pension to Margaret M. Badger, widow of the late Commodore Oscar C. Badger, United States Navy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 880); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7180) granting an increase of pension to Amelia A. Taylor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 881); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6990) granting a pension to Patrick O'Donnell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 882); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9574) granting an increase of pension to Catharine Brown, widow of Frank Brown, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 883); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4992) for the relief of Mrs. Susan Buntine, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 884); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DE GRAFFENREID, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7066) granting an increase of pension to Hiram C. Childress, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 885); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BOREING, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8686) granting a pension to James A. Tulloss, of Rhea County, Tenn., a soldier of the Indian wars, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 886); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. THROPP, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2294) for the relief of J. V. Davis, of Alexandria, Va., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 887); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MUDD: A bill (H. R. 10222) providing for the erection of engine house and the purchase of a chemical engine at Congress Heights, D. C.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10223) for improvement of navy-yard bridge, at Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JOHNSTON: A bill (H. R. 10224) to provide the manner of proving the records of justices of the peace—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DE VRIES: A bill (H. R. 10225) relating to rights of way for canals and ditches used for irrigation and other beneficial uses—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (by request): A bill (H. R. 10226) for the protection of cities and towns in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A bill (H. R. 10227) authorizing the President to appoint an inspector to be attached to the office of the Secretary of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10228) providing for allotments of lands in severalty to the Indians of the La Pointe or Bad River Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10229) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 10230) authorizing the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to cause examination to be made as to the advisability of establishing a biological station and fish-cultural station on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, as to the best place or places for such stations, and making an appropriation for such examination—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BABCOCK: A bill (H. R. 10231) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate in the District of Columbia the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes," approved January 25, 1898—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 10275) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BAKER: A bill (H. R. 10276) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a post-office building at Westminster, Carroll County, Md.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. ROBERTS: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 222) authorizing the Secretary of War to prepare and submit estimates for the improvement of the harbor at Lynn, Mass.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ALDRICH: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 223) proposing an amendment to Article II of the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 224) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of members of the House of Representatives of the United States every three years—to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A resolution (H. Res. 203) directing the Secretary of War to furnish the House of Representatives with any opinion or opinions given the Department by Charles E. Magoon, law officer of the division of insular affairs, relative to the extension of the Constitution to the island of Puerto Rico—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: A resolution (H. Res. 204) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to furnish a list of the names of those officers now on the rolls of the Army and of the Navy who have received letters patent for any invention of arms, of ammunition, or of other war material or of military or naval equipment—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DOLLIVER: A memorial of the Iowa legislature, in regard to the collection of mail in country districts—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LACEY: A concurrent resolution of the legislature of Iowa, in relation to the rural free-delivery service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Resolutions of the legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Pleasant Bay, on the eastern shore of Cape Cod—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts: Resolutions of the legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of the establishment of a harbor of refuge at Pleasant Bay, on the eastern shore of Cape Cod—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTLETT (by request): A bill (H. R. 10232) for the relief of Thomas G. Verdine, of Upson County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 10233) for the relief of Pinkney Persons, of Monroe County, Ga.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BENTON: A bill (H. R. 10234) for relief of Jacob Scott—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10235) granting an increase of pension to George Friend—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELL: A bill (H. R. 10236) granting a pension to Catherine Garcia—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: A bill (H. R. 10237) to place Henry Zell on the retired list of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 10238) granting a pension to Margaret E. Welch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 10239) for the relief of Solomon Geisenberg, Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10240) for the relief of Aquila Bowie, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10241) for the relief of Louis Sommer, Washington County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10242) for the relief of the estate of Alex. Russell, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10243) for the relief of the estate of John Crawford, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10244) for the relief of the estate of William Redden, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10245) for the relief of the estate of Charles Denia, deceased, late of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10246) for the relief of Ann E. Saddler, Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10247) for the relief of the estate of Mary Oliver, deceased, of Warren County, Miss.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FITZPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 10248) for the benefit of the family of William Byrd, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10249) giving military record to John F. Rudd—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10250) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James Stone—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10251) placing the name of J. R. Mann, of Salyersville, Ky., on the muster rolls of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10252) for the relief of Green Clay Gardner, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10253) giving military record to Manfred S. Friend—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10254) removing the charge of desertion from the military record of R. L. Davis—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10255) for the relief of Jake T. Patrick, of Salyersville, Ky.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GILBERT: A bill (H. R. 10256) for the benefit of Mary Conn, administratrix of John Conn—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GRAFF: A bill (H. R. 10257) for the relief of W. D. Catlett—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LONG: A bill (H. R. 10258) granting an increase of pension to Elijah Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10259) for the relief of Harvey Smith—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LITTAUER: A bill (H. R. 10260) granting an increase of pension to Ira C. Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 10261) granting a pension to Josiah H. Buckingham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NAPHEN: A bill (H. R. 10262) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of James McFarlan—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 10263) granting a pension to Abraham A. Croy, of Bloomfield, in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RYAN of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 10264) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Yoder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 10265) confirming certain leases given by the Seneca Nation of Indians to John Quilter—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 10266) for the relief of James D. Lane, of Madison County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10267) for the relief of W. E. Mitchum, of Carroll County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STARK: A bill (H. R. 10268) granting an increase of pension to J. L. McGee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 10269) for the relief of Charles W. Geddes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE: A bill (H. R. 10270) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Flowers and Sarah E. Bridges, of Wayne County, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10271) granting Mary E. Norman a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 10272) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Fox Hill, Elizabeth City County, Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIDGELY: A bill (H. R. 10273) granting a pension to John Cooper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH: A bill (H. R. 10274) granting an increase of pension to Henry Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petitions of Fred Tigge and other citizens of Lakeford; S. P. Hale, G. W. Hazlett, and others of Tripoli, Iowa, favoring the passage of the Grout oleomargarine bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ADAMS: Petition of the Keystone Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill No. 6872, for the printing of the label of the allied printing trades on all publications of the Government—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BABCOCK: Letters of Prof. W. A. Henry and Prof. J. B. Johnson, of the Wisconsin State University, relating to Senate bill No. 2746, to aid certain States to support schools of mines—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, letter of Dr. Jacob Senty, of Prairie du Sac, Wis., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7017, relating to a patent in the interest of dentistry—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of Denison Post, No. 8, of Baltimore, Md., Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at or near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BELL: Petition of W. W. Williamson, of Colorado Springs, Colo., favoring the passage of House bill No. 5457, known as the Spalding bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Antonito, Colo., against the passage of the Loud bill relating to second-class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Abbey and Cimarron, Colo., favoring the passage of the Grout oleomargarine bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRENNER: Petition of the Dayton (Ohio) Turngemeinde, in favor of American mediation between Great Britain and the Transvaal Republic—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petitions of citizens of Freedom, Monroe, Thordike, Augusta, Madison, North Anson, and other towns in the State of Maine, in favor of the Grout bill taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of citizens of Waldo, Me., against the passage of the Loud bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of China, Me., against the sale of liquor in Army canteens, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURLESON: Petition of citizens of Blanco County, Tex., favoring Government distribution of blackleg vaccine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Company D, Third Regiment National Guard of the State of Texas, urging the passage of House bill No. 7936, increasing the appropriation for the State militia—to the Committee on Militia.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of the Temperance Association of Friends, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, favoring the anti-canteen bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of Lingle Post, No. 780, and John A. Bross Post, No. 578, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home for disabled soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Resolutions of the Grand Army of the Republic Posts of Janesville, Racine, Albany, and Darien, Department of Wisconsin, favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Thomas North and others, in the First Congressional district of Wisconsin, favoring the passage of House bill No. 5457, known as the Spalding bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Presbyterian Christian Endeavor Society of Racine, Wis., to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens and at military posts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of Du Lac Grange, No. 72, of Milton Junction, Wis., urging the immediate construction of the Nicaragua Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 70, of Clinton, Wis., indorsing the speech of Gen. Albert D. Shaw at the Seventy-first armory of the National Guard of the State of New York—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DOLLIVER: Petition of L. L. Palmer and others, of Paton, Iowa, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EDDY: Petition of J. J. Greaves and other druggists in the State of Minnesota, for the repeal of the stamp tax on proprietary medicines, perfumery, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the St. Paul (Minn.) Chamber of Commerce, in regard to subsidies—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce, recommending the establishment of a route to the Philippines via Puget Sound—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the passage of House bill No. 887, for the promotion of exhibits in the Philadelphia museums, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of Levi Whiting Post, No. 29, and Colonel Cobham Post, No. 90, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Battery A, of St. Paul, and Company H, Third Regiment, of Olivia, National Guard, State of Minnesota, favoring the passage of House bill No. 7936, increasing the appropriations for arming and equipping the militia of the States and Territories—to the Committee on Militia.

Also, resolution of the Red River Millers' Club, in favor of Senate bill No. 1439, relating to an act to regulate commerce—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Minnesota State Agricultural Society, against a certain bill to promote foreign commerce, etc.—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolutions of the St. Paul Commercial Club, urging the immediate construction of the Nicaragua Canal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Ramsey County (Minn.) Medical Society, in favor of the establishment of homes or colonies for lepers—to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Also, petition of the United Labor League of Weston, Pa., and International Association of Machinists, favoring the passage of House bill No. 6882, relating to hours of labor on public works, and House bill No. 5450, for the protection of free labor against prison labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of General George W. Meade Post, No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the passage of a bill to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of Hamilton Post, No. 20, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Grand Army of the Republic, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LACEY: Petitions of Ottumwa Camp and New Sharon Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, to amend the Loud bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LANE: Resolution of Post No. 8, of Iowa City, Iowa, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of House bill No. 7094—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LITTLE: Paper to accompany House bill for the relief of Isaac W. Morse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LYBRAND: Resolution of Coshocton (Ohio) Subordinate Association, No. 19, of the Lithographers' International Protective and Beneficial Association of the United States and Canada, favoring House bill No. 6872, to print the label of the Allied Printing Trades on publications of the Government—to the Committee on Printing.

Also, petitions of Livingston Post, No. 425, and John Falk Post, No. 745, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, in favor of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at or near Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MANN: Petitions of druggists of Chicago, Ill., and others, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. NEEDHAM: Resolution of the San Diego (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, urging the passage of House bill No. 1439, amending the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the San Diego (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, for the passage of House bill No. 7097, providing for a reorganization of the consular service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. NORTON of Ohio: Petition of E. B. Hubbard and other druggists of Tiffin, Ohio, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers to accompany House bill No. 7798, for the relief of Denton Whips—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Ohio Association of Local Fire Insurance Agents, urging the passage of House bill No. 6252, relating to the collection of tax on fire-insurance policies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Manville Moore Post, No. 525, of Fremont, Ohio, and Moses Martin Post, No. 649, of Huron, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, in support of House bill No. 7094, to establish a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of Subordinate Association No. 19, Lithographers' International Association, Coshocton, Ohio, to print the label of the Allied Printing Trades on publications of the Government—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. ROBERTS: Petition of William B. Eaton Post, No. 199, Grand Army of the Republic, of Revere, Mass., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7094—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska: Petition of citizens of Niobrara, Nebr., for an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of improving the Missouri River at and below the mouth of the Niobrara River, etc.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Petition of Grand Army of the Republic post at Mystic, Conn., favoring the establishment of a Branch Soldiers' Home at Johnson City, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STARK: Petition of L. B. Martin and 54 others, of Crete, Nebr., favoring the enactment of a clause in the Hawaiian constitution forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and a prohibition of gambling and the opium trade—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, petition of W. A. Carpenter and other citizens of York, Nebr., favoring the passage of House bill No. 3717, amending the oleomargarine law—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Resolution of the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce, asking for a United States supervising inspector of steam vessels at St. Paul—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of J. J. Roseman, of St. Paul, Minn., favoring the anti-canteen bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Company E, Fourth Infantry National Guard of State of Minnesota, in favor of House bill No. 7936, making an increase in the appropriation for arming and equipping the militia of the States and Territories—to the Committee on Militia.

By Mr. WACHTER: Affidavit to accompany House bill No. 8190, for the relief of Henry Miller—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE: Petition of J. W. Reynolds and others, of Texas, and John W. Fox and 36 others, of Massachusetts, against the crime of lynching and mob violence—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mary E. Norman, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WISE: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of P. F. Eagan—to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 31, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 739) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens of South Minnewaukon Township, in the county of Ramsey, N. Dak., declaring in favor of the Boers in South Africa, against a tariff as to Puerto Rico, against the ship-subsidy bill, and against the war in the Philippines. I ask that the resolutions, which can not be sent to any particular committee, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTH MINNEWAUKAN TOWNSHIP, N. DAK., March 13, 1900.

To the Senators and Representative of North Dakota in Congress:

The residents of South Minnewaukan Township in mass meeting assembled. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we sympathize with the brave and valiant Boers in the manly struggle for freedom and independence, and hereby declare that the people of South Africa and the Orange Free State are and of right ought to be free and independent: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we hereby request our Senators and Representative in Congress to take such active measures as shall insure immediate mediation by the President of these United States as shall lead to a speedy termination of the unholy and unjust war now waged by England in an unjust cause—a war of greed and conquest.

Resolved, That we are in favor of such treatment being accorded to the people of Puerto Rico as is now accorded to the peoples of every State in the Union; that no discriminating tariff duties should be imposed upon any of their products entering into competition with like products of the United States. We favor executing honorably every pledge or promise that may have been made to the peoples of Puerto Rico.

Resolved, That we are opposed to the useless shedding of the blood of American soldiers in the war of conquest against the Philippines.

Resolved, That the peoples of the Western States are producers and have to depend on foreign markets for fixed prices and sale of their products; therefore we are opposed to all forms of tariff protection that tends to foster trusts and combinations of aggregated capital which compels consumers to pay exorbitant prices for such protected commodities.

Resolved, That we favor ship subsidy, but are opposed to the "Hanna-Payne bill" now under consideration; if special favors must be granted, let such favoritism be extended toward ships on the Pacific, not on the Atlantic Ocean.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representative of North Dakota in Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., and the Business Men's League of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1378) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, and others, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KENNEY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3775) granting an increase of pension to Robert Boston, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6885) granting an increase of pension to Horace B. Durant, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

JOHN H. STREETER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3797) granting an increase of pension to John H. Streeter, to report it without amendment, and as this is a bill proposing to give relief to a very sick soldier, I ask immediate consideration for it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John H. Streeter, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 3925) for the relief of the estate of Caswell B. Derrick, deceased;

A bill (S. 3926) for the relief of the estate of Bradford Hambrick, deceased;

A bill (S. 3927) for the relief of the estate of James Campbell, deceased; and

A bill (S. 3928) for the relief of the estate of A. J. Underwood, deceased.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3929) for the relief of Sidney J. Wetherell, assignee of A. V. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 3930) to increase the salary of the United States marshal for the southern district of Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3931) to correct the military record of Forrest C. Briggs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3932) to provide compensation for injuries received by George E. Giles, of Watertown, Wis., at the Ford's Theater disaster, which occurred June 9, 1893; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 3933) for the protection of cities and towns in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3934) to provide for the sale of isolated and disconnected tracts or parcels of the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3935) granting an increase of pension to James Ryan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHOUP introduced a bill (S. 3936) for the relief of Caroline V. English; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3937) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate, in the District of Columbia, the disposal of certain refuse, and for other purposes," approved January 25, 1898; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 3938) reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon, as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, timber, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, and so forth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SULLIVAN introduced a bill (S. 3939) for the relief of the estate of Mary P. Govan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3940) for the relief of Sally G. Billups; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3941) granting an increase of pension to John Hutchins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3942) for increasing the efficiency of the Signal Corps of the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO PUERTO RICAN BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I submit a concurrent resolution, which is simply to correct an error in the enrollment of an appropriation bill, and I ask for its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 7941, "An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901," the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to omit the word "Ottawa," in line 22, page 11, of the engrossed bill.

READJUSTED SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN IOWA.

Mr. GEAR submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of Iowa between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled "Ebenezer H. Swinney and others vs. The United States, No. 18213," each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884, and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers and in circular form No. 1223, the text of each of which, under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others vs. The United States, No. 16345.

INSULAR SURVEYS.

Mr. FOSTER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to submit to the Senate of the United States a report stating what surveys the Navy Department has made in the islands recently acquired by the United States.

READJUSTED SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of Illinois between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled "Albert Dickerson and others vs. The United States, No. 17058," each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884, and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers, and in circular form No. 1223, the text of each of which, under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others vs. The United States, No. 16345.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the bill (S. 3663) authorizing and requiring the Metropolitan Railroad Company to extend its lines on old Sixteenth street be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTES ON TERRITORIAL EXPANSION BY CARMAN F. RANDOLPH.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to have published as a miscellaneous document a legal argument made by Mr. Carman F. Randolph, of the New York bar, citing the authorities very fully on the subject of the legal status of our new possessions. It is an argument that was made for the benefit of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to have printed as a document the argument of Mr. Randolph touching——

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean by saying that it was made for the benefit of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. ALLEN. If the Secretary will be kind enough to read the title, the Senator will see. I do not remember the exact title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Notes on the law of territorial expansion, with especial reference to the Philippines, submitted to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate of the United States March 16, 1900, by Carman F. Randolph, of the New York bar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the paper as a document?

Mr. McCOMAS. I trust that may not be done. We have many arguments in respect to that matter, and it might be very well to have them brought together and printed in a collection. I believe that this argument, which I have read——

Mr. ALLEN. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think that the request had better go over; and if arguments before committees are to be thus printed, I should like to see a collection, including this one with others that are more cogent.

Mr. ALLEN. I will take back the paper and put it in one of my speeches, and then the Senator will have the benefit of it.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator wishes to do that, very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know but that the paper ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary if it was prepared for that purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw it. The Senator from Maryland seems to be afraid of that legal question.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have no objection to having it printed as a part of a collection.

Mr. ALLEN. No; of course you want to suppress it. That is the purpose of sending it to a committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have read it myself, and there are several other arguments that I would like to see printed with it if it is to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN. If it has the approval of the distinguished legal judgment of the Senator from Maryland it ought to be printed without any objection.

Mr. CULLOM. It does not have his approval, as I understand it.

SCHOOL LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3421) to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the purposes of education of colored students at Montgomery, Ala.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the governor of the State of Alabama to select, out of the unoccupied and uninhabited lands of the United States, not held for public purposes, within the State, 25,000 acres of land, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall forthwith, upon receipt of the certificate, issue to the State of Alabama patents for the lands. But the proceeds of the lands, when sold or leased, shall forever remain a fund for the use of the State normal school for colored students at Montgomery, Ala.

It also authorizes the governor of Alabama to select, out of the unoccupied and uninhabited lands of the United States, not held for public purposes, within the State, 25,000 acres of land, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall forthwith, upon receipt of the certificate, issue to the State patents for the lands. But the proceeds of the lands, when sold or leased, shall forever remain a fund for the use of the State normal college at Troy, Ala.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the use of the State normal school for colored students at Montgomery, Ala., and of the State normal college at Troy, Ala."

W. T. SCOTT AND OTHERS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3554) for the relief of W. T. Scott and others.

